It is due to you that I give a short report of my travels and labors. I think I closed my last when at Alden. We had a good meeting there. The brethren and sisters seemed much refreshed and the prospect is that a number will soon become obedient to the faith. From there we went to Clarksville where we had another good meeting. Held over two Sundays. Here we baptized one willing soul into the all-prevailing name of Jesus the Anointed for the remission of sins; there are a number more that will undoubtedly obey soon. I went to Spring Lake and held one meeting; found a number of brethren there that seemed to be somewhat interested in the truth. I left them with a promise to return and hold a meeting, which I will do, nothing preventing.— We [illegible] went to the Phorna school house. Held meeting Saturday night and Sunday. This is a new place but there seemed to be quite an interest manifested to understand the truth. I anticipate returning to this town also to hold meetings some time in the future. The next place was Bristow. Here we met Brother and Sister Benage, who embraced the truth thirty-two years ago and are still firm in the faith; we had a blessed good time with them. We held but one meeting owing to the house being occupied by others. Here we met a number of warm friends who pressed me hard to return in the near future and hold a meeting which I promised to do.

Then I returned to Clarksville; and here let me say for the Clarksville brethren that they are awake to the cause of truth, holding their prayer and social meetings every Wednesday evening and are as much devoted as any people I have met; the majority of them also maintain family worship which we call a good mark of devotion. From here we made our way to conference and was received into the hospitality of Brother and Sister Berry where we remained until Monday being held there by rain from Thursday evening. We then started on our way for the conference reaching the place about 7:00 p. m. Monday. Here we met a host of brethren and sisters most of whom had been on the ground since Friday evening and had stood it through all the rain and seemed to be in good spirits thanking God for the good meetings they had had since they came together. Meeting soon commenced and we needed no one to tell us it was good; every heart seemed to be filled to overflowing with love to God and praises for his goodness and blessings. I don't wish to give a report of the meeting yet I will say that it continued to be good to its close and all felt that it was good to be there.

I started to give a report of my labors and as we have reached the end of the conference year I will give a synopsis of what was done. The time spent for the conference about eight months, during which time I have baptized fourteen persons into the all-saving name of the anointed One; organized five churches; taken subscription and turned it over to treasurer to the amount of $27.50 for the present year, and as I have been appointed evangelist again for the coming year I wish to say to loved ones scattered abroad that I am your servant and any one wishing my labor or wishing to communicate with me can do so by writing to me at Clarksville, Butler Co., Iowa, in care of Hattie Campbell, and it will receive due attention. Any wishing meetings will please write to me stating about what time you desire a meeting so that I can make arrangements to accommodate you when you want it. I hope that the brethren will take notice and give me their prayers and their sympathies, and pray that we may be able to accomplish much more good this year than last, and to God's name be all the glory through Jesus Christ, world without end, amen.

T. J. WHITESITT.

We are just home from our Annual Conference which was held at Ferguson, in Marshall Co., and will say to all who are interested that the result of labor, and effort during this one year since our organization far exceeds our expectations. Years ago we had a so-called conference here in Iowa and an Evangelist was sent out to preach, but as it was not a thoroughly organized effort, it resulted in a few paying all the money, and the Evangelist doing a vast amount of travelling through the wilds of the then new country, accomplishing much good for little pay, and being compelled to give it up. Since then the work has gone down with the interest, while the scattered faithful ones stood firm and our preachers labored as best they could unaided, and still the cause hardly held its own. But one year ago the Lord put it into the heart of Brother Eychaner to issue a call to the members of the body to come together and enter upon a united effort for the promotion of the gospel of the kingdom of God in this state; quite a number responded and ten days were spent together in prayer, Bible study, talking together of the things that concern our salvation, and devising plans for a thoroughly organized system of work upon a strictly business basis. About one hundred dollars was raised in money and pledges, and a man was sent out to preach the word, hunt up the scattered ones, and get them into united and sympathetic working order. Well the year has passed and again we have met in conference for [illegible] ten days of sweet communion, [illegible] up our gains. We find that our Evangelist has labored hard, and faithfully, visiting [illegible] night and visiting the people in their homes by day; organized churches, taken subscriptions for the Evangelist fund and laid the foundation [illegible] future work; in fact broken [illegible] ground and sowed the seed for a grand crop for future ingathering. And the people have responded with sufficient means to pay for this labor. Bro. Eychaner has also of his own free will labored to the same end; preaching constantly and aiding in organizing churches and raising funds, thus securing the most liberal offer of Bro. Work to aid in spreading the truth. And now we start upon another year big with promise of success; two Evangelists are employed to labor in the State this year instead of one, Bro. A. J. Eychaner, and T. J. Whitsitt, and as an increase over the amount we started with last year we now have in the Evangelist fund three hundred and twenty-nine dollars and ten cents in money, and seventy-six dollars and fifty cents in subscriptions, in all $405.60 to commence the work of this year.

The Conference decided to become auxiliary to, and work in harmony with the National Conference and the plan of raising money for that purpose, as recommended by that body, was recommended for adoption to the churches, and members of the body, and Bro. John Staffa of Irving was appointed delegate at large from Iowa to the next National Conference.

In regard to our meeting I will say, we had a blessed season indeed; many topics of vital importance were Scripturally considered in the Bible meetings, precious seasons of social conference were enjoyed, and the themes of personal holiness, and spiritual growth were ever prominent (as it also was in both the other meetings that were held during the year, and the result of which was to lead very many to a higher plane of spirituality, and the putting away of tobacco and other carnal practices) the attendance and interest were good, increasing to the last, and as a direct result Bro's. Myers and Eychaner will go back there in two weeks to administer baptism to a number who were convinced of the truth.

There were four preaching brethren in attendance, G. M. Myers, A. J. Eychaner, E. A. Marsh and T. J. Whitesitt who preached from time to time. Indeed we have had a good meeting, and we who gathered there feel grateful for the privilege of personal acquaintance with the dear good brothers and sisters living there near Ferguson, and shall ever remember their loving kindness to us. And now we would say to the members of the household of faith scattered throughout the State, We recommend this work to you, hoping you will all feel encouraged to make it your own personally, realizing that your committee can work no farther than you keep the means in their hands, so we pray you give us your sympathy and support. Send in your subscriptions to either A. J. Eychaner, Belle Plaine, who is the Secretary, or Alex Williams, Laurel, Iowa, who is the Treasurer, and help to keep both these Evangelists at work all the year, for "the reapers are few, and the harvest is great." Bro. Whitesitt started at once on his work in Polk, Co., and brother Eychaner is ready to respond to any calls for his services. The plan and conditions of work are the same as the last year.

And now let us all join in earnest prayer to the Father for his blessing upon our efforts fully realizing that the time is short, and what we do must be done quickly. And while we pray "thy kingdom come" let us all labor to that end, and now may the sweet peace of God abide with all his dear people is my prayer.

LIBBIE PALMER.

A dispatch from the city of Mexico says: "News has been received here of a discovery of great archæological importance in the State of Chiapas, near the ruins of Palenque, being nothing less than a large city hidden in the depths of the forests. Some buildings are five stories high and in a good state of preservation. There is a well-paved road, several miles in length, still perceivable in the midst of a tropical forest. Very few particulars have reached here, but the report comes from good sources. Palenque is said to be a mere village in comparison with this lost city of prehistoric times."

ISRAEL, JERUSALEM, PALESTINE.
No. 5.

"Jerusalem," with its twenty-five to thirty thousand Jewish inhabitants, is a large and, though difficult, encouraging field for work, especially in our days, when the Jews seem to be if not actually well disposed towards Christianity, at least more accessible. It is one of the signs of the times that even in this city, the stronghold of Judaism and fanaticism, they begin to shake off the chains of Rabbinism which have enslaved them for some centuries. A spirit of freedom, of thought and of searching after the truth, is everywhere perceptible. Tracts are eagerly read, and everywhere asked for. The New Testament is diligently studied. And had it not been for fear of their Rabbis, upon whom the majority of the Jews here are dependent, (the Chaluka, or distribution of money sent by their European brethren, having to pass through the hands of their Rabbis), many more Jews would have come forward. They dare not have intercourse with the Missionary, or receive him into their houses, but gladly accept the offered tracts, and promise to read them secretly. A great number of Jews, however, who gain their livelihood by various trades, and consequently are not so much under the direct influence of their spiritual advisers, readily converse with us, receive us in their houses, and in many instances eagerly listen to the glad tidings of the Messiah. The New Testament is no longer a sealed book to them. Many are well acquainted with its contents, unconsciously imbibe its teaching, and even adopt its phraseology. The other day I called upon a Spanish Jew, and while conversing with him I noticed that he often made use of New Testament expressions, and even whole sentences without knowing it. On further inquiry, I found that he had been an in-patient in our hospital for some time, where he diligently studied the New Testament.

"On the other hand, infidelity seems to be rapidly spreading, even in these remote regions. The continual increase of foreign Jews from different parts of Europe—where the authority [illegible] and along with it Juda[illegible] [illegible]ised— [illegible] [illegible]ence [illegible]; At [illegible] more [illegible] into [illegible] this [illegible] de of [illegible] re- [illegible] humanly speaking, it is more difficult to convince a Jew of the truth of Christianity who has lost faith in his religion, than one who still keeps it up. Through the kindness of Miss Barlee and Mr. Coral, I was introduced to many Jewish shops and houses. I also arranged with the doctors to kindly let me accompany them on their visits to their patients. This I found the best mode of introduction into many a Jewish house, which would otherwise have been inaccessible. With the exception of the early morning services, and those days on which I was at the Depot to receive Jews there, the greater part of my forenoon was occupied with visiting Jews in their houses, or speaking to them in the streets.—J. F. Segall, in Jewish Intelligence.

ON A MISSION TO THE LAND OF MY FATHERS.

Having spent several hours visiting Jews, my aged friend, a Rabbi from Kovno, Russia, asked me if I would go with him to the wailing place to mourn over the desolation of Jerusalem, and pray for Israel's restoration to her former glory. "I will go with you," I replied, "and pray very earnestly that God may hasten the day when Judah will return to the Lord." Being Friday afternoon, the time when many Jews assemble for prayer at the wall of the ancient temple, I joined the company of Israelites. It was, indeed, a most memorable and painful sight. Here were Jews from among all nations, in their peculiar Oriental costumes, some dressed also in the Talith (praying garments). Their attitude and prayers were most heartrending. As loud as they possibly could they read the 22nd Psalm. The wall before which the assembly prayed, and against which their heads reposed, is very thick and high. Its length is 158ft., and it is 60ft. in height. We counted over twenty rows of stones, some 20ft. long and 5ft. thick. The lamentations here were most pathetic. Women, dressed in white, with great earnestness cried aloud. Their shrieks were appalling as they repeated, over and over again, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me? Why art Thou so far from helping me, and from the words of my roaring? O my God, I cry in the day-time, but Thou hearest not; and in the night-season, and am not silent." The men also were weeping as if in most terrible grief, and rehearsed psalms, litanies and prayers for the dead. Most of these earnestly pressed their lips against the stones and kissed them. Some of these stones are in some parts smooth through such passionate kissing. Two holes are seen, which my friend pointed out. He also informed me of the belief of the mourners that these holes led to the holy of Holies, and many offer their heart-piercing prayers through these holes, believing that prayers offered in them must go direct to God. Through these two holes, the prayers offered by Jews all over the world must pass. How touching it was to see some of the stones wet with tears.

As I listened to their pathetic prayers I remembered what the rabbins have said in the Talmud—that "Since the destruction of the Temple, the gates of prayer have been closed, and only the gates of tears are open."

We also thought of another saying of the Rabbins: "He that mourns over Jerusalem shall see it in its joy, and he that does not mourn over Jerusalem shall not see it in its joy." Who can listen to their prayers and litanies without being filled with compassion towards the afflicted race. The rabbi in sad tones repeated:—

For the place that lies desolate. We sit in solitude and mourn.
For the place that is destroyed. We sit in solitude and mourn.
For the walls that are overthrown. We sit in solitude and mourn.
For the majesty that is departed. We sit in solitude and mourn.
For our great men that lie dead. We sit in solitude and mourn.
For the precious stones that are buried. We sit in solitude and mourn.
For the priests who have stumbled. We sit in solitude and mourn.
For our kings who have despised him. We sit in solitude and mourn.

The most touching and heartrending wailing over Jerusalem is to be witnessed in the homes of the pious Jews. At midnight they wrap themselves in their prayer garments, put ashes on their heads, and prostrate themselves on the ground. Then in melancholy tones they rehearse:—

A voice of woe from Judah's hoary tower,
A voice of wail from Zion's sainted hill;
Alas! my diadem and queenly dower,
Thy youthful honors I remember still.
Dark is to me the solitary bower
Who did of old a throne of splendor fill.

I was surnamed Jehovah's fairest bride;
But now am forced, forlorn and disconsolate,
His heavy wrath and vengeance to abide;
My joys are flown, my heart is desolate.
Come weep, ye daughters, at my faltering side;
For no one draweth near my sorrows to abate.

Degraded from peerless eminence,
Victim of pride and wanton vanity—
My beating heart in trembling violence
Strikes at her cage of hopeless misery.
Judah laments in tearful penitence,
A widow mourning in captivity.

I was in Solyma a radiant queen,
A golden cloud in the mount of God;
But now by infidels despoiled, I ween,
No poorer pilgrim o'er the desert trod.
Wrenched from the bosom all my babes have been,
The murdered elders steeped the spoil in blood.

Doth no one lay my wretchedness at heart?
And no one check the swiftly rolling tear?
And no one soothe the soul-empiercing smart?
And no one say, "The heathen shall not dare
Call him my husband?" Oh, the poisoned dart,
The cruel mockings I am bound to bear!

Father of Mercies, come return with grace,
To Zion's dwellings beautiful again.
Let Israel's eye behold Thy dwelling place
Restored; then list the hallelujah's strain.
The hymning voices of a ransomed race,
Greeting the rising wall of that eternal fane.

After this several psalms are read and prayers offered. When rising from the ground, they say, "Shake thyself from the dust: arise and sit down, O Jerusalem. Loose thyself from the bands of thy neck, O captive daughter of Zion." The most remarkable prayer that the Jews offer on these occasions is most interesting. It no doubt has reference to Isaiah vii. 14:—

In mercy, Lord, Thy people's prayer attend:
Grant his desire to mourning Israel.
O shield of Abraham, our Redeemer send,
And call His glorious name Immanuel.

The rabbi having ended his devotions I asked him several questions about the Redeemer for whose coming he prayed. I reminded him that the Redeemer has already come whose name is Immanuel, and that he will come again to gather to himself all who have believe, that believers shall reign with him, and that glorious will be the state of all who now trust him. I found the great difficulty with the rabbi was the doctrine of the Trinity. That Christ should be the Son of God was incomprehensible to him. I reminded him of predictions that Messiah must be the Redeemer, and that a person holding such an office must be Divine. We also read together Psalm ii. 7-12; lxxii. 17. We had an earnest and warm discussion upon Prov. xxx. 4. "Who hath ascended up into heaven, or descended? Who hath gathered the wind in his fists? Who hath bound the waters in a garment? Who hath established all the ends of the earth? What is his name? and what is his Son's name, if thou canst tell?" We spent several hours conversing about redeeming love, and as I left the house I presented him with some Hebrew tracts, which I pray may be a means of blessing to him.

Having left this Jewish house I took a walk in the valley of Jehoshaphat.

Here I met with a young man, who was holding in his hand a bag containing his Talith and phylacteries. Having greeted one another with the Hebrew shalom alechem (Peace be unto you), I inquired where he was going to. He answered, to the great synagogue to pray. I offered to go with him, and he seemed willing to accept my company. We at once entered into a warm conversation about Christianity. "Christians," he said, "are idolators. They pray to Jesus, the Nazarene." "Perfectly true," I said, "Christians pray to Jesus, but I deny that praying to him constitutes idolatry." I asked him to produce his prayer-book, and pointed out to him a prayer therein, where the Jews, alas! in their ignorance, offer a solemn prayer to Jesus, the Prince of the Presence of God, to be Mediator between Israel and God. He read the passage over again. "But this is not Jesus," he said, "but Jehoshuah." I reminded him that Jesus is only the Greek translation of the Hebrew name Jehoshuah. He seemed perplexed; and felt somewhat defeated with his own weapon. He then asked me if I would see him later in the day, which promise I was glad to fulfil. I also presented him with a Hebrew New Testament. We then took a walk to Aceldama. There we sat down, and read the 22nd Psalm. I asked him what these words meant: —"The assembly of the wicked have inclosed me: they pierced my hands and my feet. I may tell all my bones: they look and stare upon me. They part my garments among them, and cast lots upon my vesture." His reply was that these words referred to the affections of the psalmist, Jeremiah, and of the nation of Israel. I pointed out to him that those words could not possibly apply to those he mentioned. I then read to him Matt. xxvii., and pointed him to the bleeding Savior, in whom the above words were fulfilled; and also Isaiah liii.

It is often said Jews live on making money and that they worship Mammon. Although, alas! this is too true of many in Europe, the charge certainly cannot be brought against them in Palestine. Most of the Jewish inhabitants in the Holy Land are very poor. Many of them have left Europe, where they have lived in comfort and luxury, and given up all for the sake of spending the remainder of their lives in prayer and fasting. Many Jews fast regularly on Mondays and Thursdays. Some appoint for themselves other special fast days, which they spend in devotion and in mortifying the flesh, believing that this will be accepted as an atonement for their sins. Besides these special days of fasting, the Jewish inhabitants in Palestine observe the regular fast days, such as the Fast of Gedaliah, in memory of the dreadful murder recorded in 2 Kings xxv. 25. The Fast commemorating the fall of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar is kept by all as a day of sorrow and lamentation. They also keep the Fast of Esther in memory of the troubles endured as described in the Book of Esther. The 25th of June is kept as a day of fasting, since that day Moses destroyed the tables of the law, and also on that day Antiochus Epiphanes burnt the book of the law, and placed an image in the sanctuary of the Most High. Beholding the thousands of Israelites in Jerusalem, and all over Palestine, and struck with their poverty, we inquire—How can they live? And the answer is only by the halukah (alms) sent to them by their co-religionists in Europe. The lives of many are, therefore, wretched; widows, and fatherless, alas! often suffer starvation, and the cries of the hungry are constantly heard. What wonderful opportunities are there consequently for the benevolent disciples of Christ to go about doing good. After walking about several hours in the morning, we again retired to the Mount of Olives. Here we were interested in watching a shepherd go before his flock, and the sheep following him. Our dragoman conversed with the shepherd for some little time, and we parted. Late in the afternoon, when walking in the Valley of Hinnom, we [illegible]ably surprised to meet with the same shepherd, but this time without his flock. We asked him why he still rambled about, seeing that he must surely have been weary, having been with his flock all the day. He answered that he was looking about, if possible to take his flock to different pastures on the morrow. We could not help admiring the kind-hearted thoughtfulness of the shepherd for his flock. We thought of Psalm xxiii. 1. We also thought of the Shepherd of Israel, who never slumbers nor sleeps. And as we thought of the Shepherd of our souls, we delightfully sang:—

"Jesus, my Shepherd, Brother, Friend,
My Prophet, Priest, and King;
My way, my Life, my Truth, my End,
Accept the praise I bring."

—Isaac Levinsohn, in Jewish Herald.

PROPHECIES MISUNDERSTOOD.

Early education led me to look with prejudice, not to say with contempt, upon all theories of Second Adventism. I imbibed the notion, from Sunday-school and pulpit and literature, that the incarnation and death of Christ was the last and supreme manifestation of God to men; that the Gospel was the ultimate and final message of God to men; that the conversion of the world and the redemption of mankind were going steadily and surely, though very slowly, on from the birth of Christ as the starting-point, and under the influence of Christian ministration to their consummation. The notion that the gospel dispensation was preparatory to another as the Old Testament had been preparatory to the gospel; that the manifestation of God in the man Jesus Christ was also preparatory to another manifestation of God in kingly and triumphant form, as the manifestation of God in the law and the prophets had been preparatory to his manifestation in his Son, never dawned upon, or, at least, never took lodgment in any mind. The doctrine of a Second Coming was interwoven in my thought with vague impressions of Millerism, Second Advent camp-meetings, prophecies of days and years when the advent should take place, interpretations of the mystic prophecies of the Books of Daniel and Revelation, mechanical conceptions of a physical king with his throne and his courtiers in Jerusalem, and his administration proceeding therefrom; for all of which I had no respect then, for all of which I have greater respect the older I grow.

In this spirit I arrived, in a course of systematic and careful study of the New Testament, at the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew, of which this thirteenth chapter of Mark is a parallel report. Previous utterances of Christ had already somewhat shaken my preconceived theories. I had not gone far in the careful study of this chapter before I reached the conclusion that the interpretations of those commentators who deny the Second Coming were inconsistent with a reverent, unprejudiced, and impartial acceptance of Christ's own words. The principles adopted by this interpretation, if applied to other portions of Scripture, will make the Bible mean anything which the Bible student desires it to mean. The whole chapter is reduced to a mere prophecy of the destruction of Jerusalem, and the admonition with which Christ closes his discourse: "What I say unto you I say to all, Watch," is necessarily absolutely eliminated from it, since no Christian since the close of the first century has had occasion to watch for that destruction. The sublime description of earth's dying days is robbed of all its sublimity. "The sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light," is made to mean, those shall be dark days; "the stars shall fall from heaven and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken" is interpreted, the great empires of the world shall undergo disturbances; the appearing of the sign of the Son of Man in heaven is reduced to a declaration that the sign shall appear testifying that the Son of Man is in heaven; the mourning of all the tribes of earth is supposed to be fulfilled in the sorrow experienced by the inhabitants of Palestine at the appearance of the army of Titus; the sending of the angels with the sound of the trumpet becomes, messengers shall call into the Church the true disciples of Christ; and "from one end of heaven to the other" is reduced to, from Dan to Beersheba. I certainly do not mean to impugn the honesty of other interpreters in declaring that this principle of interpretation is not an honest one, and is the product of that vicious but alas, only too common endeavor not to read in the Scripture what it contains, but to read into the Scripture what the reader desires to find there.

In further pursuing this study I found, from parallel passages in the writings of the Apostles, borrowing Christ's phraseology here, in describing pictorially the last judgment, that they who heard him most distinctly understood him to refer to a future coming in pomp and power. I found that Christ himself employed almost identical language elsewhere under circumstances which forbade all doubt as to his meaning. I found the interpretation put upon this chapter, as the prophecy of the destruction of Jerusalem, unfulfilled by the events; the inhabitants of Palestine did not see in that destruction a sign that the Son of Man was in heaven, but on the other hand, remain unbelievers to this day. Christ did not gather his people into one Church at that destruction; on the contrary, they were scattered to the four winds by the persecutions which followed.

Do not think, he says in substance, that the end of Jerusalem is the end of the world. Before that end of the world, before I come to take possession of my kingdom, there must be a long period of deceit, false messiahs arising, wars and rumors of wars, famines and pestilences and earthquakes in divers places. These are but the beginning of that travail out of which the kingdom of God is to be born. This world-anguish is itself a prophecy of a birth of a kingdom of righteousness, of joy, and of peace (verses 4-8). The Church itself shall share in this labor-pain.

Four successive eras of trouble must it pass through. The Gentiles shall hate it, and persecute it; the Romans shall burn its Bibles, imprison its disciples, or send them to the mines, or cast them to the wild beasts, or impale them upon lofty poles, and pour oil or tar upon them, and light them, to be torches for the malignant onlookers. Following this, Christians shall fall into enmities one with another. They shall hate one another, and betray one another to death. The persecutions by the Roman Catholic Christian of his Protestant Christian brethren shall transcend the persecutions of Christians by the heathen Gentiles; the fire and sword of Alva, the massacre of St. Bartholomew, the inquisition of Spain, shall exceed the cruelties of a Nero, a Caligula, a Diocletian. The age of persecution and internal conflict shall be followed by an age of scepticism and false doctrine. False teachers shall rise in the Church itself, who, bearing the name of Christ, shall deny the truth of Christianity. The enemies of Christian truth shall be born within the Christian Church—a Strauss, a Baur, a Kuenen. Every tenet of Christian faith—the inspiration of the Scriptures, the incarnation of the Son of God, the forgiveness of sins, the life everlasting, the living communion of God with his saints shall be questioned or denied by teachers of religion wearing Christian vestments, and preaching from Christian pulpits. Last, and worst of all, iniquities shall abound, faith shall grow dim, love shall grow cold, the lines of demarcation between the Church and the world shall seemingly be obliterated, and self-indulgent luxury shall enervate, and selfishness and greed shall corrupt the Church of God itself.

In each and every experience they are to bear witness to God's truth, as the Spirit of God shall give them utterance. When the signs of the end of Jerusalem and its Temple draw near, even then they are not to think that the Messiah is coming. They are not to wait in the beleagued city, expectant for him. For the Temple must fall, and Jerusalem be destroyed, and a new faith must be built up out of the ruins and remnant of the old religion, before the fulness of the time will have come. Not till after that tribulation—how long after no man know, not the angels, nor even as yet Son of Man—will be the dawning of the great and terrible day of the Lord.

In this paper I propose to draw certain doctrinal and spiritual conclusions which seem to me to be warranted.

Christ is coming again. The manifestation of God in humiliation in the incarnation is not the final and consummate manifestation. The disclosure of God to his children by his spiritual communion with them is not the consummate and final disclosure. Paul looked and waited for the coming of his Lord. Peter warned his readers not to be deceived by scoffers asking, Where is the promise of his coming? John bade the children of God purify themselves by the hope that when he shall appear his children shall be like him. James exhorted the disheartened and the discouraged to be patient unto this coming of the Lord. As they understood him we may safely understand him. The first coming of Christ was the spring-time in the divine seasons; the dispensation of the Spirit is the rich and fruitful summer; there awaits our hope the ripened and mellow autumn.

When he comes it will be in such guise that no one can question or can doubt. It will be visibly and palpably. He will come as the flood came; he will come as the lightning comes. As the king comes with the trumpeters that precede him, so will he come, and his advent will be proclaimed and emblazoned far and wide. Now he is incognito. Only the spiritual sense, only love and faith, peer beneath his peasant garb and behold a King. Only now and then in his earthly life does his divinity flash forth so that the temple traders flee from the fire of his eyes, and the soldiers fall to the ground when he comes out from the garden to surrender himself to them. Then Caiaphas and Pilate and the centurion, and the guard, and the soldiers shall recognize him, as well as Peter, and James, and John. All the tribes of the earth shall mourn, seeing him, and the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every free man shall hide themselves, and call on the mountains and the rocks to hide them from the face of him that sitteth on the throne.

His coming will be unexpected. Men will be buying and selling, marrying, and giving in marriage; all the industrial and social life of the world will be going on, and into the midst of it he will break in the suddenness of his glory upon the astonished world. It is true that the early disciples erred by thinking it must come in their own time, but we are in danger of erring by thinking that it cannot come in our time. They anticipated; we procrastinate.

And if we are humble we shall not pass by, as though it concerned us not, Christ's solemn instruction, "Watch; and what I say unto you I say unto all, watch." I chiefly object to the common interpretations of the New Testament prophecy as fulfilled in the destruction of Jerusalem and the dispensation of the Holy Spirit, because they rob the New Testament of this solemn warning, and this eloquent incentive to holy, earnest, Christian living. If we believed that tomorrow, any morrow, the lightning may flash out from east to west, that tomorrow, any morrow, the trumpets may sound in the horizon announcing the coming of our King, and our buying and selling, and marrying and giving in marriage, may be broken in upon by his second advent, and by the consummation of all things before his judgment throne, we should better understand Paul's mystical exhortation: "It remaineth that both they that have wives be as though they had none; and they that weep as though they wept not; and they that rejoice as though they rejoiced not; and they that buy as though they possessed not; and they that use this world as not abusing it." So may each one of us be moved to live, henceforth, from the devout and careful study of this hope and warning of Christ; ever looking for the blessed hope and the glorious appearance of our great God and Savior, with this prayer ever in our hearts. Even so, Lord Jesus, come quickly.—Lyman Abbott, in Israel's Watchman.

The Grave.

Oh, the grave! the grave! It buries every error, covers every defect, extinguishes every resentment. From its peaceful bosom spring none but fond regrets and tender recollections. Who can look upon the grave even of an enemy and not feel a compunction throb that he ever should have warred with the poor handful of dust that lies mouldering before him? But the grave of those we loved, what a place for meditation! There it is that we call up in long review the whole history of virtue and gentleness, and the thousand endearments lavished upon us almost unheeded in the daily intercourse of intimacy. There it is that we dwell upon the tenderness, the solemn awful tenderness of the parting scene. The bed of death, with all its stifled griefs, its noiseless attendance, its mute, watchful assiduities, the last testimonies of expiring love, the feeble, fluttering, thrilling, oh, how thrilling! pressure of the hand. The last fond look of the glazing eye, turning upon us even from the threshold of existence. The faint faltering accents struggling in death to give one more assurance of affection. Aye, go to the grave of buried love and meditate! There settle the account with thy conscience for every past benefit unrequited, every past endearment unregarded, of that departed being who can never, never, never return to be soothed by thy contrition! If thou art a child, and hast ever added a sorrow to the soul or a furrow to the silver brow of an affectionate parent; if thou art a husband, and hast ever caused the fond bosom that ventured its whole happiness in thy arms, to doubt one moment of thy kindness or thy truth; if thou art a friend, and hast ever wronged in thought, word or deed the spirit that generously con[illegible] thee; if thou art a lover, and hast given one unmerited pang to that true heart which now lies cold and still beneath thy feet, then be sure that every unkind look, every ungracious word, every ungentle action, will come thronging back upon thy memory, and knocking dolefully at thy soul; then be sure that thou wilt lie down sorrowing and repentant on the grave, and utter the unheard groan, and pour the unavailing tear, more deep, more bitter, because unheard and unavailing. Then weave thy chaplet of flowers, and strew the beauties of nature about the grave; console thy broken spirit, if thou canst, with these tender, yet futile tributes of regret; but take warning by the sorrow of thy contrite affliction over the dead, and henceforth be more faithful and affectionate in the discharge of thy duties to the living.

The Iowa State Conference.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:

Our conference of ten days has just closed. We had a good meeting. The Christian denomination [illegible] kindly tendered us the use of their large church building free of charge. The evangelist's report for the year showed that he had preached 113 discourses, made 140 visits, baptized 14 persons and organized 4 churches. The report of the secretary of the evangelist fund showed that we began the work with $63.65 and about $46.00 in pledges. The whole amount received from all sources was $197 23, of which the evangelist received $191.68, while the printing, express, money orders, drafts, account book and postage was $5.55. The treasurer's report showed that while the amount for 1888 was exhausted, donations for 1889 to the evangelist fund had been received amounting to about $100.00 in cash and pledges. With this and the blessing of God we begin the work for another year.

The brethren and sisters are coming up to the work grandly. Many examples of self sacrifice are personally known to the writer where those who are poor in this world's goods have given nearly all they had in order to send the gospel to those who have never heard. Iowa is moving along, yet there are many of our brethren scattered over the State who do not know what we are doing and that we need their presence and financial help in order to sound out the word of life.

The financial plan suggested by the General Conference was taken up, and recommended by our conference to the consideration of our churches and brethren and to report at our next meeting.

Another point of interest to our General Conference was the action of our State conference relating to delegate conferences, and we hereby give notice to our General Conference that we desire that they change suggestions 4 and 6 of the General Conference Report, pages 17 and 18, so as to have every baptized believer of the gospel within the limits of our State a member of the conference.

The secretary's report gives our proceedings more fully. I desire only to say to those who were not there, you missed a good meeting and we all missed your presence.

Should any [illegible] who could not come wish to contribute to our evangelist fund, remember every dollar will be judiciously used. Send to Alex. Williams, Laurel, Iowa, or to the writer, at Belle Plaine, Iowa. Yours in the hope,

A. J. EYCHANER.

BURLINGTON ROUTE.

Cheap Lands in the West.

Along the lines of the BURLINGTON ROUTE in Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming and northwestern Kansas, particularly on its new extensions in that territory, there is still some Government land awaiting settlement, as well as other cheap land held by individuals. These lands are among the best to be had anywhere in the country for agricultural and grazing purposes. In the comparatively new districts are many improved farms which can be purchased at a very low rate of that class of restless pioneer-settlers who are ready at all times to move "farther west." In the territory embraced by the BURLINGTON'S lines west of the Missouri River, there are in the vicinity of two hundred new towns which offer to manufacturers and business men an excellent opportunity to locate with profit. Send to the undersigned for descriptive pamphlets and other matter giving location and full particulars concerning these lands.

Map of the United States.

A large, handsome Map of the United States, showing North and South Dakota, mounted and suitable for office or home use and issued by the BURLINGTON ROUTE, will be furnished responsible parties free on application to the undersigned. P. S. EUSTIS,

Poetry.

WORK DONE FOR GOD CAN NEVER DIE.

Ho! ye who spend your strength for naught,
And slight the blessings Christ has bought,
Toilers for earth, and time, and sense,
O, what shall be your recompense?
Of all that's done beneath the sky,
Little hath immortality;
What's done by earth falls by and by,
What's done by God can never die.

Ho! ye who join the eager strife
For gold, or fame, or pride of life,
Indulge the lusts of flesh and eye,
And for the world with worldlings vie,
Death shall undo your toils so vain,
And leave you no abiding gain;
What's done for time ends by and by,
What's done for God can never die.

Scepters and crowns will mock our trust,
Monarchs may crumble back to dust
By moth, or rust, or thief, or fire,
Treasures will use and hopes expire;
Desire shall fail and strength decay,
The world itself shall pass away;
What's done for sense falls by and by,
What's done for God can never die.

When comes the King in royal might,
To crush the wrong and crown the right,
When all the saints in glory meet,
No more to die, no more to weep,
When thrones are set and crowns are given,
With all the rich rewards of heaven,—
O, in that glorious by and by,
What's done for God can never die.

LESSONS FOR EARNEST STUDENTS OF THE BIBLE.—No. 62.

The birth of Jesus. Promise and Prophecy fulfilled.

The scheme of revelation as also the plan of redemption, centers in the Lord Jesus Christ. Upon the very threshold of man's sad and fatal fall God in his great goodness and mercy brought this personal seed into view by promise and ever after has kept him prominently before the eye of faith. In the types and shadows of the law, in verbal prophecy and in ecstatic visions things in reference to him are foreshown. In the hymns of God's ancient people he is the keynote. To leave him out of divine revelation would reduce it to meaningless jargon of words. Up to the time of his ascension to the right hand of the Father all predictions relating to his first advent met a literal fulfilment and furnish an unanswerable argument in favor of his Messiahship and the inspiration of the Scriptures. All these predictions could not have been fulfilled in any other person. Jewish interpreters have tried in vain to make the several particulars in the 53rd chapter of Isaiah find their fulfilment in some other man belonging to their nation.

Q. Where is the first promise in the Bible, relating to Jesus the Savior of the world?

A. In Gen. 2: 15 in these few words "it (the seed of woman) shall bruise thy head."

Q. Why called the seed of the woman?

A. Because the begettal was not to be by man but by the Holy Spirit. The angel in answer to Mary's question said, The Holy Spirit shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee, therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God, Luke 1: 35; Matt. 1: 20.

Q. What prophecy in O. T. Scriptures refers to this Virgin-mother and her supernatural son?

A. Is. 7: 14. Therefore the Lord himself shall give you a sign; Behold a virgin shall conceive and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel."

Q. Can we be certain that this prophecy in any sense has reference to Mary and her wonderful son?

A. We can for in Matt. 1: 22, 23, it is declared that "all this was done that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet saying, Behold a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son and his name shall be called Immanuel, which being interpreted is, God with us."

Q. Where was our Lord to be born?

A. In Bethlehem of Judea: for it is written in Micah 5: 2, But thou Bethlehem Ephratah though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall come forth unto me that is to be ruler in Israel. Joseph and Mary lived in Galilee about 70 miles north of Bethlehem.

Q. What brought them to this "city of David" at so critical a time against every dictate of prudence and humanity?

A. The iron rule of Rome. It came to pass in those days that there went out a decree from Cesar Augustus that all the world should be taxed or enrolled, Luke 2: 1. All went to be enrolled every one into his own city, v. 3. Here in this ancient home of his royal ancestor David, Jesus was born as recorded in this second chapter of Luke.

Notes. Bruise thy head—Though dim and shadowy as this promise seems there is in it a richness and depth of meaning only to be exhausted when Jesus has conquered every foe and delivered up the kingdom to his Father, having brought back peace, purity and harmony to this sin-cursed world shall be called the Son of God.

The reason assigned for this lofty title and divine relationship is his supernatural begettal by the Holy Spirit. To have centered upon this son of Mary no higher qualities and attributes than human parentage can jointly transmit would have been but repeating and adding to the countless millions born of flesh, another who would help to swell the sad history of sin.

Isaiah 7: 14; Barnes says on this passage:—"The considerations in favor of referring it to the birth of a child in the time of Isaiah and which should be a pledge to him of the safety of his kingdom then, seem to me to be unanswerable. And the considerations in favor of an ultimate reference to the Messiah—a reference which in the issue becomes total and absorbing—are equally unanswerable, and if so, then the twofold reference is clear."

Its application to Mary and her child by Matthew settles the question of this ultimate reference.

Bethlehem of Judea—So-called to distinguish it from another Bethlehem in the territory of the tribe of Zebulon.

Ruler in Israel—The oath to David, 2 Sam. 7: 12, 13, both prophecy and promise make sure this claim of rulership in Israel and over Israel. The promise made to Mary concerning her son prior to his birth, was but the gathering up and echoing the voice of the ancient prophet? Please read Luke 1: 32, 33.

Whole world taxed—All nations under the dominion of Rome enrolled—population census taken for fiscal and military ends. In obedience to the imperial wish of Augustus, Herod, during the last years of his life and just before the birth of Christ, had made the whole Jewish nation take an oath of allegiance to the Emperor and himself.

Conference Report.

The Annual Conference of the Church of God, convened at the Christian Chapel, near Ferguson, Marshall Co., Iowa, June 7, 1889. Bro. A. Hipshir in the chair.

The reports of the officers of the last Conference were then read and approved. A committee on business was appointed by the Chair consisting of Br's. A. Williams, J. Steffs and O. Cunningham. Bro. A. J. Eyebauer then gave his report and made a statement of the work done at Philadelphia which was very interesting and encouraging. A motion was adopted that this Conference become auxiliary to, and work in harmony with the National Conference. It was then resolved that this Conference recommend to the Churches that they adopt the plan of systematic giving proposed at that Conference. An animated and interesting discussion followed on the aforesaid resolution. Bro. T. J. Whitesitt our Evangelist was requested to present his bill for services rendered since the funds were exhausted. In lieu of this the Conference accepted his proposition to receive as compensation $10.00 in addition to his subscription of $5.00 to the Evangelist fund. The Conference was then organized in harmony with the National Conference.

It was recommended that the Churches desiring to co-operate signify their wish to do so.

Representatives of the Churches at Irving, Gladbrook, Alden, Marathon, Lester and Clarksville expressed themselves in favor of doing so.

The Church at Urbana was not represented. The officers elected for the ensuing year are A. Hipsher, for Pres. E. A. Marsh, of Irving, Sec., and G. P. Allard, of Gladbrook, Treas.

Any communications concerning our work can be addressed to them as above. An Evangelist Committee was also chosen. Sr. Libbie Palmer, Chairman; A. J. Eyebauer, Sec.; and A. Williams, Treas. The plan proposed last year for the support of an Evangelist, Art. 5, was then adopted with the following amendments. "But where a personal gift is bestowed with instructions to keep it individually, no account need be kept of it." It was also resolved to issue certificates in harmony with the plan proposed by the National Conference.

On motion it was resolved that this Conference make application to the National Conference, to so change Art. 4, (see Report page 17) as to permit every member of the State or District Conference to participate in its work. Bro. J. Steffs was elected as Delegate to the next session of the National Conference, G. P. Allard alternate. It was decided to hold the next session of this Conference in September commencing on Thursday prior to the first quarter of the moon.

The officers were authorized to locate the place. It was ordered that a report of our proceedings be published in THE RESTITUTION, and the Independent. A motion was adopted that we tender our thanks to the Trustees of the Christian Church for the use of their House of worship and to the people of the community for their kindness and hospitality. Minutes read and approved.

Discourses were given by Eld. G. M. Myers, A. J. Eyebauer, T. J. Whitesitt, and E. A. Marsh on a variety of topics which elicited the earnest attention of large congregations. The order and quietness was a remarkable feature of the meeting. The discussions of the Bible Class limited to five minute speeches was very instructive and characterized by a spirit of brotherly love. The social meetings and singing were of a high order and caused tears and happy smiles to succeed each other as we sang the inspiring songs of Zion and bore testimony to the saving grace of God.

The work done by our Evangelist and the willingness of the brotherhood to respond to calls for help is very encouraging and prospects for the future never so good as now.

A subsequent report will inform the brethren more fully as to the work done. Submitted in hope,

E. A. MARSH, Sec.

DIED.

BAKER—Nancy Ann Baker of heart disease, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. G. Haupt, at Bijou Hills, South Dakota, on her 68th birthday, May 30, 1869.

Another steadfast follower in the Savior's flock has fallen asleep. One of the firmest believers in "The Faith once delivered to the saints" is laid at rest. Eighteen years ago Leonidas Z. Baker died at Aurora, Illinois, full of trust in the promise of heirship with Jesus when he comes, to them that believe, repent, put on Christ, and remain faithful to his will. Today we mourn the death of the partner of his hope and of his lifework.

Nancy Ann Baker was born in La Fayette, Onondaga County, New York, May 30, 1821. In early life she united with the Baptist Church. Believing with Alexander Campbell that the whole Bible should be our Creed and only Guide of Faith, she later joined his church. After an earnest, thorough, prayerful study of the Word of God she became convinced that though in name her companions accepted the God-given creed, in fact many of them were followers of Plato, as much as of Christ. Believing firmly that man is mortal and will die; that Jesus has given us a hope, insomuch that he will come again, when at the sound of the trumpet the dead in Christ will arise, and he will reign over the earth, upon Mount Zion in Jerusalem during the Millennial Age, when the rest of the dead shall arise, and repenting of her past weak faith, she put on Christ by being buried by baptism into the likeness of the death-state of the Savior and rising from her watery grave in the likeness of his resurrection, for the remission of sins, thus becoming a Sister of Jesus, a member of the Church of God, and an heir to the promises; and without ceasing, through unusual physical suffering, she remained a loving, trusting, fervent follower, presenting freely the words of life, contending earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints and obeying from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered her by Jesus and the apostles. She ever cultivated the spirit of truth, which was indeed a comforter to her.

Her last illness was brief and almost painless. Her death was soft and easy, her breath leaving her so gradually, that the change from life to death was hardly perceptible. Her daughter Alice and family were at her bedside, her son Albert and wife arriving in time to place her in her long resting-place, from which we know she will arise to meet her Lord.

J. G. HAUPT.

Gethsemane, that word of sadness and of agony, that scene of struggling and of prayer, where the shadows of the cross began to gather round the Lord, and the fight was sore with the powers of darkness. We saw there the weakness of humanity with the strength of divinity, the shuddering fear of nature, yet the triumphant victory of grace, the craving for human sympathy and the strength of divine power, and it was an awful yet a glorious sight.—Observer.

It is not for God's pleasure, but for our profit, that he afflicts us. At such seasons prayer is like an arrow that pierces the dark clouds of affliction, and makes them break with blessings on the Christian head; but the arrow will fall to the ground unless the bow is strong, and bent in dependence on the Holy Spirit.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXVIII. Dead PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JULY 3, 1889. NO. 25.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the ...tion of all things which God hath spoken by ... mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Number 2.

In this gospel John also records the fact that the people in general had this official signification of the term Christ as a well understood matter of common interest. On one occasion, while Jesus was teaching in the temple, John records that "then said some of them of Jerusalem, Is not this he whom they seek to kill? But lo, he speaketh boldly, and they say nothing unto him. Do the rulers know indeed that this is the very Christ." Literally, truly the Christ. On a subsequent occasion, "Many of the people, therefore, when they heard this saying, said, of a truth this is the prophet. Others said, This is the Christ. But some said, Shall Christ come out of Galilee? Hath not the Scripture said that Christ cometh of the seed of David, and out of the town of Bethlehem where David was." In these last two occurrences of the term Christ, our translators have omitted to insert the article, the, which is in the original Greek.

The recognition of Jesus as "the Christ" on the part of the people became a source of great dissatisfaction to the authorities. As a means of discouraging it they decreed excommunication from the synagogue for such as made a public confession of their faith in this central truth. John also mentions this fact. The parents of the man whom our Lord cured of blindness excused themselves from giving information as to the means whereby the cure had been effected, or as to the person who had done it. And John informs us of their reason. "These words spake his parents, because they feared the Jews; for the Jews had agreed already that if any man did confess that he was Christ he should be put out of the synagogue." Nor was this general belief that Jesus is the Christ confined to the common people. John farther records that "among the chief rulers also many believed on him; but because of the Pharisees they did not confess him, lest they should be put out of the synagogue; for they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God."

We have another interesting example of the knowledge and belief of this truth in a family circle where our Lord was a frequent and familiar visitor. The family of Bethany had suffered the bereavement of one of the household, an only brother, "Jesus said to Martha, Thy brother shall rise again. Martha saith to him, I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day. Jesus said to her I am the resurrection and the life, he that believeth in me, though he were dead yet shall he live. And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believest thou this? She saith to him, yea, Lord, I believe that thou art the Christ, the Son of God, who should come into this world." From this last statement, as well as from a similar one already quoted, it is plain that there was latent expectation in the minds of the people concerning the coming of one termed the Christ. This expectation was excited into open manifestation at the appearance of John the Baptist, for we have it on record in this fourth gospel that "the Jews sent priests and Levites from Jerusalem to ask him, Who art thou?" His answer was, "I am not the Christ." And Luke, referring to this period, says, "The people were in expectation, and all men mused in their hearts of John whether he was the Christ or not."

Such, then, is a glance at the gospel of John in reference to its main design, which, as he declared, was to prove the Messiahship of Jesus. He clearly shows that this was the turning point of the faith of true disciples during the personal ministry of our Lord, and that the rulers of the people were opposed to the recognition of such a claim and used means to prevent it. He also maintained the same great truth at the time of writing his gospel, as obligatory on his cotemporaries.

If we now turn to the gospels of Matthew, Mark and Luke, we shall find the substantial part of this doctrine borne witness to with a degree of unanimity that is truly remarkable. These three evangelists record a conversation which Jesus had with his twelve apostles regarding this very point. The sequence of events in all the three narratives shows that it was one particular occasion which they all describe. Matthew's account is the fullest, probably because he was present, while the other two, not being apostles, were not. His version is as follows: "When Jesus came into the coasts of Cæsarea Philippi, he asked his disciples, saying, Whom do men say that I the Son of man am? And they said, some say that thou art John the Baptist, some Elias, others Jeremias, or one of the prophets. He saith unto them, but whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ the Son of the living God."

In Mark's account the chief variation is that Peter's answer is simply, "Thou art the Christ." Luke omits the mention of the locality, and gives Peter's answer, "The Christ of God." It is worthy of note that Mark and Luke here record only the primary element in Peter's confession evidently as being the most important. Matthew, Mark and Luke record a prohibition by their Master against making him known in this character so emphatically expressed by his apostles. And here again Matthew's account is fuller than the others. His record is, "Then charged he his disciples that they should tell no man that he was Jesus the Christ."

This occurred at a late period of his ministry, and is to be explained by the fact that the doctrine of the Messiahship had hitherto formed no part of his or their public preaching. It was, however, a truth which those who had a sincere desire to become his disciples could be at no loss to ascertain and apprehend. The case of the woman of Samaria shows how readily our Lord informed her, "I that speak unto thee am he." Whether his apostles did likewise we are not informed, but the theme of their public preaching was "the kingdom of God;" and now that they had confessed their faith in Jesus as the Christ, the Son of the living God, they are warned against making the former member of this confession known. There must have been a reason for this and possibly it was that the time was approaching when, as he next informs them, he should be crucified, and also because he was to be very much in Jerusalem and its neighborhood after this, there might be reasons why his approaching death should not be precipitated by any injudicious intimations of his Messiahship volunteered by his disciples.

The harmony that characterizes the record of this portion of our Lord's history as given by Matthew, Mark and Luke, is farther seen in the order and sequence which they observe in recording certain matters that follow. There is first as we have seen the question of our Lord, with the answers given by Peter as the spokesman of the twelve. Then the prohibition just referred to. Then the intimation of his apprehension, death, and resurrection the third day. Then (with the exception of Luke) we have Peter's rebuke of his Master for this saying, followed by our Lord's reply, "Get thee behind me Satan; thou art an offence unto me; for thou savorest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men." This again is followed by several teachings concerning self-denial and self-sacrifice even to the extent of life itself for his sake and the gospel's, presumably for that truth they had just confessed. In close connection with this he predicts his coming in glory with the angels.

The next event and one of transcendant importance in this series is the transfiguration which evidently took place in accordance with a prediction given by our Lord a week before, and which prediction is recorded, with a slight variation in phraseology, by all three evangelists. Matthew's version is, "Verily I say unto you, There be some standing here who shall not taste of death till they see the Son of man coming in his kingdom." Any difficulty as to understanding this prediction as having its fulfilment in the transfiguration will disappear if we keep in mind that all that is promised is a sight of the Son of man coming in his kingdom, and that the transfiguration is termed a "vision" by our Lord himself. Besides, one of his disciples who witnessed the scene refers to it in one of his epistles, saying regarding it, "we were eye witnesses of his majesty." And even John himself, another witness, seems to allude to the same event when he says in his gospel, "we beheld his glory."

A word here as to the purpose of the transfiguration. In this series of sayings and doings, of which it forms so prominent a part, the faith of the disciples, though boldly confessed, was to receive a severe shock. For it is "from that time forth" that Jesus "began" to tell his disciples that he should be killed. Surely some sustaining influence was needed here; and what better fitted to give it than a foresight of the glory of the Christ? Peter in the passage from his letter just alluded to speaks of the transfiguration as an assuring event. He says, "We have not followed cunningly devised fables when we made known to you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye-witnesses of his majesty." And again, referring to its more permanent influence, he says, "We have also the prophetic word more confirmed;" not as our translators give it, "a more sure word of prophecy," as if the apostle was affirming the superiority of the prophetic word over the fact of the transfiguration as regards the certainty of its assurances. His language expresses the confirmation of the prophetic word by means of the transfiguration.

Another remarkable instance of the identity of the three synoptical gospels concerning the official character of the Messiahship is to be found in the trial of our Lord, (1) before the high priest and (2) before Pilate, the Roman Governor. The question put to Jesus by the former is substantially the same in all three accounts, and hinges on the claim he was understood to have maintained to be the Christ. The question as given by Matthew is fuller than as given by Mark and Luke, and evidently shows the formal solemn style of the Sanhedrim. It is put by the high priest himself in the following terms: "I adjure thee by the living God that thou tell us whether thou be the Christ, the Son of God." According to Mark it is simply, "Art thou the Christ, the Son of the Blessed?" And Luke is briefer still, "Art thou the Christ? tell us;" thus confining it to the primary and substantial element. It may be noted here that our Lord's response to this solemn adjuration was in the affirmative, "Thou hast said." But he added to this a confident appeal to the vision of Daniel as certain to have its fulfilment in himself, notwithstanding that appearances were so much against it. "Nevertheless," he said, "I say unto you, hereafter shall ye see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power and coming in the clouds of heaven."

This allusion to the prophecy of Daniel, considering the solemn circumstances in which our Lord stood at the time, must be taken to be a distinct declaration by him of the true character of that office of the Christship which he was here at the hazard of his life maintaining. "There was given to him dominion and glory and a kingdom that all people and nations and languages should serve him." Dan. vii. 13, 14.

Without attempting to trace the identity of the three gospels any farther I would, before leaving them, notice one or two passages in which this definite character of the Christship is indicated at a very early period in the history of our Lord. At the time of his birth the term Christ was used by the angel in his intimation to the shepherds on the plains of Bethlehem, "Fear not; for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Savior, who is Christ the Lord."

Again, when the wise men came from the East to Jerusalem with the inquiry, "Where is he that is born King of the Jews?" we are informed that King Herod was alarmed and "gathered all the chief priests and scribes of the people together, and demanded of them where Christ should be born." Note here that the force of the term Christ is weakened by the omission of the article, which is found in the Greek.

A little farther on when the infant Savior was brought to Jerusalem to be presented to the Lord in accordance with the law, the aged Simeon took him up in his arms, and blessed God. And it is recorded that it had been "revealed to him by the Holy Ghost that he should not see death before he had seen the Lord's Christ." This is a peculiar form of expression derived from the usage in Old Testament times in which Saul and David were called the Lord's Anointed or Christ, and which we shall have occasion to refer to more particularly in the sequel. The official character indicated, however, is sufficiently obvious without farther comment.

J. CAMERON.

INTERPRETATION OF SCRIPTURE.

A great deal is said about the interpretation of the Word, and some seem to think that every Scripture needs interpretating. And here arises a great mistake, and a source of numerous errors. The truth is, a great deal of Scripture needs no interpreting; it is to be taken to mean what it says; it is to be understood in its plain grammatical sense; and those passages which are somewhat obscure, or the meaning of which is doubtful, should be read in the light of those which are clear and luminous. Excepting here and there an obscure text, and passages where symbols or figures are used, it would be better for us, and would further the interests of truth, to understand Holy Scripture as we understand any other writings, in their plain and obvious sense.

The sacred writings, the same as other writings, where interpretation is necessary, should be interpreted by the laws governing the language in which they are written. The subjects treated of may transcend all others in importance, and the various writers may be inspired by the Holy Spirit, and the thoughts given may be God's thoughts, still as they are spoken to human beings, they must be spoken in human language, and that language must be interpreted according to the usages which ordinarily govern it. We have no divine warrant for looking for any thing above or beyond this. Nor do the sacred writers, by any thing they have said, raise any expectations on this line.

If the will of God is to be made known to us through language, he must use language in the sense in which we understand it, or in its proper and primary sense. And it was in this sense that language generally was understood, not only in Old Testament times but in New Testament times till men began to set up their own fancies for God's doctrines, and then sought to give a show of Scripture for their vagaries by insisting that there lay a mystical meaning under the letter of the word. We shall never know when we have the truth, or rest with certainty upon any interpretation unless we abide by the well known laws of language. How are we to understand the birth of Christ, the miracles of Christ, the sufferings of Christ, his crucifixion, his resurrection, and his ascension, if we are to set aside the primary meaning of language, and seek for some hidden spiritual meaning? No system of interpretation can be relied upon that treats the language of the Bible in a different way from what it treats the language of other books. The usages of language must be regarded in the study of every book, or we do injustice to the writers, and promote confusion and inconsistency of thought.

The usages of language, as given by critical Biblical expositors, would guide us in understanding passages that are plainly written, or passages where a figure or symbol is used; but where are there any laws given to guide us in spiritualising a passage, or putting a mystical meaning upon it? This is left to every one's imagination, or whim or fancy; and hence it is that we have so many mystical senses fastened upon so many passages.

The New Testament can be made to teach almost any wild theory by adopting the canon of interpretation now so commonly acted upon. No matter how plain and simple the words of Scripture, you have only to imagine that they are figurative, and so spiritualizing them, and then you can make them to mean almost any thing. But it is not thus that we are to deal with the words of Scripture. When the Holy Spirit has introduced a figure into a text, there is no difficulty in perceiving it; but where there is no figure, where the language is clear, it is not for us to change it into the metaphorical.

On the literal interpretation of Scripture, Martin Luther says, "That which I have so often insisted on elsewhere I here repeat, that the Christian should direct his first effort to understand the literal sense of Scripture, which alone is the substance of faith and Christianity. The allegorical sense is commonly uncertain, and by no means safe to build our faith upon, for it usually depends on human opinion and conjecture. It has come to pass that men make just what they please of Scripture, until some accommodate the Word of God to the most extravagant notions; and, as Jerome complains of in his own time, they extract a sense from Scripture repugnant to its meaning."

The use of figurative language has been greatly abused. When the plain sense of Scripture has been against some favorite theory, it has become quite common with some men to say, "Oh, that is figurative." They pay no regard to acknowledged principles of interpretation. They take a passage literally where it suits them, and where it does not, they say it must be understood figuratively. But by the adoption of such a course, what false doctrine may not have an array of Scripture texts in its favor? There must be some rule of exegesis. As in the reading of other books, so in the reading of the Bible, the primary sense of words must be taken; the exceptions are where the passage or context gives evidence that a figure or a symbol is used, or that a word must be understood in a secondary sense. This is a rule, we think, which all will acknowledge to be sound; yet how lamentably is it set aside in the interpretation of Scripture. There need be little or no difficulty in determining when a word or phrase is figurative, and when it is not. The evidence of a figure is on the surface, and there will be no difficulty concerning it with honest minds. Speaking of a figure of speech, Dr. Carson says, "Such a figure is never to be arbitrarily supposed. Where it exists, it will force itself on the understanding of every reader, and can be understood in no other sense. This arbitrary supposition of figures of speech in order to relieve them out of their difficulties, is the constant resource of Unitarians: and a 'miserable resource' it is, founded in entire ignorance of the nature of figurative language. As if there were no regulating principle to direct the application of figures, they conjure them up at pleasure as often as they have a dignus vindice nodus."

After some remarks in a quotation on the absurdity of the figurative interpretation where the literal is clearly intended, G. H. Pember says, "Now the justice of these remarks cannot be denied, and the lesson to be learned from them is this: that, if believers would but keep to the plain statements of the Bible, there would be very little for infidels to cavil at; but that as soon as they begin to form theories, and twist revelation into agreement with them, they expose themselves, and still worse, the Scriptures to ridicule."

If God has spoken to us through his holy prophets and apostles, and spoken on subjects of the deepest interest to us, we are bound to conclude that he used language in its plain and grammatical sense. If an allegorical meaning is to be put upon plain and ordinary language, where it is evident that no figure is used, how shall we ever come to a knowledge of what God has revealed? If this kind of interpretation is allowable, twenty different men with twenty different fancies, may give to a plain passage of Scripture twenty different meanings. It is this violation of the laws of language that has been such a faithful source of diversity of opinion; for many have imposed a peculiar meaning of their own upon the language of Scripture, instead of ascertaining the real meaning in which the language was primarily used.

Now only those who have studied the prophecies, and have read considerably upon them, have any thing like a true conception of the numerous and fanciful interpretations that are given to some of them through a disregard of those usages. Let the laws of language be followed in regard to the Scriptures as they are in regard to other writings, and we shall have fewer differences of opinion, fewer wild and foolish vagaries, and less cause for reproach being cast upon this subject.

Origen advocated the fanciful theory that "as man consists of body, soul, and spirit, so in the same way does Scripture." Hence he often gives to words which have only one meaning, a threefold explanation. So widely did Origen depart from the literal sense of Scripture language, to such an extent did he introduce allegories and mystical meanings, that Pressense in his "Early years of Christianity," says, in reference to his method of explanation, that he "reads a Bible of his own invention, a human book within the book of God." And some, treading in Origen's steps, and wishing no doubt to improve on his method, soon fancied they could see more than double that number of senses in a single passage; and others again, not satisfied with that, found as many meanings in the word as their ingenuity could invent. What are called the dark ages were the result, in part, of discarding the literal sense of Scripture, and teaching that so many mystical or spiritual senses lay under the surface that only the learned could understand them, and therefore, that the Bible was not a book for the common people. The generality of Christians who know little or nothing of Ecclesiastical history, and to whom the names of Origen, Augustine, Kant, Semler, Angelorn, Coccelus, Swedenborg, and others of like tendencies are unknown, could scarcely believe that an almost infinite number of vagaries have been fastened upon the Scriptures. And many of those vagaries, many of those fanciful interpretations are yet given by writers and preachers. We frequently read them in books and papers lately published, and hear them in sermons still preached. Surely it is high time that a more general effort was made to establish a sound method of Scripture exegesis.

The belief of the early Church having long ago become a fact of history, believers in mystical meanings endeavor to justify the transition state which the Church underwent, brought about in a great measure by the teaching of Origen. The casting aside the literal sense of Scripture they think was simply casting aside "the husk;" and the finding of some spiritual sense was the finding of "the kernel." Hence if this principle is admitted, it will follow that the early Christians, those who lived nearest to the times of Christ and his apostles, were more grossly deceived than those who lived after the Church began to degenerate. It is more reasonable, we think, to conclude that the Church in the early years of Christianity were more likely to have the true sense of Scripture than at a later period when they began to fraternize with the world.

It seems to us that if we are not to understand the prophecies in the sense which the language plainly indicates, if they say one thing and mean quite another, it places us in a strange position in regard to a large portion of the Old Testament, and, indeed, in some parts of the New. It leaves us without a reliable guide. If the language of a considerable part of Scripture is not to be understood according to the ordinary laws of language, according to the clear grammatical meaning, how are we to understand it? Are we to understand it according to the interpretation of some ancient council of divines, or some later convocation, some assembly of the clergy? How can we, since the council may give one interpretation, and the convocation another? If it is allowable to discard the plain literal sense, and put upon it a spiritual sense, who is to decide what is the true spiritual sense? We conclude that the wisest and safest course is to conclude that God has spoken to us through his prophets in words which we are to understand according to the usages of language. This is the only course which commends itself to our judgment: any other is certain to lead us astray.

Some of the most learned and popular of sceptical writers ground one of their strongest arguments against the Bible on what they conceive to be the fact that the prophecies are not to be literally fulfilled. Many Christian writers through only a partial apprehension of the subject, contend that we are to look for a literal accomplishment; that they contain much that is symbolical and figurative; and unbelievers, judging of the the prophecies by their literal sense, according to the laws of language and grammar, conclude that they are only human guesses, and that the book containing them is unreliable. The Jews, they contend, looking for a literal fulfilment, expected a Messiah that should be the King and Deliverer, and expected the kingdom to be restored to them as a people; and because this has not yet taken place, and so many Christian apologists read into the prophecies a spiritual meaning, and discard the grammatical sense, they discard the Book that contains them.

Now there would be no ground for this objection to Christianity, if Christian writers had showed that the predictions of the Scriptures were to be understood literally, according to the usages of language; that they represent the divine plan in regard to the future of Israel; that many of the prophecies have already received a literal fulfilment in the first Advent of Christ; and that other prophecies will also receive a literal fulfilment at the Second Advent; and that some show plainly that this accomplishment, and the restoration of the kingdom to Israel cannot take place until the time of the Second Advent.

We do not deny the occasional use, by the sacred writers, of typical, symbolical, and figurative language. All students of prophecy admit this, and there is no wish to [illegible] this fact. And we are careful to distinguish such portions of Scripture from those which are literal. "Language," says Geo. N. H. Peters, "must be interpreted by the laws which produce and regulate it: if symbolic, it is to be interpreted by the laws underlying types; if figurative, then by the rules controlling figures; and if rigidly literal, then by the laws of unfigurative speech." What we have to guard against is, making that figurative which is literal, and putting a mystical sense upon words, whether literal or figurative, where none is intended.

Regard must also be had, in the interpretation of any passage difficult to understand, to the harmony of Scripture in other passages bearing on the same subject. There is unity in all divine truth, and when one passage is so interpreted as to contradict another, we may be sure that we misunderstand the teaching of the Holy Spirit.

From P. A. Seguin, an ex-priest, we have received a pamphlet entitled "The Confessional Box Unmasked," in which he furnishes facts and figures, and names also, of a startling character indeed. Surely Romanism has reduced unspeakable abominations to a system outrivaling the cities of the Plain if the exposes made by this author and other converted Romanists are true; and we have no reason to think they are not. Pastor Seguin is becoming a power for the truth. Price of pamphlet 15 cts; address P. A. Seguin, 122 N. Carpenter St., Chicago, Ill. He publishes also a monthly, The True Protestant, a thorough expose of Romanism and a spicy journal otherwise. From a highly esteemed correspondent, we learn that Pastor Seguin has found his way into some of the meetings of our brethren; and that he and his wife have been mobbed repeatedly, but that they are pursuing the even tenor of their way, trusting in God. May our Heavenly Father guide them both by his council through life, and afterward receive them to glory in his kingdom, is our prayer.

THE SINAITIC THEOPHANY.

And it came to pass on the third day in the morning, that there were thunders and lightnings, and a thick cloud upon the Mount, and the voice of the trumpet exceeding loud; so that all the people that was in the camp trembled. Ex. xix. 16. See also Heb. xii. 18-21.

The scenery where God so wonderfully manifested his awful and awe-inspiring presence to the Israelites, is t[illegible]ly and beautifully described by Dean Stanley in the first volume of his History of the Jewish Church. The children of Israel had arrived at Rephidim where the Dean's description commences as follows:

"Rephidim was but the threshold of Sinai. 'In the third month they departed from Rephidim, and pitched in the wilderness of Sinai.' Onwards and upwards, after their long halt, exulting in their first victory, they advanced deeper and deeper into the mountain ranges, they knew not whither. They knew only that it was for some great end, for some mighty sacrifice, for some solemn disclosure, such as they had never before witnessed. Onwards they went, and the mountains closed around them; upwards through winding valley and under high cliff, and over rugged pass, and through gigantic forms, on which the marks of creation even now seemed fresh and powerful; and at last, through all the different valleys, the whole body of the people were assembled. On their right hand and on their left rose long successions of lofty rocks, forming a vast avenue, like the approaches which they had seen leading to the Egyptian temples between colossal figures of men and of gods. At the end of this broad avenue rising immediately out of the level plain on which they were encamped towered the massive cliffs of Sinai, like the huge altar of some natural temple, encircled by peaks of every shape and height, the natural pyramids of the desert. In this sanctuary, secluded from all earthly things, raised high above even the wilderness itself, arrived, as it must have seemed to them, at the very end of the world—they waited for the Revelation of God. How would he make known himself to them? Would it be, as they had seen in those ancient temples of Egypt, under the similitude of any figure 'the likeness of male or female, the likeness of any beast that is upon the earth, or the likeness of any fowl that flieth in the air, or the likeness of anything that creepeth on the ground, or the likeness of any fish that is in the waters under the earth?' Would it be any, or all of these forms, under which they [illegible] and brought them up of the land of Egypt? 'These questions, or like to th[illegible] are what must have occurred to the Israelites on the morning of the mighty day when they stood beneath the Mount.

"The outward scene might have prepared them for what was to come. They stood, as I have described, in a vast sanctuary, not made with hands, a sanctuary where every outward shape of life, animal or vegetable, such as in Egypt had attracted their wonder and admiration, was withdrawn. Bare and unclothed, the mountains rose around them, their very shapes and colors were such as to carry their thoughts back to the days of old creation, 'from everlasting to everlasting, before the mountains were brought forth, or ever the earth and world were made.' At last the morning broke, and every eye was fixed upon the summit of the height. Was it in any earthly form, was it in any distinct shape, that unveiled itself? There were thunders, there were lightnings, there was the voice of a trumpet exceeding loud; but on the Mount itself there was a thick cloud—darkness, and clouds, and thick darkness. It was 'the secret place of thunder.' On the summit of the mountain, on the skirts of the dark cloud, or within it, was Moses himself withdrawn from view. It is this which represents to us the seclusion so essential to the Eastern idea—within certain limits, so essential to any idea—of the prophet; that,

> 'Separate from the world his breast,
> Might deeply take and strongly keep
> The print of heaven.'"

Of this Theophany, or Divine Appearance, Josephus gives the following account:

"On the third day, before the sun was up, a cloud spread itself over the whole camp of the Hebrews, such a one as none had before seen, and encompassed the place where they had pitched their tents: and while all the rest of the air was clear, there came strong winds that raised up large showers of rain, which became a mighty tempest. There was also such lightning as was terrible to those that saw it; and thunder with its thunderbolts was sent down, and declared God to be there present in a gracious way to such as Moses desired he should be gracious."

This scene was deeply impressed upon the minds of seer and of Psalmist in after times. In the Song of Deborah and Barak we have this language: "Lord, when thou wentest out of Seir, when thou marchedst out of the field of Edom, the earth trembled, and the heavens dropped, the clouds also dropped water. The mountains melted from before the Lord, even that Sinai from before the Lord God of Israel."

The Psalmist says, "O God, when thou wentest forth before thy people, when thou didst march through the wilderness; Selah: The earth shook, the heavens also dropped at the presence of God, the God of Israel. Thou, O God, didst send a plentiful rain, whereby thou didst confirm thine inheritance when it was weary." As Josephus and the Hebrew Scriptures connect a thunder-storm with the Divine appearance upon Mount Sinai, we will append a description of a thunder-storm at this place as witnessed by a traveler through that region: "Every bolt as it burst, with the roar of a cannon, seemed to awaken a series of distinct echos on every side; they swept like a whirlwind among the higher mountains, becoming faint as some mighty peak intervened, and bursting with undiminished volume through some yawning cleft, till the very ground trembled with the concussion. It seemed as if the mountains of the whole peninsula were answering one another in a chorus of the deepest bass. Ever and anon a flash of lightning dispelled the pitchy darkness and lit up the Mount as if it had been day; then, after the interval of a few seconds, came the peal of thunder, bursting like a shell, to scatter its echos to the four quarters of the heavens, and overpowering for a moment the loud howlings of the wind."

It was amidst displays of such awful grandeur, though hidden in a pavilion of thickest darkness, that God manifested himself to Israel as their God. It is not to be wondered at that the people were terror-stricken, nor that Moses himself said, "I exceedingly fear and quake." In contrast, how sweetly, and how soothingly, the gospel message comes to the poor lost and undone sinner. Salvation is addressed to us in all the assuring language of compassionate love. Let us heed and obey the joyful sound, and in this way attain to eternal life and an inheritance in the kingdom of God.

Praise, to mean anything at all, must be spontaneous and prompted by real approval of character or admiration of excellence; otherwise it is as futile as a bubble that floats a moment in the air and is gone for ever.

Dear Restitution:

There are many Christian peo[illegible] who live many years in the service of the Master, but never get near enough to him, to enjoy all the blessings he has in store for his children. There are two reasons for this.

1. A lack of faith in what our Heavenly Father has promised to do for his children.

2. A desire on our part to have our way with God, instead of letting him have his way with us.

Our people claim to be literal interpreters. We have been taught, and teach, that we shall take God at his word and not attempt to so interpret and explain the Scriptures as to make them bend to our personal views. When we find the word death in the Scriptures, we say that it means the suspension of life. When we are told that the wicked shall perish, we say that dont mean that they shall live forever in eternal torment. But how is it with some other statements equally plain and positive. Like the following: "The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want," Psa. xxiii. 1. A shepherd is one that takes care of the flock. That was the idea the psalmist had in his mind. He had a shepherd that was not only willing, but abundantly able, to take care of him. Is he our shepherd? will he take care of us and keep us from want?

"Trust in the Lord and do good, and verily thou shalt be fed," Psa. xxxv. 3. There are only two conditions. 1. "Trust in the Lord." 2. "Do good." Are we complying with the conditions? If we are we will get the promised blessing.

"Casting all your care upon him, for he careth for you!" 1 Pet. v. 7. Do we take all our cares and troubles to the Lord and leave them with him? If not why not? Do we believe that he careth for us? When our Heavenly Father says, cast all your care upon me, will we turn to him and say that is a very pretty speech, but you dont mean what you say. Let us be very careful how we treat God's word and cast his jewels from us.

"Cast thy burden upon the Lord and he shall sustain thee," Psa. lv. 22.

"I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee. So that we may boldly say, The Lord is my helper and I will not fear what man shall do unto me," Heb. xiii. 5, 6. Can we truly say that we believe this and still doubt that the Lord will take the very best care of his children?

"The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him and delivereth them," Psa. xxxiv. 7. Is there an angel encamped round about us? If we fill the conditions there is, just as certain as God is certain. If during the late rebellion we had been threatened by the enemies of the government and had reported our trouble to General Grant, and he had said, I will take my entire army and encamp round about your dwelling and deliver you, we would have thought we were pretty safe. Was General Grant's word any more to be relied upon than God's? Was Grant's soldiers more powerful and courageous than the angels of the Lord? One angel slew one hundred and eighty-five thousand soldiers in one night. The Lord dont fail, or do any half way work. Oh if we could only learn to trust him and take him at his word.

Let us come unto him as children to a parent, cast all our cares and troubles at his feet, lean upon his strong arm, put ourselves in condition to accept his promised blessings and move along life's journey with praise and thanksgiving on our lips, loving kindness in our hearts, charity in every word, humility in every act, and our whole lives a benediction.

R. S. Dwi[illegible]ins.

How precious is our hope! We see mankind roaming in uncertainty; and where they are they know not. We see the clergy of the day differing among themselves, and some owning doubt about the authority of parts of the Holy Scriptures. And in what bewilderment are the thinking portion of the people! No wonder that many think it not best to trouble their minds about Bible matters, when clergy of the Establishment (Episcopalians—H. S.) as well as Dissenting ministers avow unbelief in parts of the Word of God. The masses in all Gentile countries have ever been ungodly; but the laws, restraint from clergy, and a part of the community with them, have kept society from anarchy.

Some talk about the Church of the Future. What sort of a church is likely to be the outcome of things as they are, and are inclined to? Anything but a church of assurance. A medley of uncertainties! Agnosticism is a present, and as matters are tending, it will be a future and extending [illegible] Thank God! Se[illegible] [illegible]er will matters proceed [illegible]t course. A bound is set to Gentilism—its medley of follies with its rule.

Thy Kingdom Come!

SEATTLE, W. T.

Dear Restitution:

The brethren and sisters will no doubt be glad to learn of the first meeting in Seattle of the Church of God, which was held at the house of Bro. Jas. F. Eshelman June 16th. After opening with a hymn and prayer, the loaf and cup were passed and all partook of the emblems of our Lord's broken body and shed blood. Another hymn being sung, Bro. G. W. Young of Brooklyn, and Bro. Robt. Young of Tuckahoe, N. Y., made appropriate remarks for the occasion. These were followed by remarks from Bros. Eshelman and Cattell, all expressing themselves anxious for permanent organization and regular meetings, which will be held from this time forward.

It was the unanimous desire of those present that a notice of this meeting appear in THE RESTITUTION and Bro. Chas. A. Goss was selected to send the same with a request for its publication. It is our desire that if there are any of like precious faith in Seattle that they make themselves known and meet with us.

To the Church in Cleveland, in Brooklyn, and the scattered ones of the little flock everywhere we wish to express our full conviction that the time is short ere "the Bridegroom cometh" to claim his ransomed Bride—the Church. May we all be found with our lamps well-filled and watching when he cometh. For the Church of God in Seattle,

How to Revise a Creed.

The Presbyterian General Assembly has submitted to the decision of the local church courts the question, whether a revision of the standards of Presbyterian theology is or is not desirable. This is by some interpreted as meaning that the Assembly wished to prove that there was no general desire for a revision, and by others, that it wished to secure the approval of the churches generally in making a revision. To our way of thinking there is only one kind of revision of any man-made creed that can be satisfactory, and that is a revision that will revise it out of existence. We could not adopt the creed of any denomination as a full and satisfactory exposition of divine truth, and we deny that any denomination has a right to demand submission to a humanly-devised creed. Even a collection of passages direct from the word of God would necessarily constitute an incomplete, and therefore imperfect statement of divine truth, and might, for that reason, be calculated to mislead. "I am the truth," said Christ. He alone is the word of God, the revelation and manifestation of God to man. In him, and not in any particular Scripture statements, dwells all the fulness of the Godhead bodily, and all the revelation of God to man. Christ, therefore, and not any statement about him, is the true creed of the church. He that believeth in Christ shall not come into condemnation. He that believeth not in Christ is condemned already, because he has not believed in the name of the only-begotten Son of God. It is not what we believe about Christ, but our faith in Christ which saves us. Faith in Christ, then, is the only true test of discipleship.

Nevertheless it is not true, as many tell us, that it matters little what doctrine we hold so long as we try to do right; for a man's views of truth will necessarily influence his life. The doctrinal teaching of the epistles was not given to us to be received, rejected, or neglected at our pleasure. It is God's message to us to which we are bound to give attentive ear. If we slight it we shall suffer loss for doing so. But the doctrine is addressed to the individual, because it is spiritual and can only be spiritually discerned. It is not therefore capable of being reduced to logical form or analysed by human intellects, and should not be formulated in set statements or imposed on men's minds by any power but that of the Spirit of Truth.

Faith implies submission to the will of God, and submission of the reasoning faculties to the truth as revealed in the Scriptures is quite as essential to clear views of that truth and to spiritual progress by its means as is submission of the bodily passions to the law of purity and self-denial. But [illegible] has a right to require [illegible] solved acceptance of [illegible] formula of truth, even after they have done their utmost to bring that formula into harmony with the word of God. Still less when, as in the cases of most of the creeds, it contains assertions that are not in the Bible, but are looked upon as logical deductions from the teachings of that book.

It would be as reasonable to undertake to define by logic the mysterious law of our nature which unites one man and one woman in the bonds of a love which neither of them feels or can feel for anyone else, as to apply logic to the explanation of the mysteries of God's nature or of his dealings with man.—N. Y. Witness.

THE PAULINE PHILOSOPHY OF AFFLICTION.

Paul, in his Second Epistle to the Corinthians, represents himself as "troubled on every side, yet not distressed," as "perplexed, but not in despair," as persecuted, but not forsaken," as "cast down, but not destroyed," and as "always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus," 2 Cor. iv. 8-10. He speaks of himself as a man in whom "death worketh," and of his body or "outward man" as ready to "perish." He was not a Stoic. He neither denied his earthly trials and sorrows, nor did he attempt to underrate their power. He had a sensitive nature, and as a man he was deeply afflicted in that nature, and suffered much more than usually falls to the lot of man. This fact abundantly appears in his frequent allusion to his own sufferings, and also appears in the record of his life as given in the Book of Acts.

How then did the apostle practically solve the great problem of his earthly sufferings and trials? What view did he take of them, and in what light did he consider them? These questions are answered by him in the following words:

"For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen; for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal," 2 Cor. iv. 17, 18.

We have a somewhat similar view in the following words found in the Epistle to the Romans:

"For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us," Rom. viii. 18.

The general idea common to both of these passages is, that, in the case of the Christian, the sufferings and afflictions of this life, however great they may be, sink into insignificance and are hardly worthy of mention, when compared with the eternal glory to which they finally lead. This thought, with the utmost vividness and intensity of expression, is set forth in the first of the above passages. "Affliction" here and "glory" hereafter are placed in contrast with each other. The "affliction" here is "light," while the glory hereafter is a "weight of glory." The former is "but for a moment," while the latter is "eternal." The glory, as we have it in the Common Version is, "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." The rendering in the Revised Version, which is more exact, is "more and more exceedingly an eternal weight of glory." It is difficult to get into the English idiom the full import and intensity of the original words which are rendered "far more exceeding," or "more and more exceedingly." One needs to be a Greek scholar to grasp the whole power of the Pauline description of this glory, as compared with the "light affliction, which is but for a moment."

The relation between the "affliction" and the "glory," as thus contrasted, is one of antecedent and consequent, not merely in the sense of time, but in that of moral ministration. The former not only precedes the latter, but is the means of the latter. The affliction "worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." It is an experience of apparent ill in time which contributes to this result in eternity. Paul does not say that it ought to do so, or that it may do so, but that it actually does so. Affliction here and glory hereafter are connected together in the order of a moral sequence, so that the one arises from the other.

Such was Paul's anticipation in respect to his own afflictions; and such is his philosophy in respect to the afflictions of all Christians. We say Christians, for manifestly the statement of the apostle is limited to them. Paul was a Christian himself, and was writing to those who professed to be such; and what he intended to do and actually did was to give to Christians [illegible] in the present life. They are to look upon their afflictions in this passing and fleeting "moment," as working for them "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." This is the order of God's providence and grace in respect to what he will surely bring to pass. The apostle was certain on this point; and hence we find him saying in another passage: "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them that are the called according to his purpose," Rom. viii. 28. Afflictions are included among the "all things" that "work together," and are in the design of God for Christian "profit" that "we might be partakers of his holiness," Heb. xii. 10. They are the badges of sonship, and belong to the merciful and gracious discipline of "the Father of Spirits," who thus chastens and educates those whom he loves and means to save. Their "manifold temptations" and trials will at last be "found" to have worked out their "praise and honor and glory," 1 Pet. i. 7. When the journey is ended, and life's whole scene is completed, they will see from the imperial hights of their heavenly life that the great apostle to the Gentiles was right in the view which he took of afflictions when falling to the lot of the Christian in this world.

Let every Christian, reasoning from the attributes, promises and providence of God, and looking not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen, be a thorough-going optimist in respect to all the appointments that relate to this life. Let him remember that God himself is navigating the ship of grace, and that under his direction it will always land at the port of peace. No Christian will ever be called to the endurance of more temptations and trials than he is able to bear; and whatever they may be God will always "make a way to escape," and at last bring the Christian out unharmed and in safety, 1 Cor. x. 13. Afflictions, though not in themselves pleasant, are to the Christian profitable, and in the circumstances the best things that could happen to him. All this he will see when he ceases to look through "a glass darkly," and looks at things "face to face." His inner life on earth ought to be a continuous hymn of praise and gratitude to God, and such it will be if he adopts Paul's philosophy of affliction. This will make him happy in God at all times, and in all events, and irradiate the future with transcendent glories.—Independent.

Bruno's Monument Unveiled.

Bruno was an Italian philosopher who was born about the middle of the sixteenth century. H[illegible] first connected with the order of the Dominicans. Soon he had doubts about "transubstantiation," and he expressed his doubts and was compelled to flee from the convent. He went to France, from thence to England where he composed his most important works. Then he went to Germany, and became a warm admirer of Luther. At last he returned to Italy where he was persecuted for two years to make him recant, but he was not the kind of a man that could be convinced of error by persecution, and so the Holy Inquisition roasted him alive at Rome on Feb. 17, 1600. Bruno is said to have been pantheistic in his opinions.

His admirers determined to erect a statue in Rome to his memory. The pope and his supporters did their utmost to prevent it, but their efforts were in vain, for on Sunday last the statue was unveiled. The following is a brief account of the affair.

"ROME, June 9, 1889.—The statue of Giordano Bruno was unveiled today with imposing ceremonies. Thirty thousand persons, including students and deputations from various parts of Italy, marched in procession through the principal streets. The removal of the canvas covering the statue was the signal for deafening cheers. The ceremonies were witnessed by the Syndic of Rome, the government officials and a large number of Senators and Deputies. Deputy Bovio, in an oration, eulogized the martyr and declared that today was born a new religion of free thought and liberty of conscience, which would be worse for the Papacy than the loss of temporal power. After a banquet, at which 1,000 covers were laid, the procession returned to the starting point and was dismissed. In the evening the monument was illuminated. The proceedings throughout were orderly.

"The memory of Garibaldi was honored with an imposing ceremony at the Capitol today.

"The pope is much depressed. It is reported that he refuses to see anybody, and that he passed three days absorbed in prayer in his private chapel. Four hundred telegrams have [illegible] unveiling [illegible] All the ambassad[illegible] Vatican met this [illegible] pope's chapel.

Jesus' Home.

It seems that after leaving Cana our Lord went at once to Capernaum, accompanied apparently by his mother and her brethren, and made that town his home. His sisters were probably married, and did not leave their native Nazareth; but the dreadful insult which Jesus had received would have been alone sufficient to influence his family to leave the place, even if they did not directly share in the odium and persecution which his words had caused. Perhaps the growing alienation between himself and them had been due, in part, to this circumstance. They must have felt, and we know they did feel, a deeply seated annoyance, if, refusing to admit the full awfulness of his mission, and entirely disapproving the form of his manifestations, they yet felt themselves involved in hatred and ruin as a direct consequence of his actions. Certain it is that, although apparently they were living at Capernaum, their home was not his home. Home, in the strict sense, he had none; but the house of which he ordinarily made use appears to have been that which belonged to his chief apostle. It is true that Simon and Andrew are said to have belonged to Bethsaida, but they may easily have engaged the use of a house at Capernaum, belonging to Peter's mother-in-law; or, since Bethsaida is little more than a suburb or part of Capernaum, they may have actually moved for the convenience of the Master from the one place to the other.—Canon Farrar.

ELTON.—At Swan Creek, near Delta, Fulton Co., Ohio, June 6, 1889, Thomas Elton, aged 67 years, 6 months and 12 days.

Our brother was born in Newtontoney in the county of Wilts, England, on Nov. 24th, 1821. In 1856 he came to America and resided in North Royalton, Cambridge Co., Ohio, till 1863, when he removed to the place where he died. He was twice married. Four children by his first wife survive him, two sons and two daughters, also his second wife and one son. As to his first religious impressions I may say, I suppose, that he was born into the Church of England or established church, but as he grew up he became attached to the Primitive Methodists and became a local preacher among them. But Mr. W. S. Scott of the Disciples (Christian Church there) coming into that part, a discussion soon began on baptism, and the result was that he and quite a number of others became Disciples. He remained with them there and for several years after coming to America but some sixteen years ago he outgrew them and embraced the truth as preached by Jesus and the apostles. Quite a little church was raised up of which he was Elder or overseer. He will long be missed and his absence sorely felt by his family, his neighbors, the town and the church, the church especially on each first day of the week when they come together to break the loaf. The funeral was very largely attended by the people far and near who listened attentively to Bro. Joblin from Cleveland who gave a most impressive discourse, and must have made a deep impression in the hearts of the people. May the Lord soon come and wake the sleeping ones from their dusty beds, and thus may we meet again with all the faithful in the kingdom of our Father.

A LITTLE WHILE.

"What is this that he saith, A little while?"

A little while to quaff the cup of sorrow,
To wait with tearful eyes for light to dawn;
A little while to watch for that tomorrow,
Which only comes when life's sad strife is won:
Only a little while.

A little while to stand with girded armor,
And wait the bugle-blast with lifted sword;
And then, when drums beat and the strife grows warmer,
To march to fight the battles of the Lord:
Only a little while.

A little while to mourn the vision golden,
That vanished ere the rising of the sun;
To see them pass, those treasures sweet and olden,
With the eternal ages, one by one:
Only a little while.

A little while! where are the hopes we cherished,
That rose as stars rise, in the evening sky;
Only to sink as vanished dreams that perished,
When they were brightest, shining but to die:
Only a little while.

A little while! 'tis not in vain with mourning,
We lay those cherished hopes and dreams aside:
'Tis not in vain they vanished in the morning,
For God still liveth, and the world is wide:
Only a little while.

A little while to quaff the cup of sadness,
The cross to carry ere the crown we win;
A few more tears, then, oh! to see with gladness
The gates of heaven swing wide to let us in:
Only a little while.

LESSONS FOR EARNEST STUDENTS OF THE BIBLE.—No. 63.

BAPTISM.

"He that believeth and is baptised shall be saved." Mark xv. 15, 16.

Q. Is baptism necessary to salvation?

A. Yes. All persons who have arrived at the age of understanding must hear the gospel, believe it, repent of their sins and be baptised in order to be saved.

Q. But if I believe the gospel and repent of my sins, will not the Lord forgive my sins and save me without being baptised?

A. After Paul's conversion he was commanded to be baptised, and wash away his sins. If Paul could not get rid of his sins until after he was baptised, how can you expect to get rid of yours before you are baptised? Acts 22, 16.

Q. How can I become a child of God?

A. By being born into the family of God. You became a member of your father's family by being born into it. To become a member of your Heavenly Father's family you must be born into it.

Q. What am I to understand by God's family, as you use it in your last answer?

A. It is God's Church. As many of you as have been baptised into Christ have put on Christ. And if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise. Gal. 3. 27–29.

Q. What do you mean by being born into the family of God?

A. Jesus said to Nicodemus, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. John 3. 5. These are plain and positive words which cannot be misunderstood.

Q. Can there be a birth without a begettal?

A. No. The begetting must precede the birth.

Q. How are we begotten?

A. By the word of God. Jas. 1. 18; 1 Cor. 4. 15.

Q. If I understand you, I must first hear the gospel, then believe it and repent of my sins. I would then be in a proper condition to be baptised. Is that right?

A. Yes, that is right, that is the begetting.

Q. You say I must be born of water?

A. Yes—that is what Jesus Christ said.

Q. But tell me, how can I be born of water?

A. The very act of being baptised, would be a public confession on your part, that you had renounced the world with all its sins and follies. Thus you die to the world. If you have been in the habit of visiting saloons, gambling houses and other places of wickedness, you will never be seen in such places any more. You would be as dead to those places as though you were actually dead and buried. The [illegible] take you literally bury you in water. The air which sustains your life, would be cut off. You cease to breathe for an instant. If you should never be resurrected from your watery grave, you would remain dead. But the minister brings you forth from out your watery grave, and you would thus be born, brought forth, from the water, and would henceforth be a child of God. Having been baptised into Christ, your sins would then be washed away and you would be a babe in Christ, one of his last born children.

Q. How should the elder children treat those who are only babes in Christ?

A. With great tenderness and care: ever leading them in the paths of truth and soberness, and away from their former sinful associates and associations.

Q. Is there anything to learn after I am baptised?

A. Yes. One of the very last things which Jesus said to his disciples was this: Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you. Matt. 28. 19, 20. You see there is much to learn after baptism. We are also commanded to Grow in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord.

All Christians have three births, before they get into the kingdom:

1. They are born into their father's family.

2. They are born into God's family, the Church, by being baptised.

3. They are born of the Spirit by being resurrected, or changed from mortality to immortality.

If they are never born the first time they will certainly never get into the kingdom. If they are never born of the Spirit they will certainly be left out. If the first and third births are absolutely necessary to obtain a home in the kingdom, how can we omit the second, and still claim an entrance there, when Jesus said, in language that cannot be misunderstood, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. John 3. 5.

May the Lord help us to be prepared to meet him when he comes in glory.

China and America Warned.

Last year the great Yellow River of China overflowed its banks and swept over one of the most fertile and populous provinces of that densely packed land, drowning many thousands of people and leaving hundreds of thousands destitute of any means of support. The people of America heard of this terrible visitation and many of them sent help to the sufferers. But alas! the tendency of what are called "American ideas" is to shut out all foreigners from our sympathies; and the Chinese are not only foreigners but are looked upon as a peculiarly odious class of foreigners. The amount of practical sympathy which was excited by their sufferings was, therefore, probably very small outside of the circle of those interested in mission work in the Flowery Kingdom. But now a similar blow has fallen right at home, and very near the center of population of this country, where it will be equally felt by the people in all sections. There, God has with trumpet voice sounded out a call for sympathy with human suffering. The overflow of the Conemaugh calls aloud to the people of this whole nation to remember that the individual is, after all, only one member of the body and that a self-seeking life is a mean life. We may well hope that many a man who, immersed in the cares of business and struggles for success, has forgotten this truth, will be awaked by the news of so great a calamity to a truer view of life's mission and a nobler sphere of action.

There is another great purpose which this flood is calculated to achieve, and that is to bring before people's minds the sin of not heeding a warning of approaching danger. The people of Johnstown were warned early in the day that the dam might give way, but they had heard of that danger for years and had got accustomed to it, so they paid no attention to the warning until the flood came, and then it was too late. It is easy to see now how foolish they were, but are not the vast majority of Americans imitating that folly with regard to a much more certain and terrible danger?

"As in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came and took them all away, so shall the coming of the Son of man be."

SAT[illegible] 18, was our second day in Jerusalem, and we were able to put in another heavy day's work. After visiting the post office and the money-changers, and attending to various minor matters, we paid a visit, under the escort of a Turkish soldier, to the Mosque of Omar. First of all, take notice that the space, a part of which is occupied by the Mosque, is called Haram Esh-Sherif and occupies about thirty-six acres, while the raised platform on which the Mosque stands contains an area of about six acres. The Mosque of Omar occupies, without much doubt, the very spot where the temple stood. Also it is supposed that here Ornan had his threshing floor, Abraham offered Isaac, and David interceded for the plague-stricken people. The "Dome of the Rock" is the title given to the highest point, directly under the dome of the Mosque of Omar, and here was the summit of Mount Moriah. The bare rock is still seen under the dome, and it is supposed that here was the altar of burnt sacrifice, a conduit to conduct the blood (probably) to the Valley of Hinnom on the east, being still visible. Everything about the temple area is marvelously beautiful and intensely interesting. What a pity this beautiful spot could not be under the control of some purely spiritual denomination of Christians, so that, like Westminster Abbey, the thousands of pilgrims who visit here could be freed from the numerous evidences of degraded superstition which abound here now under the domination of the Turks.

The Mosque of Omar is octagonal, its sides being sixty-seven feet. It is costly and beautiful. There are four entrances facing the cardinal points of the compass. The inside is dark, and only on bright days can a fair view be obtained. There are fifty-six stained glass windows of great brilliancy and beauty. The dome is ninety-eight feet high and sixty-six in diameter. The pavement is of marble mosaic. The rock under the dome, the most interesting object in the Mosque, is nearly five feet above the pavement at its highest point. There is a cave beneath the rock about six feet high, not very large. Numberless traditions are related concerning this building and surroundings, relating more especially to Mohammed's visit here.

Within the area of the Haram there is another Mosque, called the Mosque El-Aksa. It was probably once a Christian church in the days when the Christians controlled the city and country. It is supposed to have been erected by the Emperor Justinian. Everything about it now betokens the presence of the Mohammedans. The pulpit is especially worthy of note. It is made of the wood of the cedars of Lebanon, exquisitely carved, and inlaid with ivory and mother-of-pearl. It was made at Damascus by a native of Aleppo, and was brought here by Saladin. Near the pulpit is shown the praying place of Moses, and not far away may be seen the footstep of Christ.

From the southeastern corner of the Haram we descend thirty-two steps to a room called the Cradle of Christ, and from here we descend still further to Solomon's stables. In 2 Kings iv. 26, it is said, "Solomon had forty thousand stalls of horses for his chariots." His palace must have been near here, this place was used for stalls by the Knight Templars. The rings to which their horses were attached may still be seen. Here may be seen how the valleys were levelled up to make the vast platform for the Temple.

Many objects of interest will be seen before leaving the Haram. On the east may be seen the Mount of Olives, the Garden of Gethsemane, and the Valley of Jehoshophat. Here is the Golden Gate, the Beautiful Gate of the Temple, where Peter and John cured the lame man.

Here is another Mosque, smaller, called the Throne of Solomon. Here also are foundations supposed to be the wall belonging to the Fortress of Antonia. Also a marble fountain called El Kas, beneath which are vast reservoirs, into which the water from the Pools of Solomon were brought. Just outside the wall of the Haram is the immense pool called the Pool of Bethesda. It is now used as a dumping ground for the offal of the city. On our way out, we pass St. Stephen's gate, on the east side of the city; also the church of St. Anne, the mother of the Virgin (here the Virgin was born, according to Catholic tradition), the Hospital of the Knights of St. John. Here are a church and monastery, and service is performed every Sunday by the German Protestants. Many of the old buildings are in ruins, and extensive excavations are being made here, as well as in the area controlled by the owners of the Church of St. Anne. In other [illegible] fully [illegible] view. Fa[illegible] of the city streets [illegible] streets and cisterns, showing that if the site of the city could be thoroughly uncovered, many strange things would be brought to light.

I have been able to give here only the barest outline of our forenoon's work. The complete report of what we saw would make a volume.

A HORSEBACK RIDE THROUGH PALESTINE.

March 26 proved the longest ride of our journey, so far. We left Jerusalem in the early morning, going on to Hebron and back to Solomon's Pools, where we camped. The road was good, but crooked and long, while the day was hot. Whatever people spent money to make a road, or such a good road, through such a barren country, I can't see. It is nothing in the world but a succession of stone piles, with an occasional streak of soil. But for all that, they are trying their best to farm it. I saw nothing growing, so can't say how they succeed. At 12:30 we lunched, literally beneath "the shadow of a mighty rock within a weary land." In the first place, we had the "mighty rock" right enough, and it was in "a weary land," if ever I have been in one. The air is very clear, but there is something about it that makes me either tired or lazy, I don't know which, sometimes. Close to us a beautiful clear spring ran out from the almost solid rock. I never saw so much beauty in clear, cold water, as during this trip. In such a lifeless country it is the very emblem and essence of all life. After resting for an hour, we went on, reaching Hebron about 3 o'clock. It is situated in the narrow valley of Eshcol, where Joshua's spies found the large bunches of grapes. They have still plenty of vines, but I can't say as to the grapes. It is supposed that about 12,000 people live here. If they are as thick in other parts as where we were I am quite prepared to believe it. They were as thick as three in a bed and one in the middle. If there is a dirtier spot in creation, where people try to live, I never want to strike it. The streets were simply reeking with the filthiest dirt you ever heard of. How or why people live in such a place, I can't tell. They were also the most uncivil lot we have seen. They crowded around us in great numbers, and treated us in a very [illegible] manner. I took it upon myself to keep order while some of our party were reading a description of the Cave of Machpelah, and came nearly getting the whole lot into a row. Several [illegible] were thrown, but we hurried away as soon as we could conveniently, and so escaped any damage. I felt a sigh of relief when I got on my horse at the outskirts of the town. But what did we go to Hebron for? Well, I certainly wanted to see the modern town, though I never want to see it again, I must confess; but above all I wanted to see for the sake of its Bible associations, being rich in sacred memories. It is thought by some that Hebron is an older city than Damascus; at all events, it was 2300 years old when Joseph wrote nearly 2000 years ago. But more than all else, Hebron is noted as the home and burial place of Abraham, "the friend of God." Though this was his home, yet he had "none inheritance in it; no, not so much as to set his foot on." So when Sarah, his beloved wife, "died in Kirjath-Arba," which "is Hebron in the land of Canaan," he came to mourn for her, and "stood up from before his dead and spake unto the sons of Heth, saying, I am a stranger and a sojourner with you; give me a possession of a burying place with you that I may bury my dead out of my sight." The bargain was sealed with some of Abraham's gold, and he "buried Sarah, his wife in the cave of the field of Machpelah." In course of time "Abraham gave up the ghost, and died at a good old age" and was buried in the same place. Years after, when Jacob lay dying in Egypt, surrounded by all the glories of one of the richest monarchs the world has ever seen, his last thoughts turned to this sacred spot. He reminded them that it was the burial place of Abraham and Sarah, Isaac and Rebekah, and that there he had buried Leah, and as a last request desired them to bury him with his fathers. I don't think it will much matter where we are buried, but there is something so tender in "these requests" that but few will disregard them. We may smile at Jacob's sentiment, but the majority of people, if they were to consult their own minds, have preferences of some kind in this respect. Whenever I think of death in regard to myself, my mind invariably turns to a quiet country grave-yard in Ohio. When a mere child I saw a little [illegible] to be buried in some [illegible] but sentiment says now, "bury me among the green hills of my native land." Let me see, I was speaking about Jacob I believe. Joseph did not forget the request of his honored father, and it must have been a grand funeral when he "with all the servants of Pharaoh, the elders of his house, and all the elders of the land of Egypt, and all the house of Joseph and his brethren, and his father's house; and chariots and horsemen" carried the body from Egypt into the land of Canaan to the cave of Machpelah. This cave is no longer in a field, but is now covered with a mosque of large, massive stones standing in the midst of the dirty town of which I have spoken. Tradition says that the building was erected by Solomon while King of Israel, while the bevel on the stones does not point to a Jewish origin. There is no doubt among the scholars but what this is the resting place of the patriarchs. The door of the mosque was ajar, but it would have been about all our lives were worth to have gone in. Only about a dozen "Christian dogs" have ever been permitted to cross the threshold of the building. It is the only remaining "sacred place" among the Mohammedans where "backsheesh" won't take a man, and I expect that it would take him here if he only knew how to go about it. It requires an order from the Sultan of Turkey to get in, in the ordinary way, and as we had not an order of this kind, we had to content ourselves by looking at the outside. On our way back we passed through another part of the town and saw some more of its filth. In the center of the town are two large pools walled up with masonry. Nobody knows who made them, and nobody about the place seems to care. One thing I know is that they are dirty. Stone steps lead down to the water, and on these, the women stood up to their knees in the water, washing their feet and then filling their jugs for home consumption. About a dozen men and boys were swimming in it at the same time, while it was swarming with animal life. It made me half sick to look at it, and I think it would have half killed me to drink the water. On our way back we went out of our way a little to visit Abraham's Oak, a short distance from Hebron, where it is said he pitched his tent when he "entertained the angels unawares." The whole thing seems so doubtful, if not improbable, that I found no pleasure in going to it. However, I got some acorns and am going to grow an "Abraham's Oak" of my own. I am a little doubtful whether the acorns I got grew on the tree, but I bought them when under it, so that will do just as well, I reckon. We got back to our tents at Solomon's Pools at just 6 o'clock. Dinner was ready, and I was glad, for I was fearfully hungry. There is something about the climate that makes me hungry as well as lazy. For this I am thankful, as we have plenty to eat. It's a bad thing to be hungry even in the Holy Land with nothing to eat.

Our tent was pitched close to Solomon's Pools, in company with sixteen other tents, containing a party of twenty-five Americans, among them being five ladies. Four-fifths of the travellers we have met in Palestine have been from the United States. These pools are simply three large cisterns of stone and cement masonry. They are irregular in shape, but the following are the longest, widest and deepest measurements: Upper pool, 380 feet long, 236 feet wide and 25 feet deep; middle pool, 423 feet long, 250 feet wide, and 39 feet deep; lower pool, 582 feet long, 207 feet wide and 50 feet deep. There is but little doubt but that these pools were built to supply water to the Temple in Jerusalem, as the aqueduct can be distinctly traced directly to the dome of the rock. At the present time water is only conveyed as far as Bethlehem. Some have thought that the pools were built for irrigating the surrounding country. I think that the presence of the aqueduct leading to the site of the Temple would not be favorable to this conclusion; and then I saw nothing in the neighborhood to irrigate but rocks, and it strikes me that it would take a lot of water to make them produce much. Some think that the delightful gardens described in Songs iv. 12–15 were situated here. I don't know what this place might have been in the days of Solomon's glory, but from a human standpoint it would be impossible to make a garden here now. I know that human labor and enterprise can do much in the garden line, with a little sunshine, water and soil; but here the soil is almost entirely wanting. Four of our party, including myself, had a swim in the middle pool. The water was fearfully cold and I was glad to get out. The [illegible] intact, there being [illegible] a break in the cemented sides. People boast a lot about their Portland cement, but it is nothing in comparison with that used in building the water-works of Jerusalem. We left our camp at the pools at about 9 o'clock, making an easy day of it to Mar Saba, on the way to the Dead Sea and the Jordan. We had to go back through Bethlehem where we were joined by an extra guard, as the Jordan valley is supposed to be dangerous. At a distance our new protector looked wild and savage, but, like the towns of Palestine, he would not bear close inspection. His horse was small and had a stump tail, while his own trappings were of the crudest kind. I felt as though I wanted another man to watch this one. Our camp at Mar Saba was in the wildest and most desolate place we have yet seen. Notwithstanding that we had a guard, I felt very insecure. In the evening shortly after our arrival, having an introduction from the American Consul at Jerusalem, we visited the Convent at Mar Sheba, built in the solid rock on the edge of the brook Kidron. Apart from the building and its death-like surroundings, it is one of the most ghastly places I have ever seen. Many years ago the so-called Persian hordes cleaned the establishment out, and cut off the heads of all the old fossils in the place, and I think they would do the world a service if they would call again and repeat the dose. I don't want to encourage rapine and murder, but some people, it seems to me, are too worthless to live, and the sooner the world gets rid of them, the better. How ever men get such an idea of religion I can't conceive. The building, though, was well worth a visit, as it is one of the curiosities of the country. We left our camp this morning at 6:30, having a long day before us, and desiring to spend some time at the Dead Sea and Jordan. Shortly after leaving our camp, we passed through some of the wildest and most savage scenery of our trip so far. There was such a peculiar sort of blue mist, and stillness, hanging over the place; the rocks and hills were so barren, and the valleys so deep and mysterious-looking, that it filled me with awe, and a fearful sort of feeling that we might be nearing the jumping-off place. About 8:30, from the top of a rugged hill, we obtained a view that I will venture to say is unique in the way of natural scenery. Before us was the great chain of mountains of Moab, like a great blue wall; just at our feet, apparently, was that "great and melancholy marvel," the Dead Sea, while the course of the Jordan could be distinctly traced by the green line of foliage running through the death-like valley. At 9 o'clock we thought we would be on the shores of the sea in a few minutes, but we kept on going up one hill and down another, in and out of little valleys and gorges, until 11:30, before we reached the water's edge. The Dead Sea and its surroundings is the most perfect picture of death and desolation I have ever seen, and I do not wonder much at the many wild legends which have been told about it. The very air seems full of mystery. Of course many of these legends have been exploded, but there is an awfulness about the place which fills one with silent awe. It makes one think that the smoke of the fire and brimstone which destroyed Sodom and Gomorrah has not yet entirely cleared away, and that it would not take much to bring down another shower. The sea is 1,300 feet below the Mediterranean, and is consequently the lowest body of water in the world. The idea that the water contains no animal life has been verified by the most careful analysis, but the notion that birds could not fly over its deadly waters is exploded in my mind, at least, as I saw some very healthy-looking crows flying from side to side. It is needless to say that we had a bath in the sea, and a most peculiar experience it was. The water is as clear as crystal, but so full of salt and other matter of a similar kind, that the body of a man simply floats on the top. We found it difficult to swim, as we simply bobbed around on the top like a cork. I tried to stand up in the water, and succeeded a few times in getting on the perpendicular, when I found half of my body sticking out of the water. The sensation while in the water was very pleasant as long as I could keep it out of my eyes; but I had not been out of the water a minute when I felt as though I had been electrotyped, and in two minutes I found my whole body covered with great scales of salt. I tell you, I literally felt in a "pickle." But I have written enough for one letter, and will conclude until another time.—A. B. Maston, in Indianian-Republican.

B. Wilson has changed his address to Oleander, California. Correspondents take notice.

Can a man drink moderately depends upon the man, and upon drink. Probably many of the compounds which are sold today under the names of rum, brandy, etc., can not be habitually taken in moderation for any length of time by any one. They poison the blood, craze the brain, and while the man supposes he is on the firm ground of moderation, he finds himself knee-deep in the quicksands of disease and drunkenness. Some men can drink moderately; so some horses might run away with a wagon moderately—that is those who are too lazy to go more than five miles an hour—but would that justify a blackguard in exploding fire-crackers at the heels of a race-horse? Some men are like a race-horse, and that which moderately excites a sluggish man, starts them on the race of death with whirlwind speed. They are full of nerve; their brain takes fire; they can no more drink rum moderately than they can burn a powder magazine moderately. Many of these old steady-going moderate drinkers, transmit their perverted appetites to their children, but do not transmit to them their sluggish constitutions, to enable them to endure its indulgence, Rev. Dr. Newell, of New York, said: "He knew of a father of that city who had eight sons. He said to them: 'Drink moderately, my sons, and it will be well with you; in immoderate drinking lies the danger.' The father lived a moderate drinker, but his sons became sots, and forty of his descendants had found drunkard's graves." Moderate drinkers, sweeten your next glass with that fact!

In the highlands of frozen Caucasus, says Dr. Felix L. Oswald, the strictly temperate followers of the prophet chieftain, Shamyl, resisted for twenty-three years the military forces of the enormous Muscovite Empire. Without powder enough to load their guns, or food enough to keep their horses alive, those temperance-steeled athletes beat their aggressors in every fight where there valor was not overmatched by too hopeless a disparity of numbers. Year after year while army corps of brandy-fuddled Muscovites invaded the hamlets of the heroic highlanders and as often were hurled back like dogs from the lair of a wounded panther. One million Russian soldiers are known to have perished in that war of races, and the highland tribes would have maintained their independence even after their food supplies had been reduce to beechnuts and water, if their able-bodied men had not been almost entirely exterminated, for when Shamyl was at last surrounded and captured on the plateau of Ghunib the levies of the sixteen clans had dwindled to three-score ragged and scar-covered skeletons.

A London letter to a New York paper says: "In view of the recent extensive purchases of American breweries by the English syndicate, it will be interesting for beer drinkers in that country to know that investigations have developed the fact that 'flowers of Benjamin' is being extensively used to doctor the invigorating beverage in London breweries. Flowers of Benjamin is a sweet sounding name for benzoic acid, which is guaranteed to destroy the mucous lining of the drinker's stomach with delightful rapidity. There is, however, a dearth of benzoic acid in the market just now and very little gum-benzoic is used in proportion to other ingredients. It is principally got from the putrid urine of horses and cows and other abominations which the brewer mixes with pure water and retails at 1200 per cent. profit.

The Two Dakotas—South and North.

Public attention is now, more than ever, directed to these two new States of the Union. Climate, soil and opportunities for investment of capital, are unexcelled by any other section of the Great West. The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co., which has lines of its own in both South and North Dakota, has just issued an illustrated pamphlet entitled "Plain Facts about Dakota" containing numerous letters from farmers and others which are well worth reading, as they show the results of each writer's personal experience in the North-West, and convey a great deal of valuable and reliable information which will be of benefit for those seeking new homes in South and North Dakota. For a free copy of this pamphlet address A. V. H. Carpenter, General Passenger Agt., Milwaukee, Wis. dec31 tf

The Baptist Chautauqua will be held at LaPorte, Ind., from June 16th to Oct. 31st. The L. E. & W. R. R. will sell tickets at one fare for the round trip.

THE OPEN DOOR.

"I am the door."—John x. 9.

The mistakes of my life are many,
The sins of my heart are more,
And I scarce can see for weeping,
But I come to the open door.

I am lowest of those who love him
I am weakest of those who pray,
But I'm coming as he has bidden,
And he will not say me "Nay."

My mistakes his love will cover,
My sins he will wash away,
And the feet that shrink and falter,
Shall walk through the gates of day.

If I turn not from his whisper,
If I let not go his hand,
I shall see him in his beauty,
The King in the far-off land.

The mistakes of my life are many,
And my soul is sick with sin,
And I scarce can see for weeping,
But the Lord will let me in.

Communications.

MICA-PEN NOTES.

Is it possible that in writing freely, honestly, and with, (in intention) scrupulous fidelity to the right and truth, I cast the slightest shadow of regret upon any mind? I hope not. And yet no one could criticise another perhaps, more sharply than I sometimes criticise myself; not so much for not having written what is not faithful, as upon some question of aptness or advisableness. I am therefore, perhaps even over much, sometimes my own assailant.

Some years ago I wrote articles on the Great Pyramid, mostly citations and abbreviations from the works of Piazzi Smith, part of which were published in pamphlet form. All know, who have given the subject attention that the Grand Gallery's length by inch measurement seemed to indicate something of importance chronologically in 1881-2. Last evening I had a cheerful and hearty conversation with my amiable and venerable friend of about eighty of age, Mr. George Rose.

It is easy and satisfying to talk with him, because he is so friendly and candid, so genial and considerate. I mentioned to him the chronological faculty or feature of the G. P., and I suggested the point made by a great statistician, who locates the rise of the labor trouble colossus, at the Great Pyramid date. And I have never lost sight, even for a moment, of the probable prophetic issue. Organizations and orders may individually wax or wane, but they continue and multiply. Agitation is never suspended, and when a leader comes, and when union and consolidation come,—then there may be a potency that shall be startling. What I said in part at least, to my friend Rose, was about like this. "Why there is a preacher not far off, of whom I asked some explanation upon a point in Revelation—and he said—'I don't understand that book.' What? Is it that a minister shall have no idea of the meaning of a Revelation? A book designed for instruction and education in the mysteries and wisdom of God? Now, our Lord says in Luke, that there shall be "perplexity—with the sea and waves roaring." Keep in mind Great Pyramid chronology. And what had we in 1883? "The great waves 40 feet high, that swept the shores of Sunda Strait after the Krakatoa explosion, drowned it is believed, over 40,000 people"—and the loss of life by the overflow of the Yellow River in China in 1888, has been estimated at one million human beings. Was not our Lord a prophet proven authentic by the correspondence of such events with the prophecy of the Messianic great pentagon of stone in Egypt? Between these two terrible inundations, there intervenes the notable period of five years. Now we have a flood or floods in America destroying about 6000 lives and one hundred millions of property. Did the great surge that started from the South Fork reservoir lack aught of fidelity to the photograph? Its outburst was with a tremendous explosive force and the sound of thunder, and it rolled down the valley with lofty white crest, and a bulk appalling—and a speed that no living thing on earth, could equal. And notable it is, that the word thalassa, rendered sea, does not signify the ocean only. It may apply to an inland sea or lake. And there have been various such catastrophes, of late, only less gigantic and destructive. And what if there should be others?

But agitation of nations and races which the sea prophetically symbolizes, is also obvious enough. Prophecies are often two-fold in meaning and application. I think no one can fail to notice the wide-spreading simmering making Paris a grand center of attraction is suspicious, because it is as likely as not to be a pre-token of upheaval. Almost all agree that war must come with Germany, and while wars and wars are imminent, there is always the possibility of revolution, and with or without revolution, socialistic confederation.

It is noteworthy, and not so very singular, either, that a Protestant minister recently insisted that it would be a great pity for the Catholic Church and power to be abolished—because it held the ignorant and uneasy masses in restraint. And the "Springfield Union" confirms the opinion. It is even declared that were the Romish Church to fall, several American states must likewise fall, simply from the removal of a powerful restraint. And yet what does prophecy teach? Most emphatically it teaches the fall of Babylon—even with a crash—a fatal incurable fall. And what is Babylon? Non-Romish interpretation, at least includes Rome and her ecclesiasticism in Babylon, and in fact most interpretation defines Babylon simply and literally Rome and Romanism. And even a child may read that after Babylon comes yet something significant; nay Babylon becomes a habitation and a haunt of demons and things unclean and hateful. I see the arguments by which the wild beast and the pope are made practically identical, but it is one of the greatest wonders that the order of events is so overlooked; so it seems to me. For I never can forget amid all the prolonged insistence of prophecies so exhausted in the papacy, as asserted—I never can forget the three grand flights and cries of angels. First I see, or think I see an abreption of saints, which marks the hour of judgment. Then Babylon goes down, and then comes the short, worst of all fatalities—an organized power, and one man idolatry. That is the order, and it seems plain enough.

Now without pretending to be overwise, it seems to me we are in a period of change and portent, with wars imminent and revolution incubating. Nearly all orthodoxy, and nearly all world-wisdom may discredit and reject such ideas. He who advocates them need not expect to be a favorite. The world-love is strong. The world-hope and world-faith, so to speak, are controlling. Supernaturalism is not wanted. The charm and chain of progress hold men as in a dream. Forward is the cry. How, forward? To get gain and multiply revenues. How forward? To multiply inventions, to make more conquests, and to fill the world with monuments and manufactures, to magnify the pleasure and glory of the present and the material. But Christ is King. All things need re-ordering. Destruction and death are always ready and always busy. Step by step, and side by side, with the forward march of enterprise, in the other never-failing "forward" of energies swift and potent to make wreck and havoc, and in an appalling way fire adds its virulence to wind and flood and train-wrecks.

In an article on the order of Clan-na-Gael, with its secret plotting of assassinations, the Springfield Republican says "This is only one of the numerous evidences of a decided and alarming decline in the tone of public life." The same paper, one of the most conservative in the country, says, "The French government is alarmed that sixty-nine societies, meeting in the Trocadero, to discuss scientific questions, are either socialistic bodies, or are given to the discussion of labor questions."

And again, "In an address before the 'patriotic sons of America' at Washington, it was said—those un-American organizations are held together by issues of foreign birth for the purpose of perpetuating foreign sentiment, and corrupting the ideals of our fathers. Anarchy, and destruction of all law are openly advocated. The right to enforce discipline on the members of some of these orders, is claimed by secret conclaves, even to the extent of taking human life."

And still immigration goes on comparatively unchecked. The ignorant European hordes pour over the sea, and swarm in the cities. Strange to me, that the gifted and pleasing Mrs. Ellen Foster should publicly say, "Let the people come. We will assimilate them. I have no dread of over-emigration." I do not concur in this view, by any means. Unrestricted emigration, and universal suffrage, are present and pressing perils in this country. Our American liberty is abused to furnish opportunity for conspiracy. The one man power is better, if we have a good man. Such is the great Divine Adamic man—that we look for, and desire. A man to rectify things. The first work due, will be to pull down or Christ is equal, and appointed the way, I said lately, I have a idea. Mrs. C. asked, "What is "You may think me strange, but it is the honest truth. I have just been saying, 'Praise the Lord, and give glory to him,' even if I should die and be dead forever. I would from my heart say the right thing any way, I would say it once before I took my last breath."

Finally, my good friend Rose said—"I am glad you came in. Some of these things I never understood very well."

"Well, there is ever so much to think and talk about. Nearly all prefer to remain in ignorance on the grandest topics. The coming catastrophes are not much believed or preached in modern Christendom. What a snare is enveloping the whole world!"

C. Colegrove.

Comparing Scripture with Scripture.

Matthew and Mark's record of Christ's memorable answer to the Sadducee's objection to the resurrection of the dead, is used by some writers to prove that all the dead, good and bad, will be as the angels at their resurrection. The question of the Sadducees was, whose wife shall she be in the resurrection, of the seven brothers, for they all had her. The answer of Jesus was an appropriate one for all infidels, ancient and modern. "Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of God. For in the resurrection they neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are as the Angels of God in heaven," Matt. xxii. 29, 30. Jesus' words, as recorded by Mark xii. 25 are, "For when they shall rise from the dead, they neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels which are in heaven." This passage taken alone might be supposed to teach that all the dead, without distinction, would be raised at the same time and "be as the angels," at least be in some sense saved.

Nothing is said in the connection in respect to the moral character of those who will be raised and thus become "equal to the angels, to die no more." This passage, taken alone, would not prove a future probation, but it might be thought to prove universal salvation at the resurrection of the "just and unjust." Because those who become as, or equal to the angels, will not only be not married, but will be immortal and die no more,—will be saved in the fullest sense. But the whole of the answer as given by Luke, makes the subject exceedingly plain. Let us compare Scripture with Scripture. And Jesus answering said unto them, the children of this world (age), marry, and are given in marriage. But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world (age), and the resurrection from the dead (ones) or out from the dead ones, neither marry, nor are given in marriage: neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection—that is the children of that resurrection that brings them out from the rest of the dead, or the "first resurrection" "of the blessed and holy"—while the rest of the dead live not again till the bright Millennial years are ended. In order, then, to become glorified and immortal like the angels we must be counted worthy by a Divine and infallible judgment, of the future Millennial Age, and the "better resurrection," and by that resurrection we may be "born again" and become the children of God in a much higher sense than in this mortal life. We must by a patient continuance in well-doing, seek for glory and the honor that cometh from God, and immortality or we cannot put on immortality at "the resurrection of the just." If we sow to the flesh, we shall reap corruption and death—not incorruptible bodies in the great resurrection harvest, if we sow to the Spirit, by a full belief and obedience of the divine word revealed and proved by the Spirit, we shall reap by the almighty power of the Spirit, if life everlasting. Wherever the gospel is given to the world and proclaimed, he that believeth it and is baptized shall be saved, he that believeth not (shall be saved in another sense?) shall be condemned. Paul was willing to be crucified, if by any means, he might attain unto the exanastasis—resurrection out from the dead ones.

BURLINGTON ROUTE.

Cheap Lands in the West.

Along the lines of the BURLINGTON ROUTE in Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming and northwestern Kansas, particularly on its new extensions in that territory, there is still some Government Land awaiting settlement, as well as other cheap land held by individuals. These lands are among the best to be had anywhere in the country for agricultural and grazing purposes. In the comparatively new districts are many improved farms which can be purchased at a very low rate of that class of restless pioneer-settlers who are ready at all times to move "farther west." In the territory embraced by the BURLINGTON'S lines west of the Missouri River, there are in the vicinity of two hundred new towns which offer to manufacturers and business men an excellent opportunity to locate with profit. Send to the undersigned for descriptive pamphlets and other matter giving location and full particulars concerning these lands.

Map of the United States.

A large, handsome Map of the United States, showing North and South Dakota, mounted and suitable for office or home use and issued by the BURLINGTON ROUTE, will be furnished responsible parties free on application to the undersigned.

Stock Raising. Because the favorable climate and superior grasses of Montana make it the natural home of horses, cattle, sheep and other domestic animals; and because winter feeding is not required, as stock grazes at large the year round.

General Farming. Because a rich soil and abundant summer rains produce wheat, oats, rye, barley and the grasses and vegetables of a quality, size and yield unsurpassed.

Mining. Because Montana produces more of the precious metals than any other state or territory, and abundant opportunities remain to secure valuable property at nominal cost.

Investment. Because the Great Reservation is the meeting point of settlers from the Pacific Coast and from the Eastern States, and is the only extensive tract of good land left, suitable for settlement.

Business. Because the rapidly growing towns along the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Ry. offer splendid opportunities to engage in business.

Manufacture. Because the 1,000,000 horse-power water-power at Great Falls, the extensive coal veins, the wool, mineral and grain raising resources of Montana offer exceptional opportunities to the manufacturer.

Tourist. Because the canon of the Gates of the Mountains, the Great Falls of the Missouri, the Giant Fountain and Continental Divide offer the most sublime and diversified scenery to be found on the Continent. Take a summer tour.

Why Travel by the St. P., M. & M.? Because only by it can you travel through the largest body of free land left for settlement. Because it reaches the Great Falls, with the largest water-power on the Continent. Because it reaches Helena, the richest city of its size in the world; and because it is the shortest and best route to Butte, the largest mining camp on earth. The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXVIII. Read PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, AUGUST 14, 1889. NO. 30.

THE RESTITUTION

The Restitution advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Modern Criticism in Relation to the Four Gospels and the Messiahship.

Number 7.

It is worthy of mention here that our Lord taught his disciples a lesson as to the power by which his claim to the Messiahship should be enforced. They possessed two swords, and Peter, in the excitement of the moment when his Master was being apprehended, "drew his sword and struck a servant of the high priest, and smote off his ear. Then said Jesus unto him, Put up again thy sword into his place; for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword. Thinkest thou that I cannot pray to my Father, and he shall presently give more than twelve legions of angels." As much as to say that when the time comes for the assertion of his claim, there shall not be wanting the means of its enforcement.

After this reply to the first question, Pilate asked another—"Art thou a king then?" To which Jesus replied—"Thou sayest that I am a King. To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world that I should bear witness unto the truth." There is here the same affirmative reply to Pilate's question as we found recorded by the other three evangelists. We are here pointed to the inquiry of the wise men at his birth. "Where is he that is born King of the Jews?" These men were guided from the east to Jerusalem by a God-appointed star, and their subsequent experience shows that they were directed by the same high authority how they should avoid the wrath of Herod the king. Their inquiry, therefore, confirms the entire evidence already gone into concerning the Israelitish character of Christ's kingdom; and is in its turn confirmed by the words of Jesus to Pilate—"to this end was I born." His allusion to his coming into the world to bear witness to the truth, is in precise accordance with his own description of the mission he was charged with. At the outset of his ministry he said—"I must preach the Kingdom of God; for therefore am I sent." And his witnessing reached its climax at the judgment-seat of Pilate; for the apostle Paul informs us that "Christ Jesus before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession." The truth he bore witness to, therefore, was not truth in the abstract, but "the truth" concerning his Kingship and his kingdom.

I have referred to the popularity of Jesus with the people. It may be again mentioned here that this was put forth as the pretext for his death by the Sanhedrim, on the plea that an insurrection was imminent. "What do we? for this man doeth many miracles. If we leave him thus alone, all men will believe on him, and the Romans shall come and take away both our place and nation." And when Pilate would have set him at liberty the chief priests instigated the Jews to cry out—"If thou let this man go thou art not Cæsar's friend: whosoever maketh himself a king speaketh against Cæsar." This settled the question with Pilate; for when he "heard that saying, he brought Jesus forth," etc. And to crown the malignity of his accusers, they renounced any remnant of patriotism they may have possessed by responding to the final appeal of the governor—"Shall I crucify your King?"—"We have no king but Cæsar!" Whatever misgivings may have possessed the mind of Pilate in regard to his delivering Jesus to be crucified, he would feel that in the eye of the law he was safe. He had the testimony of the Jewish authorities to support his sentence if it should ever be called in question.

This naturally leads us to notice another notable mark of unity in regard to this subject in the four gospels. It was the custom to affix the accusation for which criminals were executed, to the cross over their heads. In Judæa this was written in three languages current among the people, namely, Hebrew, Greek, and Latin. This is recorded by all four evangelists, and that in terms though varying slightly from each other, yet all agree in expressing the accusation for which he was condemned.

Matthew's account is—This is Jesus the King of the Jews:

Mark's—The King of the Jews:

Luke's—This is the King of the Jews:

John's—Jesus of Nazareth the King of the Jews.

Only Luke and John mention the circumstance of this accusation being written in three languages. Luke placing Greek first then Latin and Hebrew; John placing Hebrew first then Greek and Latin. They also differ slightly in the term they apply to it. Matthew calls it "his accusation;" Mark, "the superscription of his accusation;" Luke, "a superscription;" and John, simply "a title." But they all agree in recording the words which formed the substance of the charge—"The King of the Jews." The probability is that John's is literally exact; for he was present. It is he only who records the town of Nazareth as the place by which Jesus was known. And only he and Matthew record the name of Jesus. Matthew who was one of the twelve may have seen the title though not actually present at the crucifixion. Mark and Luke were not apostles and wrote only from information received from others, and may not have considered it necessary to be literally exact in such a matter.

It is worthy of note also that the Jews were not satisfied with the title; and wished Pilate to alter it. They said, "Write not, the King of the Jews; but that he said, 'I am King of the Jews.'" But "Pilate answered, What I have written I have written." They seemed to have viewed the title as too much like the statement of a truth; but their request to have it changed came too late, or was too much for the dignity of the representative of Rome. And so the truth has been handed down to the present time, and that not only in the pages of the fourth gospel, but [illegible] of art in which the crucifixion has been depicted; in which the initial letters of the principal words of the Latin as recorded by John, are to be seen affixed to the cross—I. N. R. I. JESUS NAZARENUS REX ILLE-JUDÆORUM.

These concurring deliverances from the four gospels (which by the way may all be considered synoptical as regards the official character of the Christship, and its distinctive function of Kingship of the Jews) may be fitly supplemented by a few strongly corroborative and illustrative statements contained in Matthew and Luke.

I have already quoted instances of the recognition of the official nature of the Messiahship occurring at the time of our Lord's birth. The Kingly element of that office is no less clearly intimated at the same early period.

Passing over with simple mention the fact that Matthew opens his gospel with the statement that Jesus Christ is the Son of David—"The book of the generation of Jesus Christ the son of David, and the son of Abraham," and keeping in mind that David was the King of Israel by the direct choice of God—"the man after God's own heart," in this respect—we come to the angelic announcement to Mary prior to the birth of Jesus. It is in these terms—"Fear not, Mary; for thou hast found favor with God; and behold thou shalt conceive in the womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Here we have what in substance was confessed by Nathaniel thirty years after—"Thou art the Son of God, thou art the King of Israel." And also what was confessed by our Lord himself before Pilate three years later still, and for confessing which he was condemned to death. Besides Kingship over specified subjects we have an element of very special import superadded—"the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David." As David's son he was to succeed to David's throne. The fact that he is now seated on Jehovah's throne in heaven, cannot be accepted as a fulfilment of this promise, because that throne never was the throne of David. True, David's throne was the throne of Jehovah on the earth; but God's throne in heaven was never shared with David or any other of the human family. The session of Jesus at the Father's right hand is therefore unique. And, according to the letter to the Hebrews, only temporary. "This man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins for ever, sat down on the right hand of God, from henceforth expecting till his enemies be made his footstool." Then he exchanges his Father's throne for his own peculiar heritage as David's son. He distinguishes between these two thrones in his letter to the church at Laodicea as recorded in the Revelation—"To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne." The late Ridley Herschell, minister of a congregation of converted Jews in London, referring to this promise to Mary, in a lecture delivered in Edinburgh in 1855—says, "Now comes the third prediction. This has not been fulfilled, and forthwith we find out at once that we must adopt some very refined theological definition—the throne of David means the heart of man, the reign over the house of Jacob means his spiritual Israel. What must we come to if an angel does not mean what he says.... If an angel from heaven coming, not to a school of divinity students and philosophers, but to a simple Jewish maid, tells her she should bear a son, and it is so; that he shall be great, and it is so, though not to the full extent, that he shall be called the Son of the Highest, and we find that it is so; and again, that he shall sit on the throne of David, and we are told it shall not be so. Whether I can understand it or not I am constrained to receive it in its plain meaning. And farther, has not Mary been singled out as of the house of David? What could she know, but that it was spoken [illegible] And what would she conceive the house of Jacob to mean but the twelve tribes restored to Palestine, which is in exact accordance with the plain predictions of the prophets, with which she was doubtless familiar."

The prophetic utterances of Mary herself confirm Mr. Herschell's view of the literal sense as the true one. In that "Magnificat" so regularly recited or sung by congregations of the Roman Catholic and Episcopal Communions, there occur these anticipatory expressions of her faith in the mission of her expected son:

"My soul doth magnify the Lord
And my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Savior.

. . . .

He hath shewed strength with his arm
He hath scattered the proud in the imagination of their hearts.

He hath put down the mighty from their seats,
And exalted them of low degree.
He hath holpen his servant Israel in remembrance of his mercy,
As he spake to our fathers, To Abraham and his seed forever."

The exaltation of "the house of Jacob" is here distinctly connected with the subjugation of those by whom they were oppressed at that time, the Romans.

The same hope is expressed by Zecharias, the father of John the Baptist, on the occasion of the birth of the forerunner of the Christ. "He was filled with the Holy Ghost and prophesied, saying,

Blessed be the Lord God of Israel,
For he hath visited and redeemed his people;
And hath raised up an horn of salvation for us
In the house of his servant David.
As he spake by the mouth of his holy prophets
Which have been since the world began:
That we should be saved from our enemies,
And from the hand of all that hate us.
To perform the mercy promised to our fathers,
And to remember his holy covenant,
The oath which he sware to our father Abraham;
That he would grant unto us,
That we being delivered out of the hand of our enemies
Might serve him without fear
In holiness and righteousness before him all the days of our life."

Here again, the deliverance of Israel from their enemies is the chief theme of Zecharias in his anticipations of this "horn of salvation" raised up for them in the house of David.

A Trip to the Northwest.—No. 5.

As all the sheep and oxen belong to Jehovah, so also the gold and the silver are his; he has good use for these, and probably a better use than man has hitherto put them to! The Creator certainly has first right to his creation, and as he graciously dispenses his blessings and benefits, which so largely come from the earth, we are privileged to use these and not abuse. Gold is a thing of beauty, the more so after having gone through the smelter and refining process; its value is really more extrinsic than intrinsic; it has chiefly a value of representation, and to be greatly pitied is that person who looks upon it only as a thing to be gotten and held on to!

The above thoughts are the ones Denver suggested. I went back in memory to the time when, so to speak, Denver was not, and did not come into notice until the gold and silver craze took hold of adventurers, who were willing to risk life and limb, and more too, in order to clutch the glittering stuff! The fevers of California, and thousands of deaths therefrom, at the time when gold was found there, may not have affected the searchers in the mines of Denver, but many a man with ruined health, and if not health, reputation, suffered there as well as at the "gold diggings" of 1848–9 and onward Making haste to be rich is oft times a backward movement! I have no controversy with rich men, and make no claim to that which is theirs; yet I confess I see great responsibilities resting on those who possess "this world's goods and shut up their bowels of compassion." The gospel of God comes alike to the rich and the poor; these have always been; and after all the question of poverty and riches is much of an open question, inasmuch as these states are comparative! For one, I am glad I am not a Vanderbilt, and equally glad I am n[illegible] pauper, unl[illegible] it be on God's bounty, and I don't think he considers his children in this light. Poverty and riches are two extremes, the between of these the most desirable!

Between Denver and Seattle, where I now am, there is some of the loveliest of scenery, as well as some not so lovely. Our route here was by the Union Pacific to Portland. We greatly enjoyed coming into the wooded country of Oregon, seeing some of it world-renowned trees, coursing alongside its Columbia River, seeing its salmon fisheries, its rugged peaks of towering hill and mountain, drinking in the balmy atmosphere, as millions of pine trees help to make it, gladdening our eyes with constantly changing scenery as it burst upon us, as we made our course through forest, glen and dale, I could but think and feel I was in God's world, and I ought to praise him the more as I get glimpses of his handiwork in creation! "God is good" even if Mahomet is not his prophet!

My stay in Portland was limited, but while there I saw all I could see in the time. The "Celestial" seems to have good hold here, however he may be treated elsewhere. They number, so I was told, over six thousand, and from what I saw I do not doubt it. Going for a stroll in the evening, not so much to see the sights as to gather information, I came across a strictly Chinese neighborhood; up on the third floor of a building, from the balcony, hung lanterns of different sizes and styles, and forth from the windows sounded out, I will not say seraphic sounds, even though they were celestial! The thumping of parchment, and tooting of whistles, and clacking of pieces of hard wood—so it sounded to me—was not harmonious to my ears; but then I am not a Chinaman, and with ear uneducated, as theirs, how could it strike me with favor? To quote a remark of one who stood by—a European—he said it sounded more to him like dogs barking and cats caterwauling; I was constrained to admit the force of the illustration. But Chinamen are men, and the constitution of these United States declares "all men are born free and equal and have the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." I was pleased to see, however, that the enlightened Christian did not wholly ignore his heathen brother, but a church building was there, with Chinese and American words upon it, indicating its character.

As in music, so in many other things, "one man's meat is another man's poison." Great is Joshi and the day in Portland was by "John" devoted to his glorification. Portland is said to have many rich men, and I can say, from observation, many elegant stores and residences, while, I am informed, I did not begin to see all of these! How could I in an evening, and part of the following morning? I can only hold so much and then I am full.

"Westward the star of empire takes its way," and the farther west I travel, the truer this becomes. All the way from Portland to Seattle this is very noticeable. Villages and towns exist, where a few years ago the bear and the red man held their own in almost impenetrable forest! The clanging bell and tooting whistle of the iron horse was not then heard; civilization, carrying with it fire water, and fire arms, had not been. Some, today, question this kind of civilization! but that's its name, and if it was its only name, these might not so strenuously object, but it is also called the introduction of Christianity! Admitting as I do, that the Christian religion has done much to elevate, it is almost a satire on the name, to call the present order of things Christendom! Daily do I hear that precious name called in blasphemy by those calling themselves Christians! But what's in a name?

Our arrival at Tacoma was not heralded; no deputation from the city council came out to meet us; no hurrah! but plenty of dust. For the first time our eyes beheld Puget Sound, and refreshing it was, as water always is, to a thirsty soul; but we were not to drink of this, only to be borne upon its bosom, and be carried to our destination. A good supper and wash, for this time, g[illegible] could walk [illegible] limbs, thank God, and look upward! Here we are, over three thousand miles away from the loved ones at home, and yet with the same heavens over us, the same moon and stars, and above all the same God who has thus far kept us! I know not how long I shall stay here; I trust, however, not long enough to have my friends feel twice glad!

Geo. W. Young.

Selections.

THE POWER OF HIS COMING.

PART 1.

Christ is not only coming in power at the last day, but the power of his coming is to be constantly operating in the present day. As God has appointed the moon to lift the tide by its attraction, that it may flood and fill all the indentures of the coast, so has he ordained this great event of Christ's Parousia to draw up the faith and hope and love of the church, when these have ebbed towards the world. If the philosopher is counted to have embodied the highest practical wisdom in his maxim, "Hitch your wagon to a star," can we question the efficacy of the divine method which has fastened all our hopes to "the Bright and Morning Star?" For, indisputably, the chief motive by which duties, obligations, aspirations and attainments are determined in the New Testament is this, the ever imminent return of the Lord from heaven. Therefore even the highest commendation that could be put upon a primitive church—"ye come behind in no gift"—was not so high that this crown could be omitted from it, "waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ," 1 Cor. i. 7. Such a tribute sounds strange to the church of today, because she has so much accustomed herself to steer by the compass of her creed, instead of by the star of her hope: and to measure her position by the dead-reckoning of ecclesiastical history, instead of determining it by observation of those heavenly lights which God has given to rule the night. Yet here is a motive so transcendently powerful, that were it taken away, the church would lose her upward gravitation.

It is easy to say that absorption in the state of glory, tends to render us careless concerning the serious claims of the state of humiliation. But we believe that quite the contrary is true. For our present not only makes our future, but is made by it; and that Christian alone can live well in the life that now is, who lives much in the life that is to come. As one has well written: "Only from the point of view of Eschatology can we understand aright the problems of the human life: for only when we recognize what is the final aim of life and being, can we also set forth the goal to all the efforts of man. Therefore it has been said from an early period: Respice finem."

Do we apprehend the total change of outlook which Christ has effected for the believer by his redemption, transforming a "fearful looking-for of judgment," into a joyful "looking for that blessed hope?" A sinner cannot look upward if he realizes his doom; a saint cannot look downward if he realizes his destiny. How deplorably therefore do they lower the standard of redemption who, by substituting thanatology, fix our anticipations upon our departure through the gates of the grave, instead of lifting them to Christ's return through the gates of glory. If we make death our hope, let us not be surprised if others learn to make him their hero.

What, let us ask, are the attainments of the Christian life most insisted on in Scripture, and yet the most difficult to achieve; and how does the hope of Christ's personal return affect them?

Unworldliness, in the midst of the present evil world? There is nothing which so powerfully promotes it, as the realization that he whose servants we are may appear at any moment to reckon with us and take us out of this world. [illegible] many Christians [illegible] holy; I dwell [illegible] and ho[illegible] with him also that is [illegible] ments into [illegible] to come; or dead men remitting back their fortunes into this world, and still fingering the interest in mortuary incomes,—here are the two ideals: and our Lord has plainly indicated which should be the Christian's, in his saying, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures on earth; but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven." And can there be any doubt, that if the position to which we have been called and raised by Christ's enthronement were really occupied and exulted in by us—"For our citizenship is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Savior,"—the achievement of making heavenly investments would be easy and inevitable, and the grip of avarice be unclasped from the purse-strings of multitudes of Christians? The old nature is not sufficient for itself; and as truly as "the expulsive power of a new affection" is needed to overcome the heart-contraction of self-love, so truly is the uplifting power of a new hope required to break that purse-contraction of self-enrichment which is now the greatest obstacle to the evangelization of the world. The logic is inevitable, if we are citizens of heaven, we are "strangers and pilgrims in the earth," and every rational instinct will lead us to make our investments where we hold our residence.

Not less difficult to overcome is that worldly-mindedness which seeks a present reward and a present glory. "But it shall not be so among you," is the decisive rebuke of our Lord to such aspirations. But how not? By the vision of a millennial crown and throne, the heart is reconciled to a present cross and humiliation. "We have forsaken all and followed Thee; what shall we have therefore?" "Ye that have followed me, in the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye shall sit upon twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel," Matt. xix. 28. A dispensation of reproach for the church cannot be perpetual; neither can a dispensation of glory be premature. The disciple must wait: but in waiting for the reign of Immanuel, he is waiting for his own reign as heir-apparent to a crown of glory. Let us not, through a false humility, reject the doctrine of rewards, which Scripture so strongly emphasizes. But when and where? are the all-important questions. Constantly do we hear it said of one deceased, "He has gone to his reward." But from the testimony of the Word, tell us where the believer is directed to look for his recompense at death? He is taught to aspire to a crown. But we are not to infer, because it is said, "Be thou faithful unto death"—that is, up to the point of suffering martyrdom for Me—"and I will give thee a crown of life," that our dying day is our crowning day, and that St. Sepulchre has been especially commissioned to preside at our coronation. To those who share Christ's travail and sorrow, in the present life, for the rescuing of souls, a coronet of joy is promised. And when? "For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye, in the presence of the Lord Jesus Christ, at his coming?" 1 Thess. ii. 19. To those who have chosen the portion of suffering with Christ in this world, as a little flock, it is written—"And when the Chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away," 1 Peter v. 5. To the steadfast soldier, who has fought the good fight, and finished his course and kept the faith, the assurance is—"Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous judge shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them that love his appearing," 2 Tim. iv. 8. Of that other crown—the fourth—the time of the bestowal is not mentioned; "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation; for when he hath been approved he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him," James i. 12 R. V. But [illegible] the corona vitae, it is evi[illegible] will be given at Christ's [illegible] "death is swal[illegible]," and not at our [illegible] of life only [illegible] tion of the [illegible] doctrine of an op[illegible] millennial [illegible] Christian fidelity. Mar[illegible] have grasped it from afar, and been upheld amid the flames; and we who are not called to suffer like them, learn also to exult in it, as that which shall bring our vindication against such as contemn us, because we run not with them to the same excess of riot in world-getting and gain-grasping. For there is a real choice of recompense. Let no one say that this world has nothing to give the Christian: it has. Three times our Lord pronounces that solemn sentence concerning religious man-pleasers, "Verily I say unto you, they have their reward." The pre-eminent question is, whether there is power enough in the Redeemer's proffer, "Behold I come quickly and my reward is with me, to give to every man according as his work shall be," to disenchant the heart from this temporal and sordid recompense? Only when we realize our calling as the sons of God, "begotten again unto a lively hope" and made heirs of a reserved inheritance, can it be so. "The servant abideth not in the house forever:" and if we are only such, we shall demand day-wages, even as "the hireling looketh for the reward of his work." But "the Son abideth ever," and therefore can "both hope and quietly wait" the final award of the inheritance.—The Watchword.

Meeting our own Prayers.

In eternity it will be a terrible thing for many a man to meet his own prayers. Their very language will condemn him; for he knew his duty and he did it not. Those fervent prayers, which the good man labored to make effectual, will be "shining ones" in white raiment to conduct their author into the banqueting-house of the Great King. But the falsehoods uttered at the throne of grace will live again as tormenting scorpions in the day of the Lord's appearing. "Be not rash with thy mouth, nor let the heart be hasty to utter anything before God," is an objection that forbids more than irreverence in prayer. It forbids us, by implication, to ask for that which we do not sincerely desire. Above all, it forbids the asking from God those blessings which we are hindering by our neglect, or thwarting by our selfishness and unbelief.

THE RESTITUTION.

ATTEND TO THIS NOW!

We ask each one whose time has expired, to send his renewal right away. We must have it to pay P[illegible] EXPENSES.

DO NOT DELAY!

[illegible] trouble with the ailing feet [illegible] in vain, but confined to our room. We look unto God and trust him for recovery. [illegible] glory. We can [illegible] with those of the precious Bible faith now. All we can [illegible] of THE RESTITUTION. While we are trying to do [illegible] of God. Pray for us.

Many thanks to kind friends for their sympathy and help. Among these we express heartfelt thanks to Bro. T. Wright, of Minneapolis, for some magnetic oil sent us. It has done us much good in allaying swelling and pain under the divine blessing. After further test shall speak of it again. We want to be careful not to commend anything of doubtful merit. To [illegible] T. Taylor we tender thanks for [illegible] clippings. They are [illegible] [illegible] we may be permit[illegible] and sisters [illegible] not "timely charged wit[illegible] our dear friends in Christ, as [illegible] prophet was to the children of Israel, nor sent out by Apostolic authority, not endowed with spiritual gifts to evangelize, as was Timothy, yet we have chosen to place the solemn words addressed severally to them at the commencement of our paper. We are shut off from delivering personal addresses to congregations of believers, and therefore, take this way of calling the attention of all, who may read our lines, to some very important matters. May God help us to so bring out some lessons from the living oracles as to instruct and edify, as well as to warn our readers of some matters of much neglected duty. O that the great things that pertain to salvation had always stood out as vividly before our mind, every day of our life, as they have since we have been compelled to withdraw from life's more active scenes and learn in the light of God's truth what his requirements really are, and how very far short we have come from meeting them during our past life. It has been one of the sad mistakes of our people to neglect deep, thorough, practical, experimental Christianity. In our Bible investigations we learned that the great majority of professed Christendom had lost sight of many of the fundamental principles of the gospel faith and hope—such as the second coming of Christ to this world to establish a heavenly kingdom upon the earth,—the resurrection of his overcoming saints at his advent to share with him in all the honors and glories of his future reign—the fulfilment of all the promises made to Judah and Israel, in their restoration to their own land again—the blessing of the nations in the Millennial administration of the world's rule by Jesus Christ and his co-rulers—and the especially important doctrine that the future and eternal life is the gift of God through his Son our Lord Jesus Christ—and finding that the substitutes held by the great mass of professed believers were, to a great extent, subversive of the faith once delivered to the saints, we gave our almost entire attention to these questions, and too much neglected to impress that holy life upon ourselves and others that the contemplation and hopeful anticipation of becoming sharers in the Millennial glories, and the glories of the New Heavens and the New Earth ought to have incited us to do.

[illegible] WARNINGS.

[illegible] Warning [illegible]

[illegible] charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and [illegible] preach the word; be instant [illegible] season; reprove, rebuke, [illegible] longsuffering and doctrine.

The relation of faith and works to our present and future salvation has not been carefully distinguished, and hence the failures in many and many a life. Because the Bible says, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved," "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," "The just shall live by faith," and many other like expressions regarding a confiding belief in the divine testimonies relative to salvation in the present remission of our sins, we have too much rested in our open confession of the Lord Jesus as our Savior, without realizing that we are to go on to perfection. Now while the Scriptures nowhere teach that we earn or merit salvation in consequence of works of righteousness on our part, yet they do teach that Christians must "work out their own salvation with fear and trembling," Phil. ii. 12, 13. A very complete statement of salvation by grace, and the duty of performing good works, may be seen in the following quotation: "Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he (God) saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost; which he shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Savior; That being justified by his grace, we should be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life. This is a faithful saying, and these things I will that thou affirm constantly, that they which have believed in God be careful to maintain good works. These things are good and profitable unto men," Tit. iii. 5–8.

Here we see that "good works" are specially enjoined by Apostolic authority, upon the "washed, renewed, believer in God." James shows that both faith and works must be conjoined to result in justification. He says that "faith without works is dead, and that by works is faith made perfect." See ch. ii. Personally our first work is to believe on him whom God hath sent, if we would work the work of God. Jno. vi. 28, 29. There is salvation in no other name under heaven. Believing on our Lord Jesus Christ, we are next, as repentant believers, to yield the obedience of our faith, [illegible] the re[illegible] the gos[illegible]. It [illegible] neces[illegible] upon [illegible] first [illegible] in the [illegible] they [illegible] apostle's [illegible] breaking o[illegible]" Acts ii. 42. This was co[illegible] a former practice in which the apostles, brethren, and the women were statedly engaged before. See Acts i. 12–14. On the meeting together for worship we have very positive directions as well as to all good works. "Let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works; not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another; and so much the more as we see the day approaching," Heb. x. 24, 25. Now in obeying this there is a great delinquency. How many absent themselves from the house of God, when the appointment is made for preaching the word, or for prayer and exhortation. And what is often substituted at home for the holy exercises of the Lord's house? Sometimes the day of worship is mostly spent in reading secular newspapers, or novels; sometimes in visiting and idle worldly conversation; sometimes in talking over the vain political variances of the great leading parties of the day. The minister goes to his appointment, and while rejoiced to meet the few faithful ones, he is made sad to find so many absent. The table of the Lord is spread with the memorial emblems to commemorate the dear Redeemer's death, and many are off in worldly pursuits, instead of being in lowly penitential attitude, lovingly showing forth the death, the dying love, of that Jesus till he come. Alas, that any should flatter themselves that salvation comes as a matter of course because they have once made a public profession of Christ, and been baptized into the holy name. Meetings on the first day of the week at the house of God are not all. There is a loud call for reform in other directions. Is it consistent for a Christian to join with the profane wicked world in all the wild, frantic, demonstrations that are gotten up to "jollify" the success of favorite candidates in the political contests of the day? O brethren, what did you think of yourself after having taken a part with the ungodly in such things? The profane swearer was there—the low saloon-keeper was there—and you was there! You were thoughtless perhaps about its being sinful but it was, both to you and to others. We are not now speaking of promoting some great moral cause, like temperance, or some measure that is for the good of society and religion. To resist by moral means the evil workers is a far different thing, especially when done in the prayerful love of God and humanity, from mixing up with the enemies of God and righteousness in their insane and monstrous revelings. We have learned in our affliction that what may be thought little delinquencies, that may be supposed to be perfectly allowable, become very serious matters when contemplated with either death or the Lord's near coming just in view. We have tried to be measurably careful in all these matters during our past life, but have been painfully compelled to look back with repentant tears and bitter regret upon aberrations from the pathway of holiness. Assure yourselves, dear readers, that though repentance in life's closing days may be salutary, still it brings a sad sorrow and fear to the poor heart. O, it is well for us that if "any man sin we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous; and that he is the propitiation for our sins; and not for our sins only, but also for the sins of the whole world—and that if we confess our sins he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness;" for the "blood of Jesus Christ," the Son of God, "cleanseth from all sin." Let us all then carefully retrospect our lives, and confess our misdeeds and sins, confess them to God in deeply hearty repentance, and then abstain from all appearance of evil in the future. O dear brethren and sisters, keep out of the world, and keep yourselves closely, carefully, with God's people. Our lives will be found to be what we make them! O what a solemn consideration this is in view of being judged and rewarded according to the deeds done in the body. Alas! lost opportunities for spiritual advancement, or for doing good to others can never be recalled—lost once they are lost forever! But, blessed be God, we are told to redeem the time, and now, whether our days be many or few, let us all most earnestly attend to this matter: and may God help us all is our earnest prayer.

SOON COMING EVENTS AND OUR PRESENT DUTY.

It was when the world, in all the boasted pride of human learning, and all the [illegible] of human lit[illegible] ing up the measure of human sin; and when wide spread idolatry, and groveling, sensual indulgence ruled over the nations, even in the most favored seats of intellectual cultivation and social refinement,—it was then that Jesus came, a Savior of sinners; and when the world shall bear the same aspect towards authority as it then did toward holiness,—when it shall be as impatient of rule as it was then of virtue,—when the peculiar characteristic of nations shall be rebellion—then shall the Lord come as the legitimate, the almighty, the irresistible Sovereign. "The Son of Man shall come in clouds, with power and great glory." Then shall the visitations be poured out, and the curses shall come upon the earth, as it is described in the 6th chapter of Revelations, the 12th verse: "I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and lo, there was a great earthquake, and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood; and the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a figtree casteth her untimely figs when she is shaken of a mighty wind; and the heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together, and every mountain and island were moved out of their places." "Every mountain," every great state; "and every island," every petty state, and all the great men of the earth merged in the waves of the destroying tumult; "and every bondman and every freeman hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains; and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth upon the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb; for the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?" You observe not the multitudes only, as distinguished from the rulers,—but all together fall under the judgment,—the kings, the great men, the rich men, the chief captains, and the mighty men, as well as bond and free; altogether, because all have sinned,—the rulers in abusing their authority to licentiousness, encouraging and fostering things that should have never been introduced; or if introduced, that ought, when detected, at once to have been amended; and the people in rising up in the pride of their own strength, the boasted might of numbers; as if the essence of authority were in them, instead of being in the God who made them. On the one side is abused authority, on the other abused liberty. All will fall, and there is no security but to the members of Christ. Oh my brethren, there is yet a time to escape,—there is time for a reconciliation; there is time to leave the vortex of a wicked world and join the church of God; to give up the society and the cause of those who are neglecting his word, violating his commandments; who talk little about his coming, and care still less. Oh, break off from them, and though you should be obliged to transact business, and even to sit side by side with them, let it be but the outside of you that is there; keep the inner part for the Lord, and the society of the Lord's people. Be on the Lord's side resolutely. Be not ashamed to confess him now. Now is the time to confess him, while he is absent, and to confess him even in the rebel's camp. Now is the time, while there is risk; now when it costs something to profess in sincerity and in truth. Every one will be ready to confess a triumphant king; but when to confess him is to expose yourselves to danger and to contempt, then it is, that confession denotes honesty of attachment. Hear himself; "Whosoever shall confess me before men, him will I confess also, before my Father which is in heaven. And whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words, in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him also shall the Son of Man be ashamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father, with the holy angels." Matt. x. 30; Mark viii. 38.

DESTRUCTION OF THE GREAT IMAGE.

Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing-floors; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them: and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth, Dan. ii. 34, 35.

On the destruction prefigured in the above language we make the following selection from a work written about sixty years ago by William Anderson, of Glasgow, Scotland, entitled "An Apology for Millennial Doctrine." He says:—

"Both in the dream of the monarch, and the revelation of the prophet, it is decreed, that, when the stone shall smite the iron and the clay, the brass [illegible] and the gold, shall be broken to pieces together. Now the question naturally arises, How can this be? Were not the golden, the silver, and the brazen empires destroyed by their respective successors, so that the one of iron and clay alone remains now standing for demolition? For the solution of this difficulty let these three things be considered in the image, first, its Geographical Territory; secondly, its Population; and thirdly, its Government. Originally its territory was only Babylonish, its population the same, and its government the same. Under the second dynasty, the territory and population of Medo-Persia were annexed, and the government of the two made Medo-Persian.

Under the third, in like manner, the territory and population of Greece were annexed, and the government of the three made Grecian. Under the fourth, the territory and population were completed by the annexation of Rome, and the government of the whole made Roman. The Emperor Trajan, as may be seen by consulting Gibbon's History, held the dominion at once of all the four departments of the image. Now, when the stone shall demolish it, in which of these three circumstances, its territory, its population, and government, shall the demolition be effected? Not of its territory, evidently; neither of its population, for although dreadful shall the destruction in this respect be, yet it will not be an annihilation so absolute as to implement the terms of the prophecy—'and the wind carried them away that no place was found for them.' It is the government, then, of the image on which the wrath of the stone descends to break it to pieces; and upon the population, chiefly in so far as the smiting of them is necessary to the smiting of the government. Mark, therefore, if the stone had arisen to its work of vengeance in the time of Trajan there would have been neither golden, silver, nor brazen power to break, but of iron alone. But in consequence of Roman power being now limited to its own original territory, and other powers having sprung up within the territory of Babylon, of Persia, and of Greece, the image stands complete in its gold, its silver, its brass, its iron and clay. 'The four successive monarchies were ordained of God for the chastisement, imprisonment, and vexation of his people. They began upon the great River Euphrates, whereon stood Babylon, while Nineveh, the capital of Assyria stood on the Tigris. From these two cities proceeded the power which destroyed the national existence of the ten tribes, and brought the two tribes into captivity. These two capitals of Nineveh and Babylon, together with the countries over which they ruled, have now for eight centuries been under the dominion of the Turkish power, which indeed is named twice in the Apocalypse by the name of Euphrates. Next to these came the Medes and Persians, whose territory the Persians still hold. Then came the kingdom of Alexander the Greek, who added to the territory of the Great Image that very portion of Greece, which in our times hath arisen, out of oppression and political death, into the state of an independent kingdom, such as it was when it came on the prophetic stage. And lastly, we have the Roman subsisting in the ten kingdoms of the west answering to the ten toes of the image. So that we can say within these few months (1829) what never could have been said before, that the whole image in its fourfold state is at this time in distinct existence.' These observations are important. I have not met with anything on the subject which goes so far to solve the difficulty."

To the Brethren in Christ Jesus, Greeting.

I would like to say to you through the columns of THE RESTITUTION that I have been laboring at home for over two years to provide things honest for my family. But trying all the time to so arrange my home affairs that I could go out into the world and let the light shine which God in his mercy hath given me that others may be led to glorify God. I have a little more work to do at home and then if it be the will of the Lord, I [illegible] leave [illegible] houses, lands, wife and children, in the care of the Lord, and go to spend the short time which I believe is left for me in preaching a free gospel to a people in bondage. I believe that God has in his mercy given me some wisdom in understanding his great plans in relation to man and the earth, and of the signs of the coming of the Lord Jesus the Christ, which is near, very near. I feel that I have much that I would like to say to both those that are in Christ and to the world. I want to exhort those in Christ to draw near to God to consecrate their lives more fully to his service. And I want to warn the world and tell them that the Lord is coming soon very soon, "In flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus the Christ, 2 Thess. i. 8. To tell them that I believe that the angels have the tares about all bound in bundles, Matt. xiii. And in their heated condition they are now about ready for the great fire of destruction. Oh, as I meditate upon these things I feel that I must go and warn the people of the destruction and time of trouble so soon to come on the world of the ungodly. I am going wherever I am convinced that it is the will of the Lord that I should go. But any one that has any invitations or suggestions to make I would be glad to hear from them. I ask for no pledges of money. Although I am poor, I shall "Trust in the Lord and do good, and verily thou shalt be fed," Psalms xxxvii. 3. Amen. Address J. B. Craton, Council Grove, Kansas.

How to Treat Ingersoll.

The following question having been submitted by several students to a college professor, he replied in his unique way in the Albany Journal, from which we quote:

"DEAR PROFESSOR: Are not Ingersoll's arguments unanswerable? What are you going to do about it?

SEVERAL STUDENTS."

"So you are out half a dollar apiece, are you? No, no; I cannot answer him. Boys, I recall the incident in my eager and impetuous youth of wasting a pound and a half of bird-shot on a small owl. I followed him from tree to tree, and shot away as much as a hatful of feathers, and when he died of fatigue I found that his body was about as large as a robin's and I could put it to no earthly use. He was a deceptive target. If I understand the gentleman from Peoria, he wishes to liberate youth from the incubus and thraldom of superstition. That devastating influence of the country clergyman on $500 per annum and a donation is what worries Robert, and he proposes to cure it and eradicate it for the trifling pittance of $250 per lecture. For 50 cents he proposes to liberate your mind from that influence which filtered into it from the trembling lips of your mother, and free you from the chains of superstition loaded upon your soul by the rough but loving hands of your father. Of course he worries about you more than those old fogies did—for 50 cents.

"You look around you in the city here and you discover several millions of dollars invested in hospitals, seminaries, asylums, forced on the suffering community by this same mythical, miraculous, and superstitious incubus of religion. You ask the gentleman from Peoria where his little public institutions are, founded by his peculiar teachings, and he says in an absent-minded manner, 'Fifty cents at the door.'

"Boys, you see sometimes a poor man's little funeral procession, with a wagon and a little coffin in it so small you could carry it under your arm. A poor couple walking behind it with breaking hearts. Their baby is in the coffin. It was their all. Their hearts are broken. Oh, if we only had Bob there to tell them about liberty and [illegible] and miracles—for fifty cents—[illegible] up.

"But you say 'there are so many infidels.' Boys, you are mistaken. An infidel is an abnormal growth, and nature feels funny once in a while, creates a freak, e. g., the living skeleton, the fat woman, the two-headed girl. So there is about one infidel to a million sane men.

"The most of these noisy fellows are amateur infidels. They talk Ingersoll in fair weather and pray themselves hoarse every time it thunders. A well-developed case of cholera morbus will knock their infidelity out of them and leave them in a cold sweat like a china dog in an ice-house. I know them. The most of them are like the boy who runs away from home and comes back to stay with father nights.

"Then again, boys, take a look around you when you invest another fifty cents in liberty, and compare the crowd with the kind of people you find in almost any church. Is it the odor of sanctity you smell? Hardly, boys, hardly. But you can eat peanuts there, and choke on the shells, while you applaud the jokes about heaven and hell.

"Yes, boys, his arguments are unanswerable, and I think the seasons will come along and the churches will continue to bloom, and all nature will most exasperatingly and calmly perform her functions, if Robert is not answered. You know when the first steamer crossed the Atlantic a great philosopher was delivering a most conclusive argument to prove that by no possibility could a steam vessel cross the ocean, and that provoking steamer came snorting and sizzling and splurging right into the harbor. Boys, so will God's foolish children go right on praying and preaching and dying in the triumphant faith in spite of argument."

The Buried Testimony.

The discussions, so long carried on between the critics of the Bible, and Christians who contend for the authenticity and accuracy of its historical statements, have received a valuable contribution from Professor Sayce, who has been engaged for several months in Egypt deciphering the library of tablets recently discovered in the palace of Amenophis III. Among other facts brought to light by these tablets is that the Biblical account of Joseph's supremacy in Egypt is confirmed by the royal archives. In a paper on the subject read before an Historical society, Professor Sayce says: "Ever since the progress of Egyptology had made it clear that Rameses II. was the Pharaoh of the oppression, it was difficult to understand how so long an interval of time as the whole period of the eighteenth dynasty could lie between him and the 'new king,' whose rise seems to have been followed almost immediately by the servitude and oppression of the Hebrews. The tablets of Tel-el-Amarna now show that the difficulty does not exist. Up to the death of Khu-en-Aten the Semites had greater influence than the natives in the land of Mizraim."

Professor Sayce went on to say: "From these tablets we learn that in the fifteenth century before our era—a century before the exodus—active literary intercourse was going on throughout the civilized world of western Asia, between Babylon and Egypt and the smaller states of Palestine, of Syria, of Mesopotamia, and even of eastern Cappadocia. And this intercourse was carried on by means of the Babylonian language, and the complicated Babylonian script. This implies that, all over the civilized East, there were libraries and schools where the Babylonian language and literature were taught and learned. Babylonian, in fact was as much the language of diplomacy and cultivated society as French has been in modern times, with the difference that, whereas it does not take long to learn to read French, the cuneiform syllabary required years of hard labor and attention before it could be acquired. We can now understand the meaning of the name of the Canaanitish city which stood near Hebron, and which seems to have been one of the most important of the towns of southern Palestine. Kirjath-Sepher, or Booktown, must have been the seat of a famous library, consisting mainly, if not altogether, as the Tel-el-Amarna tablets inform us, of clay tablets inscribed with cuneiform characters. As the city also bore the name of Debir, or 'Sanctuary,' we may conclude that the tablets were stored in its chief temple, like the libraries of Assyria and Babylonia. It may be that they are still lying under the soil, awaiting the day when the spade of the excavator shall restore them to the light."—Christian Herald.

THE CHRISTIAN'S CROSS.

What is the cross that I must bear?
Which is the straight and narrow way
My feet must tread that I may share
The great reward for which I pray?

Is this my cross,—to speak in praise
Of him I claim to love so well?
My voice in public prayer to raise,
And loudly sacred anthems swell?

Is this my cross,—to wend my way
Each Sabbath to the house of prayer?
To search my Bible day by day,
For promises and precepts there?

Are these the [illegible] I must share?
Is this the conflict, this the strife?
Are these the crosses I must bear
That I may win eternal life?

Nay, nay, weak heart, if this were all,
How easy would thy burdens be!
Without the wormwood and the gall,
No draught were bitterness to thee.

To crucify my own desire
That I may give another joy,
This is the world's refining fire
By which it loses its alloy.

To humbly turn the other cheek
When smitten with a cruel blow,
To answer patiently and meek
When words of anger tempt us so;

To overcome with good the wrong;
Our neighbor's as ourselves to love;
These to the Christian's cross belong;
And these his love to God will prove.

Oh Father! show us each our cross;
Make every path of duty plain!
And give us grace to count as loss
Whatever falls of Heavenly gain.

A FINANCIAL SIGN OF OUR TIMES.

In the revised version, the text reads, "Ye have laid up your treasures in the last days." The meaning is not essentially different, but a little clearer, namely, that there would be a great accumulation of wealth in the last days of the age. And we name this one reason for believing that the end of the age is near—a reason found in things industrial and financial.

Not only is there vast wealth in the world, but that wealth is piled up, instead of scattered abroad. The few, instead of many, have it; and, in consequence, there is want and discontent and outcry on the part of the laborers who create it; as the next verse to the text goes on to say: "Behold the hire of the laborers, who have reaped down your field, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth," etc. Now, while this has always been true, in particular times and places, especially with nations that have reached the acme of their glory and come to naught, it is now getting to be true of the world at large, which is also coming to the acme of its present glory and coming to naught. But we cannot understand this reason, as the Bible puts it, unless we look at things as God looks at them. One reason why men do not believe the Bible more is that they do not take God's point of view, and conceive of his whole plan in reference to the earth and the race of man on the earth. They start from their own observation of present facts, instead of from God's revelation of past and future facts. They infer that the present condition of things is a normal and natural one, which they are to improve as best they can; while God says that this present condition of things is an abnormal and unnatural one, which is to be endured until he shall restore the normal and the natural.

Now, our text says that in the last days of this age there will be a heaping up of property. And this, therefore, becomes one of the signs that the end is drawing nigh. Just as in intellectual and locomotive matters there has been nothing like the present conditions, just so, in industrial and financial matters, there has been nothing like the conditions which have grown up in the present century.

1. And, first, in regard to the availability of real estate. In any recording of the wealth of the world, land is a very important item; for it is out of the soil that much of wealth is produced. To be sure land is worth nothing unless it is improved. And it is never improved unless civilized man gets it in possession. But it is only within these fifty-eighth and fifty-ninth centuries of the world's history that a large part—perhaps I might say half—of the best land of the world has been open to civilized man. North and South America, Australia, and the larger part of the continent of Africa have just been made available. And as population carries into these available regions, the increase in their value is fabulous. Less than three centuries ago, I doubt not, the whole of New York City could have been bought for a hundred dollars, if, indeed, anyone could have been found who could give a good title to it. Less than seventy-five years ago all Chicago was in a like condition. And the same is true in hundreds of localities where property is now reckoned by millions.

All that some people have had to do in order to become wealthy has just been to sit still and see their real estate increase in value. Europe is, of course, worth more today than before America was discovered. Therefore, all of America's wealth is clear gain to the wealth of the world. The same is true in regard to Australia, and many parts of Asia and Africa. Yes, the same is true, to some extent, of the seas, which, while they are not owned by individuals, are yet yielding up their wealth to the use of man. Think, also of the mines and the vast deposits of coal and oil that have recently come to light! The world is thus growing enormously, fabulously wealthy in these latter days. Population is, indeed, increasing, but probably not one thousandth part as fast as is the wealth of the world. We cannot realize it, since we have been born and brought up in this marvellous era. But when you take into view the long centuries past, the material development of our day is like a flash of lightning for suddenness and magnificence.

2. The inventions of the present day. These create wealth by doing the work of thousands of men. The printing-press—what an army of scribes it draws pay for! The steam-engine—what millions of days' works it earns. The mower, the reaper, the thresher, and all farm machinery—what wealth there is in it! The sewing-machine—how many millions by common needles it distances! The numerous inventions in electricity, magnetism, and photography, etc., and all inventions—I cannot stop to enumerate them—have immensely increased the wealth of the world. An inventor becomes a millionaire in spite of himself. And all these things not only produce wealth of the standard and staple sort, such as was in existence before, but they themselves become articles of value. An inventory of the world's property today would show hundreds of things of the greatest value—such as railroads, telegraphs, etc.—that had no existence whatever one hundred years ago. And production of manufactured articles becomes sometimes so enormous that factories and mills are forced into [illegible]ness until the glut in the ma[illegible] abates. Thus by inventions alone the wealth of the world is enormously increased more than figures can show.

3. But, also, consider the suggestive fact that markets become world-wide. The facilities for transportation are such that a market is found for many things that even fifty years ago could not be sold. In my boyhood I saw thrown to the swine luscious fruits that now would command the cash in the cities. We now have California fruits on our table, whereas fifty years ago we scarcely realized that there was such a country as California. Some of us remember the California gold-fever of '49. It was a wild and far-off land then. Only forty years have passed, what wealth California has added to the world! Then a millionaire was almost unknown. Now they are common enough. And even the billionaires are figuring in literature, although it is well-nigh impossible for the human mind to really grasp what is meant by such a term. Comparisons of different epochs are difficult, but it is probably a very safe thing to say that the world is worth at least a thousand times more than it was one hundred years ago, or even ever before in all its fifty-nine centuries of history.

What I have hitherto said has reference simply to the creation and increase of wealth. We now come to the more important question: What is done with this wealth? Is it distributed among the many? Is it used for temporary needs, with the thought that the present age is soon to pass away? Is it poured freely forth to spread the glad tidings of the age to come? Ah, no! It is heaped together and held with the idea of the permanency of the present age. For, in the first place, the very laws of trade themselves centre wealth with the few rather than with the many. In the great city, which is the centre of trade, we find the millionaire on one street and the beggar on the next. Grant, if you please, that the millionaire has lawfully come by his millions, he nevertheless has them. Treasure is heaped up with him, while hundreds all around him are in actual need. And he not only has his treasure, but he is also determined to keep it and add, if possible, to it.

Money makes money. He can control the market; he can make a "corner" for example, in wheat, which will put millions more in his heap, even if it raises the price of every loaf throughout Christendom. Now, if the man to whom the millions come, in the course of trade, were a believer in the age to come, he would say, "I must make a temporary use of this wealth." He could easily find ways enough of using it, and might bless thousands in so doing. A few there are who endeavor thus to use their treasure. But they are so very few that they make but little impression on the general drift of the world's financial affairs. The vast majority have no thought whatever of the age to come. The temporariness of the present age does not enter at all into their calculations. But, rather, permanent possession is their only thought and ideal. And so the heaping-up process goes on.

Not only is this state of things calling the attention of God—it is also calling the attention of man. Never before in all the world's history was there so much thought given to the problems arising out of the peculiar conditions of financial affairs. So prominent is this financial question becoming, so pressing are these industrial necessities, that they are made the rallying cry in political campaigns, and the themes for sermons in so-called Christian pulpits. Indeed, they are becoming the burning questions of the hour, because they press so heavily upon the masses of mankind. Fifty years more of such heaping as we have seen in the last fifty would make somebody cry out in very agony for the last day to come. For these questions cannot possibly be settled satisfactorily in the present age. Only the age to come will settle them, by creating new conditions of society and new methods of life.—F. L. Chappell, in Christian Alliance.

ANTE-TRIBULATION TRANSLATION.

It is remarkable that all the predictions relating to the time immediately antecedent to the advent of the Kingdom represent it as a time of terrible trouble to all the people that shall then be on the earth. The Book of Revelation is almost full of intimations of coming woes, wrath, and tribulation; and nearly all the references of Christ and the Apostles to that time contain words of the most solemn and urgent warning to all Christians to be ready and watching, lest that time should come upon them unawares. Our Lord's words are peculiarly significant; for, after saying that that day shall come suddenly as a snare upon all them that [illegible] the face of all the earth, [illegible] But watch ye, at every season making supplication, that ye may prevail to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man," Luke xxi. 36.

In the corresponding accounts of this remarkable conversation on the Mount of Olives, given by Matthew and Mark, we find he said that amongst the many solemn things that shall happen at the time referred to, his angels should be sent forth to gather his elect from the four winds, from the uttermost parts of the earth to the uttermost part of the heaven. "Then shall two men be in the field; one is taken, and one is left; two women shall be grinding at the mill; one is taken, and one is left," Matt. xxiv. 40.

These, and other references to the same time, seem to indicate that some at least of those who are to enter the kingdom—those evidently who are ready and watching, as he exhorted—shall suddenly be taken away, leaving the unprepared believers and the unbelieving world to suffer the troubles which shall, with equal suddenness, come upon all that are left upon the earth. These who are so ready shall be especially blessed, for the King promises to appoint them governorships in his kingdom, and will doubtless prepare them in the upper region to which he will take them for their work, whilst the world they have left is going through its tribulation.

Those of like faith and readiness who have died during all previous years will, doubtless, also be amongst those elect to be gathered from the uttermost parts—the dead experiencing a resurrection, the living a translation. Those which are alive then shall not go before those who are asleep; rather, these shall first arise, and the others join them to meet the Lord in the air: "Therefore, be ye also ready, for in an hour that ye think (or know) not the Son of Man cometh."

In all his utterances our Lord was never more solemn and solicitous than on that day on the Mount of Olives; never more emphatic and urgent than when he said, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but My words shall not pass away;" and never more pathetic than when he spoke of the unbelieving world destroyed by the flood, and of the unfaithful servant, whose portion shall be with the hypocrites in weeping and gnashing of teeth.

Not less significant was the abrupt termination of his quotation from the prophecy of Isaiah when he first preached in his own synagogue at Nazareth. Emphatic was his opening declaration: "This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears;" the Scripture thus fulfilled being: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me, because he hath anointed Me, to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent Me to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord. . . . ." That was all that he came to do then, but the prophecy went on to say that he would also preach "the day of vengeance of our God," which he did later on in his ministry.

This twofold aspect of the gospel is observable also throughout the prophecies concerning the kingdom.

Salvation and vengeance are most frequently predicted together; the one for God's believing people, and the other for his or their enemies through unbelief. The coming time of trouble will be such as the world has never yet seen, and the only comfort concerning it is, that it will probably be of short duration. This distress will doubtless be a measure of punishment of unbelief on the part of those who endure it, whilst not improbably it will be also a beneficial corrective to those whose defective and feeble faith made them unready for the appearing of the King. Then, when he afterwards comes in opening manifestation, and permanently sets up his kingdom, it will be found that whilst many then on the earth will be more hardened than ever against him and his people, those who had faith but of the inferior sort will have been made ready to receive him, purged and strengthened by the tribulations they have gone through. But both their experience and position will be so very much more undesirable than those he would have them attain to, that he is most pathetically earnest and urgent in his appeal to all who believe in him, to seek by every means of faith and prayer and righteousness, to be accounted worthy to escape the tribulation, through being perfected and prepared beforehand.

This tender, solemn, urgent exhortation is directed to every generation of unbelievers, and to every individual believer; but, as each generation passes on, its urgency increases in intensity. Whether we are to die before the day of harvesting and escape, or to live until that day, the appeal of the Lord Christ should be equally strong in our ears, so that the day of death or the day of harvest may find us equally ready.

But if, as seems more than possible, whilst to many it is highly probable, the day of harvesting is close upon us, and the day of vengeance nigh at hand, the call of the Master acquires its final and most awful importance: "And what I say unto you I say unto all—Watch!"

Full of solemn warnings are the three great parables in the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew. They follow immediately after the prophecies and warnings concerning the great troubles and tribulations that are to come upon all the earth at the end of this age, and just before the age of the kingdom begins. Then, at that time shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins—five wise and five foolish. And whilst the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept.

The ten virgins represent the kingdom as it will be at that time—part of its members ready for their King, and part culpably unready. The former shall be privileged to go with him, away from the earth, for a time, to the marriage of Christ and his Church; whilst the others shall be excluded from that joyous occasion, in punishment for their unreadiness, and left on the earth until he comes, some afterwards, to destroy his enemies and set up his kingdom. Both sets of virgins are believers in the God of Abraham. The term "virgins" (pure ones) indicates this, as well as the explicit statement of Christ, that the kingdom shall be like to the ten virgins. And although the unready members of the kingdom shall forfeit the privilege of being present at the heavenly marriage of Christ and his Church, there is reason to suppose that they will enter upon their right places afterwards, in the kingdom, when it is established.

The next parable in the same chapter carries with it the same important warning, but with other and more definitely personal reference. It is very similar in purpose, meaning, and construction with the parable of the pounds, recorded in Luke xix. 11–27. Both these parables represent the Lord as going away for a time, and then returning, and investigating into the faithfulness and dutifulness of his people. The special significance of them is this, that the degree of the fidelity of his people during his absence, will be the measure of their dignity and authority in the kingdom. "Because thou wast found faithful in a very little, have thou authority over ten cities." "Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will set thee over many things."

The chapter closes with a parable, or rather picture, or another aspect of the King and the kingdom: "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory, and before him shall be gathered all the nations. Here we seem to be carried farther into the future. The kingdom seems to have been established, and the King is sitting on his throne. Having his own nation about him, he proceeds to deal with all the other nations. Most of the people that comprise them have doubtless lived and died without any direct knowledge of Christ or of his kingdom; therefore they are judged, not according to the Law, or the gospel—neither of which they had known—but according to a principle which is identical with that of faith. They are judged according to their manifestation of sympathy with the people of God: "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these my brethren, even these least, ye did it unto Me." The brethren here referred to cannot be the angels, for the people of the nations have never had the opportunity of serving them in the ways mentioned. But the people of Israel, and the people of faith in the true God, have been scattered throughout all the world, filtered as it were, through all the nations, and have, in every generation, needed sympathy and help.

The King will judge each man of the nations "according to what a man hath, and not according to what he hath not;" and those who have, according to their opportunities, by kindly act or word towards God's people, shown that they appreciated what of goodness and truth they saw in them, and thus exhibited the spirit of faith, will be blessed according to their measure of faith.

Here we have again shown to us the truth we have already gathered from other Scriptures—that the kingdom is open to all believers; for to these people of the nations the King says; "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." So it is again evident that the purpose of God from its very beginning comprehended people of faith, from Gentiles as well as Israeli[illegible] inheritors of his kingdom[illegible] was not at first revealed.—T. Kirkman, in Christian Herald and Signs of Our Times.

The Thief in Office.

The Gospel admits no amphibious morality. It does not promulgate one code for those who are in office, and another for those who are out. Some men seem to think, when they engage in public affairs, that they can fold up their moral character like a garment, and lay it snugly away on a shelf at home, and after perpetrating any convenient number of political frauds and speculations, may return and put it on again, clean and bright as before. But moral distinctions are not so elastic. They are solid as the foundations of the earth, and immovable as the pillars of heaven. The man who, as a legislative or administrative officer, would repudiate the public debts, is a dishonest man; and if he could and dared, he would repudiate his own. The politician who joins hands with robbers for public plunder, in whose palms are bribes for corrupt legislation, is a wicked man; and he will only wait till social profligacy shall be winked at as readily as political, and he will at once stand forth a full-grown villian.

A few years ago the New Home sewing machine was seldom heard of. It is now the best known and has more friends and a larger sale than any other sewing machine. On account of the simple mechanical devices employed in its construction, it runs lighter and with greater speed than any other. All the parts are made adjustable, so that "lost motion" from long usage, can be easily taken up, making the New Home the best machine for family use now in the market.

DIED

Spencer.—At the home of her daughter Mrs. Alice Scott, in the town of Leroy, Calhoun Co., Mich., July 22, 1889, Sister Sarah M. Spencer, aged 54 years.

After an illness of eighteen months, which she bore with remarkable patience, she at last passed quietly away, having her reason to the last. Her sickness was attended with much suffering, especially during the last few days. She was born in the town of Lakeville, Livingston Co., N. Y., Dec. 11, 1834, and was married to Forbes D. Spencer Dec. 11, 1856. At the age of 13 years she joined the Baptist church in Clinton, Lenawee Co., Mich. She remained in that church with her husband, until they heard the gospel of the kingdom preached in a series of discourses in Jamestown, Mich. She with her husband, accepted the (to them) new gospel, and gave up the old. They were both baptized in the name of the Lord for the remission of sins, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord, by a resurrection from the dead incorruptible, so that they can die no more; since which time for more than thirty years she has adorned the doctrine by a well-ordered life and Godly conversation. She has left a family of six children, three sons and three daughters, to mourn their loss. We believe that she now sleeps in Jesus waiting for her adoption, the redemption of her body.

Joel A. Simonds.

Moore.—At her home near Sidney, Kosciusko Co., Ind., Aug. 4, 1889, after a lingering sickness of several months, Mary Moore, aged 56 years, 4 months and 22 days.

Sister Moore, whose maiden name was Zimmerman, was born in Wayne Co., O. Was married Oct. 19, 1852, to Isaac Hagerman, who died June 26, 1870. Was married to her surviving husband, William T. Moore, June 13, 1875, who, with her six surviving children, mourn the loss of one whose place in the family circle cannot be filled. Though not among the earliest settlers of this part of Indiana, she shared to some extent the rugged experience of pioneer life and may be [illegible] with those whose energy and [illegible] conquered homes from the [illegible]dion of nature, and who de[illegible] be held in grateful remem[illegible] the present generation. [illegible] good standing in the [illegible] ut the doctrine of life only [illegible] Christ, the destruction of the finally impenitent, the pre-millennial and personal coming of the Lord and other related doctrines, coming to her notice she embraced them and rejoiced in the clearer and broader understanding of the plan and purpose of God as revealed in his word. During the summer of '87 she united with the Church of God at Gospel Grove with which she met for worship as often as her frail health and circumstances would allow. Her triumphant words, "I will hold fast to the faith till I die," have been verified. She "kept the faith;" she "sleeps in Jesus." Funeral discourse by the writer.

John L. Wince.

Smith.—In Crawford Co., Kan., May 25, 1888, Virginia O. Smith, aged 16 years, 3 months and 11 days. Dec. 1, 1888, Judith V. Smith, aged 9 months and 11 days. Both children of Bro. Wm. Smith.

The funeral sermon was preached by Elder John Foore who spoke to a well-filled house of listeners, from Job xiv., and gave words of consolation to the bereaved family who were thus robbed of two of their jewels by the enemy death. But may they be comforted by the blessed assurance that their children will be redeemed from the land of the enemy, and not only their dear children but the redeemed of all ages, and not only the redeemed but their dear Savior who died that we all might be saved. May these blessed assurances cheer them up in this hour of trouble.

We may sleep, but not forever.
There will be a glorious dawn,
We shall meet to part, no never,
On the resurrection morn.

Poetry.

Unbelief.

There is no unbelief.
Whoever plants a seed beneath the sod,
And waits to see it push away the clod,
Trusts he in God.

Whoever says when clouds are in the sky,
"Be patient heart: light breaketh by and by,"
Trusts the Most High.

Whosoever sees 'neath winter's fields of snow
The silent harvest of the future grow,
God's power must know.

Whoever lies down on his couch to sleep,
Content to lock each sense in slumber deep,
Knows "God will keep."

Whoever says "Tomorrow"—"The Unknown"—
"The Future"—trusts that power alone
He dare disown.

The heart which looks on when the eyelids close,
And dares to live when life has only woes,
God's comfort knows.

There is no unbelief:
And day by day, and night unconsciously,
The heart lives by that faith the lips deny;
God knoweth why.

Dear Brethren Composing the Household of Faith:

I feel that I want your united prayers to help me bear up under my sore afflictions. Ever since we parted, at our General Conference in Philadelphia, I have been suffering from palpitation of the heart, the result of a deep cold contracted at the Conference. And now I have to chronicle the deprivation for a little while of a dear sister in the flesh and in the Lord. I will just give a brief sketch, that I may be blessed with your sympathies in this present hour of trial. I would have let you known sooner, but it has been so hard for me to pick up my pen to write words necessary to express the sad bereavement caused by the great enemy of all living.

The dear sister fell asleep in Jesus (after being a monument of affliction for thirty long years, from spinal affection), at her home in Winchester, Va., on the 23d day of May, 1889, in the 60th year of her age. About twenty years ago, on the confession of her faith in the things of the king[illegible] God and the name of Jesus[illegible] baptized her into the all-sav[illegible] She held fast the beginning [illegible] fidence of rejoicing firm un[illegible] [illegible] condition for the [illegible] cause which she loved [illegible] While I am writing this accou[illegible] not refrain from tears at the thought of the pride and pains she always took in preparing for the brethren and sisters' comfort at our Annual Assemblies.

She was perfectly rational to the last. Just before she submitted to the fatal call, she reached out her hand and said for us all to meet her in the kingdom, then saying farewell, said, "Jerusalem my happy home." Yes, I replied, it would my dear sister be a happy home when we all meet again with all the redeemed of the Lord. She then fell asleep in Jesus. We had her embalmed and conveyed to my residence and watched over her for a night; then on the morrow, like Abraham the father of all who believe, I stood up, before the people of the land and read the twenty-third chapter of Genesis. A very striking circumstance having thrown in my possession a field in which there is a nicely enclosed family graveyard, we, as Abraham buried Sarah his wife in the cave of the field of Machpelah, buried Nancy our sister in the old family cemetery where she can rest free from all sorrow and pain until the morning of the resurrection. Then she will come forth in her once beautiful form. Although deformed by the curse put upon man by the fall, she often expressed the consolation in her well-grounded hope of a resurrection, that she would be restored back again as she was in her youthful days. Her favorite hymn which she would often sit and read, and which she requested to be sung at her burial was,

Most blissful thought and can it be,
That I shall live again,
And be from sin forever free,
No sorrow know nor pain.

Among the thoughts which were presented for the comfort of the bereaved family, relatives, friends and many of like precious faith, from the reading of the chapter, was that Abraham buried Sarah, not the body of Sarah only. I alluded to a beautifully bound book entitled, "The Beautiful Story," in which the author in speaking of Abraham burying his dead, says, "that he buried the body of Sarah." Like Paul said of his Jewish brethren, "by their traditions they make the word of God of none effect." The word says Abraham buried Sarah, not a part of her. Like the old man of Uz, the patriarch Job, called the grave his house, the good brethren and friends who were present had prepared a little house in Mountain View Cemetery where we would bury Sister Nancy Garrison to wait all her appointed days until her change from death to life comes. Then the same power that raised up Jesus from the dead will raise her up also and make her sit together in heavenly places with Christ and sing the victor's song, O death, where is thy sting? O grave where is thy victory? Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

S. J. MORGAN.

For many a long, long year
She breathed the sufferer's sigh,
While aid was sought
Both far and near,
But to no help was nigh.

Though strong in faith and hope
Through all her torturing pain,
She firm believed
With all her power,
That Christ would come again.

And though she now must sleep,
The time would not be long,
When he would come
To raise her up
To join the immortal throng.

How long, O Heavenly Father,
Shall death the tyrant reign,
And take from us
Our loving friends?
When shall we meet again?
S. F. MORGAN.

To the Scattered of Like Precious Faith, Greeting:

It has been a long time since I have reported through THE RESTITUTION. I am still in the field contending for the faith of the gospel, the glad tidings of the kingdom, the blessing of all the kingdoms of the earth through the seed, the great commission given to the apostle to preach in all the world for a witness to all nations, the law of the spirit of life binding upon every one who hears the glorious proclamation. This gospel either softens the wax or hardens the clay. Its proclamation is not without effect. We had the pleasure last first day of immersing three willing believers into the Christ body who are now rejoicing in the joint heirship of our blessed Lord. Others are expected soon to follow. Lake Chautauqua.

Take the Nickel Plate to Lake Chautauqua, the popular summer resort, where 150,000 pleasure seekers visit in one season. It is located at an altitude of between 1,400 and 1,500 feet above ocean level, and its shores present a continuous picture of scenic beauty.

The boating, fishing and bathing advantages are equal, if not superior, to any other resort in this country, and these features alone should bring thousands to its shores the coming season.

The history of the various religious and educational organizations which have made this resort so popular, are so well known it will not be our purpose to repeat any portion of it here. Individuals or families desiring board at hotels or private houses may be accommodated at rates to suit the ability or desires of the visitor.

The Nickel Plate has made special arrangements for the accommodation of tourists who desire to stop on excursion tickets either going or returning, enabling them to visit friends en route and the many attractions of the beautiful city of Cleveland, Ohio.

The Two Dakotas—South and North.

Public attention is now, more than ever, directed to these two new States of the Union. Climate, soil and opportunities for investment of capital, are unexcelled by any other section of the Great West. The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co., which has lines of its own in both South and North Dakota, has just issued an illustrated pamphlet entitled "Plain Facts about Dakota" containing numerous letters from farmers and others which are well worth reading, as they show the results of each writer's personal experience in the North-West, and convey a great deal of valuable and reliable information which will be of benefit for those seeking new homes in South and North Dakota. BURLINGTON ROUTE.

Cheap Lands in the West.

Along the lines of the BURLINGTON ROUTE in Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming and northwestern Kansas, particularly on its new extensions in that territory, there is still some Government Land awaiting settlement, as well as other cheap land held by individuals. These lands are among the best to be had anywhere in the country for agricultural and grazing purposes. In the comparatively new districts are many improved farms which can be purchased at a very low rate of that class of restless pioneer-settlers who are ready at all times to move "farther west." In the territory embraced by the BURLINGTON'S lines west of the Missouri River, there are in the vicinity of two hundred new towns which offer to manufacturers and business men an excellent opportunity to locate with profit. Send to the undersigned for descriptive pamphlets and other matter giving location and full particulars concerning these lands.

Map of the United States.

A large, handsome Map of the United States, showing North and South Dakota, mounted and suitable for office or home use and issued by the BURLINGTON ROUTE, will be furnished responsible parties free on application to the undersigned. P. S. EUSTIS,

WHY SHOULD I GO TO MONTANA?

Great Reservation. Because 18,000,000 acres of free Government land, with a delightful climate, and equally suited for general farming and stock raising, have just been opened to the homeseeker, in the Milk River Valley and near Benton and Great Falls.

Stock Raising. Because the favorable climate and superior grasses of Montana make it the natural home of horses, cattle, sheep and other domestic animals; and because winter feeding is not required, as stock grazes at large the year round.

General Farming. Because a rich soil and abundant summer rains produce wheat, oats, rye, barley and the grasses and vegetables of a quality, size and yield unsurpassed.

Mining. Because Montana produces more of the precious metals than any other state or territory, and abundant opportunities remain to secure valuable properties at nominal cost.

Immigration. Because the Great Reservation is the meeting point of settlers from the Pacific Coast and from the Eastern States, and is the only extensive tract of good land left, suitable for settlement.

Business. Because the rapidly growing towns along the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Ry. offer splendid opportunities to engage in business.

Manufactures. Because the 1,000,000 horse-power water-power at Great Falls, the extensive coal veins, the wool, mineral and grain raising resources of Montana offer exceptional opportunities to the manufacturer.

Travel. Because the canon of the Gates of the Mountains, the Great Falls of the Missouri, the Giant Fountain and Continental Divide offer the most sublime and diversified scenery to be found on the Continent. Take a summer tour.

Why Travel by the St. P., M. & M.? Because only by it can you travel through the largest body of free land left for settlement. Because it reaches the Great Falls, with the largest water power on the Continent. Because it reaches Helena, the richest city of its size in the world; and because it is the shortest and best route to Butte, the largest mining camp on earth. Special tourists' and landseekers' rates. Daily trains through solid to Montana. Choice of three routes to the Pacific Coast. Find out all about it by writing for "The Great Reservation," and "Tourists' Summer Guide." For further information, rates, maps, etc., apply to F. I. WHITNEY, G. P. THE RESTITUTION

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

THE OBEDIENCE OF FAITH.

"And a great company of the priests were obedient to the faith." Acts vi. 7.

Having in former articles given the testimony of the Word of God as to the gospel, it is fitting to give the evidence from the same Divine record, as to what is required of an individual who believes "the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ," in order to be saved. The order followed by the apostles and primitive proclaimers of the gospel, appears to be,—faith, repentance, and baptism. I shall confine myself principally to the last item of the three, because it has been so sadly perverted, and set aside by the commandments and traditions of men.

1. Faith. It is written, "Without faith it is impossible to please God; for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him," Heb. xi. 6. Faith in God, belief of his word, and reception of his messengers, are all required. The Father requires faith in the Son Jesus, the Christ, and in the message which he sent by him. A voice from the excellent glory, on the mount of transfiguration, said to the disciples, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him," Matt. xvii. 5. By audible voice also at his immersion in the Jordan, did the Father acknowledge Jesus of Nazareth as his own Son? Matt. iii. 17. John the Baptist bore testimony that the one whom he baptized was the Son of God; and John the apostle says, "he that believeth not God hath made him a liar; because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son," 1 John v. 10. Jesus said to the unbelieving Jews, "Ye have not his word abiding in you; for whom he hath sent, him ye believe not," John v. 25. "Unless you believe that I am he, (the Messiah), ye shall die in your sins," John viii. 24. To believe and confess Jesus as the Christ, the Son of the living God was required. Matt. xvi. 16; John vi. 69, etc. This good confession included the doctrine of the kingdom of God, which was the gospel preached by Jesus and his disciples. After the resurrection and ascension of Jesus, the disciples were ordered to preach repentance and remission of sins in his name. For example, when Philip preached Christ to the Samaritans, it included what it is said that they believed—"the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ," Acts viii. 12. "Faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God," Rom. x. 17. Every recorded instance in the Acts of Apostles shows that faith in "the word of faith" preached by the apostles was absolutely necessary. Faith in anything and every thing preached by men, unauthorized by the apostles, is of no value for salvation. And even a belief in the gospel, unless operative, is of no account. "For faith without works is dead." Jas. ii. 26; Gal. v. 6.

2. Repentance. Faith will lead to repentance. True repentance towards God is manifested by "ceasing to do evil, and learning to do well," Isa. i. 16, 17. John was sent to prepare the way of the Lord, by "preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins," Mark i. 3, 4. He called upon those who submitted to his baptism, to "bring forth fruits unto repentance." Jesus also told the Jews, that "except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish," Luke xiii. 3, 5. The apostles were sent out to preach repentance and remission of sins in the name of Jesus, commencing at Jerusalem. This they did on the day of Pentecost. Acts ii. 38. Also Paul was sent forth to preach the gospel, and testified both to the Jews and also to the Greeks, repentance towards God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ, Acts xx. 21, showing that they should repent, and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance. Acts xxvi. 20. He told the Athenians that God "commandeth all men every where to repent; because he hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he has given assurance to all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead," Acts xvii. 31. The Greek word which is translated repentance implies more than sorrow for sin; it signifies a change for the better, or "godly sorrow which worketh repentance unto salvation not to be repented of," 2 Cor. vii. 10. It is a thinking with God, or having the mind in unison with his will. True repentance will lead the believer who is thus thinking with God to ask sincerely and anxiously with Saul of Tarsus, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" He is ready to obey God's will. Saul arose forthwith, and submitted to God's way of righteousness. Man fell from his state of purity and allegiance to his Maker by unbelief and disobedience, and it is only by retracing his steps that he can be reinstated in the favor of his God. He must believe his word, and obey his commands, in order to be saved.

3. Baptism. I wish the reader to understand that although I follow the authorized version in the use of this word, I mean in every place an immersion of the believer in water. Sprinkling or pouring is not baptism, and the person who has only submitted to this ordinance of man has never been baptized. Baptism is called the obedience of faith in Rom. xvi. 26; obeying the truth in 1 Pet. i. 22; obeying the form of doctrine in Rom. vi. 17. So also I apprehend is the meaning of the apostle Paul, when he says that through the proclamation of the gospel and the power of the Spirit, he made the Gentiles obedient. Rom. xv. 18. It was obedience to the gospel undoubtedly that he referred to. Rom. xv. 18. It was for this that the apostles received grace and apostleship, "for obedience to the faith among all nations for his name," Rom. i. 5. And this is fully corroborated by what Paul writes in closing his letter to the church of Rome "Now to him that is of power to stablish you according to any gospel, and the preaching of Jesus Christ, according to the revelation of the mystery, which was kept secret since the world began, but is now made manifest, and by the Scriptures of the prophets, according to the commandment of the everlasting God, made known to all nations for the obedience of faith," Rom. xvi. 26.

Obedience implies law or a command; and law implies a lawgiver. Is there a law and lawgiver connected with the gospel? Certainly. There is "one Lord, one faith, one baptism." The one Lord is Jesus the Christ who is possessed of supreme authority in heaven and on earth. He commanded his apostles to preach the gospel, and baptize the believers. As Lord of all he has given the law of faith, and obedience thereto will bring salvation. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," Mark xvi. 16. We cannot be the servants or friends of Jesus unless we obey him. "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you," John xv. 14. He sent his apostles forth to disciple all nations, baptizing them, etc. Matt. xxviii. 19. They went forth as commanded. Witness the record of their doings as given by Luke in the Acts of the Apostles. All believers of the gospel were baptized, and none but believers. Submission to baptism, is obedience to the law of Christ, and brings the reward promised. Baptism is the first act of obedience, and the first visible sign of repentance unto life. Those only who obey have the legal right to the blessings connected with it. Those who believe the gospel and are baptized are promised salvation. Mark xvi. 16. Those believers who repent and are baptized in the name of Jesus Christ have the remission of sins. Acts ii. 38. Those who have been baptized into Christ, have put him on, and become the children of God. Gal. iii. 26, 27. Those believing Jews, on the day of Pentecost, who enquired what they should do, saved themselves by attending to Peter's advice, in being "baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins," and thus three thousand of them were added to the church that same day. Acts ii. 38–41. And Peter also tells us that "baptism doth not save us, (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God), by the resurrection of Jesus Christ." 1 Pet. iii. 21. Saul of Tarsus, the great persecutor of the church, after he was convinced that Jesus was the Christ, obeyed the Lord who through his servant Ananias, said to them, "And now why tarriest thou, arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." Acts xxii. 16. And so the Corinthians after hearing the gospel, believed and were baptized, (Acts xviii. 8,) and thus were washed, sanctified, and justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God. 1 Cor. vi. 11. Thus all the believers of the gospel we read of in the apostolic record obeyed the law of faith in baptism. At Philippi, Lydia and her household attended to the things spoken by Paul, and was baptized; also the jailor and his household. Acts xvi. 14, 15, 33. The Ephesians were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. Acts xix. 5. The Colossians were buried with Christ in baptism, having their trespasses all forgiven. Col. ii. 12, 13. The Romans also were baptized into Jesus Christ, buried with him by baptism, planted together in the likeness of his death, and obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine into which they were delivered, being then made free from sin. Rom. vi. 3, 4, 5, 17, 18. The Galatians put on Christ in baptism, and were made children of God. Gal. iii. 26, 27. All in the primitive churches believed the same gospel, and obeyed the same Lord.

How can any one now put on Christ who does not obey his command in being immersed into him? The name of the Lord Jesus is connected with baptism—it can only be put on in that ordinance. No one has a legal right to bear his name, unless named upon them; and baptism is the only institution where the believer can meet with it, and be joined to it. In the waters of baptism we meet with the Lord,—his name, his blood, his death, his resurrection—all in symbol. He has placed them there, and there we find pardon and peace through his cleansing blood; show that we are dead to sin by being buried, and that we rise to walk a new life; and there being joined to the Lord, we henceforth bear his name, and become joint-heirs to all the Father has promised to give him. Simple belief or repentance, mere acts of the mind, are not sufficient. Obedience is required—a visible, outward act—and that is baptism. This act is the beginning of repentance and obedience. God's seal is set upon this act, by giving to the obedient "the knowledge of salvation by the remission of sins."

The Son of Man had power on earth to forgive sins. Mark ii. 10. The Father gave him this power. Jesus, after his resurrection, delegated this authority to his apostles, saying, "As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you....Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them," etc. John xx. 21–23. This power they could only exercise as "the ambassadors of Christ," in preaching the gospel and administering ordinances. To them was committed the word of reconciliation, and sinners became reconciled to God through them. 2 Cor. v. 19–21. Their word is now the only legal authority by which sinners can be forgiven, and become reconciled to God. If the terms are complied with on the part of the sinner, forgiveness, reconciliation, and adoption into God's family are certain. No change has been made in the apostolic plan, except what an apostate church has made. Heaven's order or way of salvation remains the same. Man has no right to alter what God has appointed, nor to expect that he will approve the same. If men will set aside the truth by teaching their own commands, and substituting their own ordinances, they ought to remember that then their worship is vain. Matt. xv. 7–9. Let no one dare to change the ordinances as they have been delivered; nor pervert the gospel which Paul preached; for by so doing the anathema he pronounced may fall on them. Gal. i. 8–9. Nor let any one lower the gospel standard, and fear to declare unto all the counsel of God, lest some charge you with being uncharitable, and of hindering many from joining the church. Jesus said, "Strait is the gate, and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." Matt. vii. 14.

In conclusion, let me entreat the reader to study the Scriptures for proof of the truth of the gospel, so that you may believe the things concerning the kingdom and the name of Jesus, and then show to all that you have a living faith by being immersed in water in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of your sins. Thus having purified yourself by obeying the truth, unto unfeigned love of the brethren, add to your faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly-kindness, and love; and these virtues abounding in you to the end, you will be prepared for the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. May you and I, dear reader, always be found obedient disciples of the Lord Jesus, who has become "the author of eternal salvation to all them that obey him;" so that we may receive from him, at his appearing, "salvation with eternal glory."

MICA-PEN NOTES.

Much of life is literally slept and dreamed away. The sleep is necessary, the dreams not always so. But one thing is certain, the transgression of natural laws is visited with penalties, and sometimes they are almost instantaneous. We ardently desire growth in faith, in purity, in conscious sympathy and harmony with our infinite Father, a Father precious to us beyond description. But if we overtax our digestion, or commit some fault in diet, we may be plunged into darkness, and for a small moment, no sunlight, or spiritual joy, seems possible. Such is the inexorableness of law, and the laws are right. Dreams come too, and they may be silly, senseless, or odious even to excess, harrowing and exhausting. These penalties will teach us care and wisdom. Let us praise and love God, that these penalties are not forever—and that we have the pure air, the genial light, and the self-poss[illegible] and liberty of the day,—for in [illegible] are helpless. And I am glad that God is so truly wise and kind;—that he has made creation subject to vanity (not of its own will,) but by reason of him who subjected it. Our wise and unerring Father did it. We are liable to err, even when seeking wisdom. But he subjected creation, "in hope that it shall be delivered." And that kind of hope is for creation, comfort. For God, it is assurance and perfect foresight. He knows what is to be. The deliverance shall be unutterably great, even into the liberty of the glory of the children of God. "The whole creation groaneth," and even we who have the Spirit in its earlier infusion and influence; "We groan within ourselves." Our deliverance is coming, and after us, in its due time comes creation itself. What a joy! Imagine liberty perfected, every fetter broken, all subjection ended—that is, to vanity. What amazing gladness of liberty, and elasticity! Our God designs this from the beginning. Trials are for future strength and happiness. They are to make us fit for æonian and endless life. Evil is not good in itself—far from it;—but it may be and is, for a most important lesson, for transcendent good to come. With a knowledge of evil, by observation and experience, (the evil at last forever past and gone,) men will be strong and wise, hereafter. We are born ignorant and weak. Babes have no wisdom, even though sometimes half grown to adult stature. This is so, as a rule, though now and then, the brain and heart of childhood may be happily open to the consummate good. And more yet,—so great and keen and sweet and strong will be the joy of the coming life, in God's bountiful thought and design, that man could not bear it, could not use it, without a prior training of disabilities and burdens. After sorrow, comes the blessing. After burdens, come the comforts, and they will be unutterably great. They will take their life and strength and keenness, from the old bitterness, in part,—if not by derivation—by contrast.

It is an August of delicious coolness. I wonder again, in their stateliness, are the sunflowers. There is a kingly fellow with eight golden faces, the hunting ground of happy bees, delving in affluent depths. These faces are sweet and cheerful, and they seek the sun. They look him in the face, without being dazzled. That mighty stalk with his palmate mantle, is a kind of vegetable brother. And I think of Jeremiah,—a prophet, and a real brother of flesh and blood, and spirit too, a Jew, a Christian nobleman, a friend of God.

There is comfort in thinking of the two-fold fulfilment of things. This principle runs through prophecies in a large degree, and rules in Scripture, in many ways and places. Most notably there are two restorations to the literal children of Abraham—and the second is to be far greater than the first. The one is type and adumbration of the other. And Jeremiah is welcome to us—a brother to us— a herald of the gracious and unchanging intention of God.

Truly, wonderfully much depends on our mental frame. If we are clothed in a cloud of erring bias we cannot see. But the goodness of God in his remonstrance with Israel in chapters two and three of Jeremiah, affects the feeling mind. And when the impiety and madness of the people are rehearsed, then hear that Father's gentle voice—"Return thou backsliding Israel, return, return!" And again, "Return thou backsliding Israel, for I am a husband unto you." And the voice reverberates in reiterated and far-reaching appeals through the ages, and shall it be void and in vain forever? No. The time is coming for an unparalleled response. It will be a fulness of time. The Lord will put his hand to the work. "I will take you, one of a city, and two of a family, and bring you to Zion." There shall be shepherds provided and prepared, men of astuteness and devotion, who shall feed the people with knowledge and understanding. The Lord will provide them. He will make no mistake. He will have good men, true men, men of illuminated minds, men of fidelity and capacity. The ark of the covenant, with its stone tables will not be inquired for, for God will dwell in the hearts of the new convened and multiplied hosts. We magnify our civilization, but how faint its glory compared with the tranquil delight of the coming days! And for a coronation of all, "Jerusalem shall be called the throne of the Lord." That is something to make a note of. If we search all records, if we traverse all the labyrinth of history, if we inquire of all scribes and keepers of statistics, when and where shall we find Jerusalem renowned like that? Who will give us the authentic memoranda? Never yet was Jerusalem so illustrious as that, never. She could furnish Golgotha, and a sepulchre, for the uncrowned and crown-refusing man of Nazareth. But another day is coming, far unlike any the world ever saw. Jerusalem shall be called by a name that will rouse enthusiasm in loyal hearts—that will start tears of admiring gratitude in the eyes of those who see the climax,—"the throne of the Lord." Holy, happy and mighty name! Has that day ever been? Never? But it shall be. A King will be there. There will be a charm to move and draw the millions. "All the nations will be gathered unto it, to the name of the Lord in Jerusalem." Has this ever been? Who has seen or known such a thing? Jerusalem might have the title of Centralia, a world's metropolis. Gather together the glories of all the European, Asiatic, and American cities, efface their squalor, and abolish their abominations, and what have we then to match the glory of the place which has the royal title in this prophecy? Do we speak of pilgrimages? Do we inaugurate centennials? Do we honor the discoverers of new worlds? Do we magnify the beginnings and foundations of nations? And do we concentrate in imposing and bewildering number the productions of modern industry and art? But how beggarly all their glories and all this grandeur, in comparison with the prophetic beauty, and the central dominion of Jerusalem! For purity will be there. Love will be the law of the times. No electric lighting of our days will compare with the glory of the Divine presence there. No citizen of the city, or visitor from a distant clime will have hatred, envy, or ambition, or any other villiany of mind or imagination. Nor shall the people "walk any more after the stubbornness of their evil heart." Those old ways will be ended. All the spirit of the place and time will be gentle, generous, loyal and loving. Where was this ever thus, hitherto, in all Jerusalem's changing and troubled past? What scroll unrolled, will reveal to us the epoch? Nay—for how many hundred years, has Jerusalem lain prostrate? For how many years has she been bruised and bleeding? In those days the house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the north, and the north is vast and resourceful, throughout Europe, Asia and America. Has Judah come to Jerusalem, ever yet hitherto—Judah, effectually cured of all innate, baneful stubbornness? And have the manifold nations come there from every point of the compass, to worship a King resident there, and giving to the city the charm and renown of his unquestioned presence? What history, in or out of Scripture, gives us this picture of tranquil delight,—shows us this glow of sinless enthusiasm?

"How shall I put thee among the children?" There is a great yearning to do this, in a heart of fathomless affections. And there is power to turn the barrenness and solitude of the old land into beauty and fertility, far more than ever before. There is only one thing lacking. Let the people exclaim filially, penitently, and heartily, as they will,—in just the two words—"My Father!" They shall, they will. They shall not be full of fickleness as in former days, and turn away from the blessed.

Hark! What voice is that? What strange and plaintive cry? "A voice is heard upon the bare heights." What can it be? It is not the shout of victory. It is not the roar of battle, with the scream of the combatants,—torn with wounds, or eager in pursuit. It is another cry altogether,—"the weeping and the supplications of the children of Israel." It is the outburst of thousands, weary of their old revolts, and their long ages of hardness of heart. They are tired of perverting their way, and sorry for their ungratefulness and ill-doings. They are hearty and honest and profuse with regrets. It is the Lord's work upon their minds. "Return, ye backsliding children, return, and I will heal your backslidings." And filially and heartily they answer, "Behold we are come unto thee, for thou art the Lord our God."

That sounds like a true conversion. That is the resurrection of a nation. That is the remoulding—or the beginning of the true remoulding of the world. It never has been, yet. It is an astonishment, that any living man should say or think, it was ever yet so done. These predictions by Jeremiah, have great force and glory. And all that God does, and is to do, for consummate good, is surely of value and interest to us. And on our own part, we may walk in the light, and wait for the Son of God from heaven to call us to his company and his work. Are we full of yearnings? Then the Lord will take account of them, as he taketh account of all things—be they perplexities or prayers, waiting or hoping and believing. And when he taketh account of all, what he takes, we render and give likewise. Is it not all one, his taking, and our giving? His reward is with him, when he cometh, and he is able to do abundantly for us.

C. COLEGROVE.

Are You of the Royal Family!

It seems very hard to convince people that they have no right to the name "Christian," until it has been placed upon them by God himself at the waters of baptism. And yet they have none. Calling the name upon themselves gives them no legal rights to the name. The subject may grow tiresome to some, but it is one of such paramount importance that it must be made to take a prominent place in our paper, because it is the stepping-stone to salvation. Future life cannot be reached until there is obedience. We cannot call the little child good that does not obey its father; men and women are not good who do not obey God.

Now look at the matter seriously you who think yourselves good and who yet refuse God's terms of pardon: can you hope for pardon? can you hope for life? can you hope for a part in a fadeless inheritance?

What right have you to hope? You must be brought right back to the starting point of this article, Are you in the royal family? Is the name Christian legally yours?

There is but one who can pardon you and he has only promised pardon on condition that you come to him in the name of his Son. Have you done it? Have you made the name of his Son your legal name? The Governor of the State can pardon the criminal, and no other man can pardon him, but some one man bears the message, the petition to the Governor; so Jesus bears our petition to God.

But as the Governor requires the reforming of the life, before he grants the pardon, so does God require the reforming of the life. And as the word of the one is to be believed in reference to the pardon, the more certainly is the word of the other to be believed. Law must be obeyed in the one case, and it must also be obeyed in the other. It is obedience to law in both cases that takes away the guilt and the penalty, and sets the man free. God requires that we be adopted into the royal family, then if you have obeyed from the heart, the name of Christian rightfully belong to you.

A Prophetic Day.

I received a paper a few days since, published to advocate the literal day theory in prophecy. I cannot accept of any such exposition. The seventy weeks of Daniel and the twenty-three hundred days some think have proved a failure. Mr. Miller took the ground that the seventy weeks were cut off from the twenty-three hundred days, one reaching to the crucifixion or the destruction of the city and the sanctuary, the other to the coming of our Lord and the destruction of the earth. Not so. But to the cleansing of the sanctuary; 1843 was a remarkable year whether it ended a prophetic period or not. First class consulships were established at Jerusalem. Dr. Barclay says they were kings in Jeshrun with great power from the Christian nations. The cleansing of the sanctuary may be a progressive work. It appears to me that the time to favor Zion has come, for thy servants take pleasure in her stones and favor the dust thereof. Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles are ended. Jerusalem is trodden down today, and yet there is a marked change. The time of the end has come. Many are running to and fro and knowledge is increasing.

The magnetic telegraph was completed in 1843 and Miss Ann Elsworth wrote the first message, "What hath God wrought;" the words of Balaam; it shall be said at this time, What hath God wrought. Perhaps the first time in three thousand years that those words were repeated in such an impressive manner. At its baptismal consecration its first message was, "Glory to God in the highest; peace on earth and good will to man." Wonderful discovery! Elder Josiah Litch calculated and foretold the end of the Mahomedan military power in 1840 from the periods in the book of Revelation on the year-day theory, and on that day the Christian powers destroyed the Turkish fleet and from that time the Turkish Government has been in subjection to the Christian powers. It is settled with me that a day in the prophetic Scriptures is set for a year.

CHARLES BOARDMAN.

WE will be pleased to receive the small sums due us from many of our patrons. The individual amounts are small, but the aggregate will be a help to us that we stand in need of just now. Brethren and sisters who have promised to "send soon," or "in a few days," have allowed weeks and some months to go by, and still we have not received the promised remittance. We do not wish to crowd, and fully realize that times are close, but when we buy paper we are forced to pay for it. We trust all will see the necessity of renewing promptly, and redeeming their promises. ACT NOW.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

Plymouth, Indiana, Sept. 4, 1889.

No special change in health for the better. As a matter of duty we are trying to get along with the work devolving on us in editing The Restitution, but our labors in this direction are nearly done. Like our work in other directions, these labors have been very imperfect. May God forgive all our errors and short-comings in all things pertaining to our whole life, for they have been many. We are nearing the close of life's journey, where all wrongs stand out in very bold relief. Like David we can say from our very heart, "Enter not into judgment with thy servant, for in thy sight shall no man living be justified." Psa. cxliii. 2. As "all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God," the only hope left us is of being justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus." Rom. iii. 23, 24. The atoning blood of the Son of God alone can wash away [illegible] our sins. Our retrospect shows us with marvellous distinctness how sad has been our failure in earnestly seeking purity of heart and life.

It seems a matter of some difficulty to make our readers understand that we have no concern whatever with the financial business of The Restitution. This business is entirely in the hands of the publisher who is also treasurer, and who alone knows the state of each subscriber's account. All letters are sent out by him alone addressed to those who may be in arrears. The Editor is perfectly ignorant as regards all these matters. Each and every call made in the paper calling for payment of dues is put in by the publisher in whatever part of the paper it may be found, as well as all that appears in the advertising columns. Let it be distinctly understood that we have no concern with anything but the reading matter, original and selected.

THE BOOK OF DANIEL.

Infidels have questioned the authenticity of this wonderful book in which the political destiny of the world is so strikingly foretold. God is confounding the unbeliever with fresh and incontrovertible evidences of the truthfulness of the Bible. Records as old as the time of the Prophet are being exhumed from the ancient ruins whose accounts accurately harmonize with the Bible statement. We take the following from the last Independent which is a translation of Nebuchadnezzar's own language regarding his building Babylon and all its stupendous works, walls and fortifications. Our readers will bear in mind that this king was an idolater—hence the allusion to building houses to these false objects of Babylonian worship. The prophecy of Daniel is inspired, as the history of the past most amply shows; but it marks the providence of God that such testimonies as the following should be brought to light just when needed to confront the infidel. The God of the Bible is the God of Providence, working all things after the counsel of his own will.

"At the end of twelve months he was walking in the royal palace of Babylon. The king spake and said, Is not this great Babylon, which I have built for the royal dwelling place, by the might of my power and for the glory of my majesty?"

No better or more striking confirmation of Nebuchadnezzar's boast, as recorded in the Book of Daniel, in respect of setting forth the characteristic spirit and habit of the man, could be invented than his own words, recorded upon his own cylinders, which have come down to us. From one of these, newly translated by Rev. C. J. Ball, in the April Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archæology, the following passages may be taken for comparison:

"Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon,

* * * * * * * *

The foremost son of Nabopalassar, King of Babylon, am I.
When Merodach, the great lord, had faithfully called me, and
The country to order aright, the people to shepherd,
To complete the towns, to renew the temples,
Had mightily charged me;
To Merodach my lord was reverently obedient—

* * * * * * * *

Etemenanki, the tower of Babylon,
Anew I made.

* * * * * * * *

Ezida the house of Nin-ab within Kadimmerra,
[illegible] the house of Nebo of Sha-harito,
Egisnugal the house of Sin,
Eharsagella the house of Ninkarraka,
Enamhe the house of Rimmon within Kumari,
Erabadkalama the house of Ebemach,
Ekikukar the house of Nincanna in the region of the wall,
In Babylon anew I built, and Reared their heads.
The great gods that dwell within them,
I settled within them.
As for Babylon, the town of the great lord Merodach,
The city of his glory,
Imgur-Bel and Nimitti-Bel,
Its great walls I finished.
On its threshold and its great gates
Many bulls of bronze, and huge serpents mighty,
I built and set up. And
What no former king had done,
The walls of its moat in bitumen and burnt brick,
With the twain of them which the father that begot (me) had thrown around the city,—
I the huge walls, the third of them,
The first, the second,
In bitumen and burnt brick built, and
With the walls my father had constructed I joined them and
The foundation of it in the bosom of the broad earth I laid, and
The top thereof like the mountains I raised on high.
A wall of burnt brick at the ford of the sunset
The rampart of Babylon I threw around.

* * * * * * * *

What no former king had done,
At four thousand cubits' distance, that the sides of the city
From afar might not be approached,
A huge wall at the ford of the sunrising
I threw around Babylon.
Its moat I dug and the bottom of the water I reached;
Its brink with bitumen and burnt brick I made, and
With the scarps my father had constructed I joined it, and
A huge wall in bitumen and burnt brick
On the brink of it like the mountains I built.

* * * * * * * *

The restorations of Esagila and Ezida,
The renovation of Babylon and Borsippa,
Which above what was before I beautified and Made magnificent;
The [illegible] of the great gods
Above the kings my fathers had done I excelled in
All my costly works.
On tablets of [illegible] I wrote, and [illegible] them up for hereafter.
All my works
Whereon tablets of stone I wrote,
May the wise contemplate, and
The praise of the gods may be considered!

* * * * * * * *

Ninkarrak, Lady supreme!
The work of my hands
Joyfully [illegible] thou, and
Let favors for me be brought to pass by thy lip!
A life of distant days, plenty of children,
Health of body and joy of heart,
Yea, a boon bestow thou!
Before Shamash and Merodach bring favor on my works, Command good fortune for me!"

WAR! IS IT COMING?

That war is inevitable is increasingly felt by the kings, ministers, peoples, and soldiers of Europe; and though one and all profess to desire peace, they realise that war is coming. The excitement and anger of the French about last week's rumor that the German Emperor and Italian King would visit Strasbourg in Alsace—one of the towns captured from the French in 1870—shows how the least spark may soon kindle a conflagration of war in Europe. The interests of the nations are so divergent that it seems to surpass the wit of man to reconcile them. How can Russia abandon her dream of extension to Constantinople, and how can it be fulfilled while Austria can draw a sword or spend a kreutzer to prevent it? How can France abandon the hope of regaining her lost provinces, or how can German statesmen and strategists sleep sound of nights till she has abandoned it? How can Kaiser Wilhelm bid his subjects lay by the burden of their panoply as long as great military powers rest upon his western and his eastern frontiers. The coolest heads and stoutest hearts in Europe look forward to the eventual cutting of the Gordian knot by the sword as a matter of certainty. They hint—as Prince Bismarck did the other day in his great speech in the Reichstag—that they cannot tell at any moment what their occupations and pre-occupations may be a twelvemonth hence. Perhaps they might go further and tell us that the operations of war are already begun. The incessant reviews and manœuvres, the military understandings and arrangements, such as that which exists between Germany and Italy, and the wholesale manufacture of weapons and stores—all these are in reality as much a part of the campaign as the marches and countermarches, and stratagems and ambuscades which precede the final shock of armies on the battle-field. The possible magnitude of the approaching war may be surmised from the fact that the Great Powers and the Balkan States will be able to bring into the field nearly 10½ millions of men, with a reserve of nearly 8½ millions more, and also 9 millions for defensive purposes in case of invasion, making a startling total of more than 28 millions of men, that some hasty word or rash act may set at work destroying each other any day. And from Daniel's prophecies we consider this coming war to be inevitable.—Christian Herald.

The Annual Conference of the Church of God for the Northwest will convene at Scholl's Ferry, Ore., on Friday evening, Oct. 4th, holding over the following Sunday. All brethren of the faith in Oregon and Washington are cordially invited. The assembling of ourselves together is especially important to us who see so many signs of the approaching day of the Lord. While attendance upon such meetings, or even sympathy with the plan of work, will not be claimed to be essential to salvation, yet many, if not all the brethren who are alive to the importance of the proclamation of the gospel message, will see in this attempt at united action an opportunity to send the gospel to many who have never heard it before. Teams will meet those from a distance, at Portland.

THE LATE HORATIUS BONAR.

The intelligence of the death of the Rev. Dr. Horatius Bonar, senior minister of the Chalmers Memorial Church, Grange, which took place at his residence, Palmerston Road, yesterday, will be received with feelings of deepest regret, not only by his friends in Edinburgh, but by a much wider circle of people. It is now nearly three years since Dr. Bonar was almost entirely laid aside from active duty, and since the evening of his jubilee celebration on 6th of April, 1888, when he was presented with a testimonial by his congregation, he has never made any public appearance, and the pulpit and pastoral work has been entirely done by his colleague, Mr. Sloan. Dr. Bonar has been entirely confined to the house and mostly to his bedroom since that time, and during the last few days to his bed. During the days which have passed since Sunday he took little or no food, and about two o'clock yesterday morning he had such a paroxysm that his son was called by the nurse to his bedside. After a time, however, he seemed to become easier, and it was thought there was no immediate danger. Later in the morning, about six or seven o'clock, another change of a serious kind was apparent, and the family were again summoned. He continued unconscious from then till nearly one o'clock, when he passed quietly away. An hour or two afterwards the news of the eminent divine's death had become pretty well known, and although the event was anticipated by those who were most conversant with the precarious state of his health, it was received with expressions of profound regret.

Horatius Bonar was a native of Edinburgh, having been born there in December, 1808. He was a representative of a family some of whose members have played a prominent part in the ecclesiastical and social life of the Scottish people. One of his ancestors, James Bonar, minister of Maybole, fought side by side with Henderson in his struggle against prelacy, and another John Bonar of the parish of Torphichen was one of the twelve in the famous "Narrow Controversy." Horatius was the son of Mr. James Bonar, Second Solicitor of Excise for Scotland, and the author of several important philological treaties, and his brothers, Dr. John James Bonar, Greenock, and Dr. Andrew Bonar, Glasgow, are prominent ministers in the Free Church.

He and his brothers, Dr. John James and Dr. Andrew, were strong believers in the pre-millennial advent of Christ, and the subject of this notice not only edited the "Journal of Prophecy," but wrote a book, entitled, "Prophetical Landmarks," in which he endeavored to establish his pre-millennial theory. By-and-bye the controversy which ended in the Disruption, came on, and in spite of his strong adhesion to the principle of national religion, and State recognition of a God, he felt compelled to throw in his lot with the Seceders at that time.

Dr. Bonar will long be remembered as a public preacher, and for his contributions to the religious literature of the day. His deep and accurate knowledge of human nature, his own simple faith, his appreciation of the difficulties and temptations which are apt to lead men into wrong courses, and his broad sympathetic character eminently fitted him for pulpit and pastoral work, and gave him an influence over his fellow-creatures which it was the privilege of only a comparative few to exercise. He was most successful as a speaker to the young, and his Sunday evening services, which were chiefly for their benefit, were one of the most interesting features of his work. He addressed them with earnestness and in such plain and simple language as to carry them with him from beginning to end of the service, and not only the children, but the large number of older people who usually filled the galleries of the church, were edified and improved. He had a large heart towards missionary work, and it was shown in all its force and power in his advocacy of the M'All mission work in Paris. But it is in connection with his hymns that Dr. Bonar is most widely known. There is scarcely a collection in existence belonging to any denomination of the catholic faith which does not include some of his contributions to poetical religious literature, and some of them have been translated into many languages.—"Scottish Leader," Aug. 1, 1889.

In the newspaper notice, it seems to me that due prominence is not given to the fact that Dr. Bonar started the Quarterly Journal of Prophecy, (a magazine consisting of upwards of 100 pages) and carried it on as Editor and generous contributor for twenty-five years. In the closing number the leading article entitled, "Our Last," the Editor says.

"In October, 1848, we published our first number; and now, in October, 1873, we publish our last.

"We were smiled at when we began our work, as re-attempting what had been often tried, but never succeeded, and what never would succeed. The adversaries of prophetic study, and especially some of our post-millennial friends, began to prophesy concerning us, and to fix dates, predicting that in two years at farthest we should be no more.

"By the good hand of God upon us, we have survived the predicted period considerably, and have disappointed our opponents, having published no less than one hundred and one numbers, or twenty-five volumes; while during this period we have seen several similar periodicals go down.

"Our circulation has not been very large, but it has been sufficient to enable us to go on so far without loss to any one. Various reasons, however, into which we shall not enter, incline us to close, and to bid our readers farewell."

The article thus began extends to seven pages, and touches on "Theological sensationalism," Irvingism in its ritualistic aspect, "Broad Churchism" Darbyism, extreme externalism, etc. He says, "Evangelicalism oscillates between Calvinism and Arminianism, and would greatly like a little more 'liberality,' or breadth of view as to propitiation and future punishment. Perfectionists proclaim that they have not sinned for years, and that they do love the Lord with all their heart; while others (even ministers of Evangelical churches) contend for justification by resurrection, not by the cross—following John Henry Newman, and other Popish or mystic divines." In a foot-note to this he adds—"In the Christian of Jan. 23, 1873, we read the following words, 'We want power, and the cross gives no power; we want life and the cross gives no life.' Had the speaker forgotten 1 Cor. i. 18, 24. 'The preaching of the cross is the power of God' and 'we preach Christ crucified the power of God.'"

He closes by a reference to the extreme literalists, remarking that "the extreme minuteness of detail into which some literalists have gone as to future events, and especially as to their relative allocation, has, by the puzzles and perplexities thus introduced, repelled not a few.... His closing paragraphs are these:

"But [illegible] got them away from the prophetic word, though thus disfigured. It is a light shining in a dark place, until the daydawn and the day-star arise. Let us walk in the light, and all the more because the ruler of the darkness of this world seeks to quench or hide it from our view. Let his ministers be faithful in proclaiming his advent boldly.

"The truth is that the Master may be nearer than we think. It will be well for us, when he comes, to be found, not only waiting for his appearing, but searching his word."

J. Cameron.

Sermon delivered in Grange Free Church, Edinburgh, on Sept. 11, 1887, by Dr. Horatius Bonar, and believed to have been the last occasion on which Dr. Bonar publicly officiated in the congregation:

His text was taken from Matt. xxiv. 37–38, "As the days of Noah were, so shall the coming of the Son of man be. For as in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be."

He who is "the faithful and true witness" even the Son of God who came to bear witness to the truth, gave testimony here concerning our world, that most deeply concerns us all, and that more and more as the ages roll away. He selects two eras, two epochs, two periods, specially. And this testimony is for our warning. These two periods are, "the days of Noah," and "the days of the Son of man." He places them before us just as he did before the men of his day. Mark what these periods are. They are not eras of light but of darkness. They are eras of judgment and of terror. He selects them for our warning. He speaks this truth aloud in the ears of a careless world, which shuts its ears against everything but business, vanity and pleasure. He tells them of what is yet before them, even "the days of the Son of man." He couples the two together. The days of Noah meaning 120 years during which Noah preached, and warned, and besought in vain. Men listened, perhaps were interested for a while, and yet in the end were utterly heedless. Let us look at this, let us see what the Lord means to teach us, what he means to teach the church and the world, you and me.

Observe there is one thing that runs through the whole; it is comprised in that one word, rejection; rejection of what is divine, of what is supernatural, rejection of the things of God. God and man come face to face, and man says to God, I will have none of you, "We will not have this man to reign over us." It is a rejection which involves divers points.

First, here we have in both cases, in the case of "the days of Noah" and in the case of "the days of the Son of man," rejected truth. It was by truth that God was working among the sons of men, presented to the antediluvians in their mad career of worldliness and corruption. Not their own truth as they would call it, but just like the truth preached by Jonah, "Yet forty days and Nineveh shall be overthrown." So with Noah, Yet 120 years and the world shall be overflowed with water. There was specially rejected truth; and at all times we find divine truth, supernatural, directly from God, not reasoned out by man, we find this truth rejected. Men are willing enough to receive the conjectures, philosophies and sentiments of human device; but a message directly from the lips of him who made them, and who shall be their Judge, they will not receive. This is the world's condemnation. The present is a lying age; the philosophy of this age is lying; the literature of this age is lying. This age will receive anything that professes to be truth, except what comes from God.

Second, it is not merely rejected truth, but rejected grace. The message is not merely concerning judgment, it is "the exceeding riches of the grace of God" which showed the divine willingness to spare over the world in the midst of its wickedness. Grace! grace! the amount of meaning contained in that word "grace!" It is by grace we are kept even for a single hour out of hell. We little realize what grace means—the source of what flows to us from God. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." The word grace is constantly on our lips, but little understood, if not misunderstood, and abused for purposes of sin. "Grace! grace!" "Where sin abounded grace did much more abound." Amid all that antediluvian iniquity, there came up a voice from the lips of God's own servant, proclaiming grace! grace! That is rejected, and the world went down at last in the flood.

Third, not only truth and grace, but long-suffering was rejected. This means more than grace, it means grace protracted, for it may be months, and years, and ages. God is unwilling to leave the sinner alone to perish. He is continually lifting up his voice in the midst of this ungodly world. Yea! God sware by himself, "As I live, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but rather that he should turn from his evil ways and live. Turn ye, turn ye, from your evil ways, for why will ye die, O house of Israel?" In the prospect of the coming flood Noah would point to the ark he was building, giving repeated warnings, "Turn ye, turn ye." But turn they would not. They rejected long-suffering grace. This will be the heaviest part of the sinner's eternal ruin; not because God would not be reconciled to him, but because he would not be reconciled to God. The sinner looked that long-suffering in the face, and said, I will have none of it.

But there is one thing which rises above all this, comprising all, but yet rising above them—a rejected person. The messenger embodied all these in his own person and message. Noah was the embodiment of that grace in all its long-suffering; and the Son of man is still more the embodiment of divine grace, of divine long-suffering. They rejected him. He stood as one full of compassion and loving-kindness upon their own hill, looking down upon their own city, weeping, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not?" "I would," but "ye would not." I blessed, you would not be blessed. In both cases there is the rejection of a person. The rejection of a person—an ambassador of peace, a royal ambassador—is the most heinous of national crimes. The heavenly ambassador rejected! Noah but man; the Lord, the Lord from heaven—whom they saw, heard, and of whose hand they could take hold—entreating them to turn and live, this was the guilt and crime, the rejected Christ.

I do not doubt that in the case of those who were lost in the flood, there was the stinging remembrance of Noah's words. Those words would come back again, and again, and again, in the ears of those lost souls. O that we had listened to the message! In the case of the Lord Jesus Christ, in the face of that coming eternity, how thoughts of past sermons, warnings, invitations, and messages of love will come into upon the memory when too late!

All this is coming suddenly upon an unready world, to get no more warning than it has had already. No second Sodom and Gomorrah, no second destruction of Jerusalem, if such could do any good. "Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments." In an hour when he thinks not the Son of man cometh. Gird up your loins. You are living far too like the world. To the unbelieving man he says, Make ready, for sudden destruction is coming upon an unready world, "in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh."

Dear Restitution:

We are still able to report progress, for which we thank God and take courage. Last Sunday morning we had the privilege of baptizing three more into the one body. And while evil men and seducers wax worse and worse, yet a few hear the glad tidings of the kingdom, the scales drop from their eyes, the glories of the future age loom up in all the grandeur of the eternal, their very being is ravished with the sight; and while they realize that by obedience all is attainable, they wonder, admire, believe and obey. Darkness is exchanged for light, they become illuminated by the word, "old things have passed away and behold all things have become new." No one can form the faintest idea of the change except those who have been transferred out of darkness into his marvellous light. And while the little flock are full to overflowing, warmed by the genial rays of righteousness, looking by faith within the veil, grasping the great and precious promises, feasting daily from the fountain-head, and one continual stream of praise and thanksgiving ascends the ladder that Jacob saw. The world knows them not. They are not recognized by the nominal churches only as infidels. Truth is fallen in the streets, and he that departeth from iniquity maketh himself a prey. And yet the salt has not lost its saving influence. Still the cry goes up, Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly, amen.

Called.

Did Christ or his apostles or the primitive Christians wait to be called by some man or men before they went out to preach the gospel? If so where can I find the record of it? In these last days of covetousness and money-getting, and seeking pleasure, ease and comfort, even those who profess to be separated from the world and have consecrated their lives to the service of God, and say that they take the word of God for their only rule of faith and practice, and say that they are called of God to preach the gospel of the kingdom of God. Do they do as Christ and his apostles or the primitive Christians did, go out among the people and preach the word trusting in God for food and raiment? Or do they pattern after those who preach for doctrine the traditions and commandments of men, by giving notice that they will respond to calls of men who will pledge to pay all the expenses and compensate the evangelist for time and labors. Brethren, if you do not trust God more, will he trust you with much? Your brother in hope of life, trusting in God.

Annual Jubilee.

The harvest is over, the summer almost ended, bringing abundant crops, thus rewarding skill and industry.

The Fair season is here, and the agricultural community will gratefully acknowledge the blessings of a kind Providence in bestowing good health and a fruitful season by attending the annual festivals and showing the improvements resulting from intelligent culture.

Successful County Fairs insure a good State exhibition, and indications point to an excellent Fair Season. Being an "off year" from political disturbance, prompts the management to extra exertions in making the forthcoming Indiana State Fair, September 23d to 28th, excel in every respect. More favorable railroad rates are applied for, to give those at a distance the opportunity of visiting the best Agricultural Fair on the continent, and the Capital City with its many attractions.

Wide Awake for September opens the new serial by Susan Coolidge, a story for girls who have their living to earn; it is called "A Little Knight of Labor"—one of those stories that are enjoyed equally by young and old. The Peppers serial by Margaret Sidney, is full of good times and exciting happenings, as is usual with the Peppers household. An article that will be read with interest relates to "Maria Mitchell at Vassar," and is written by one of her old pupils; there is a good portrait of the famous woman-astronomer. Miss Risley Seward gives the last of her Around the World Stories—perhaps the most entertaining of them all; it is entitled "My Dinner at Kensington Palace" — an amusing glimpse of royalty, and others of equal merit. The poems are unusually good, among them: "The Carron Name," by William H. Hayne; "The Little Ant that Went to Jerusalem," by Rose Terry Cooke; "September," by Mrs. Whiton-Stone; "The People that Were Disappointed with Their Noses," by John Brownjohn; and "The Boston Horse and the Electric Car," by L. J. Gregg. Mrs. White's Public School Cookery concerns fish and eggs. The Famous Stones story is about the "Austrian Yellow." Prof. Starr has another Geological Talk, this time about "A Forest of Bouquet Greens." The boys will enjoy the article about "Swimming." The "Men and Things" pages are full of bright anecdotes and worth-while talks. Wide Awake is $2.40 a year. D. Lothrop Company, Publishers, Boston, Mass.

THE SCAR WILL REMAIN.

Oh, thou who from crime and pollution art free,
Watch well the temptations that throng around thee!
A character tarnished ne'er loses the stain—
The wound may be healed, but the scar will remain.

'Tis true that the vilest forgiveness may earn—
The sorrowing lost to the fold may return;
But sad recollection will bring with it pain—
The wound may be healed, but the scar will remain.

The misty bloom brushed from the cheek of the plum
No more to its delicate surface can come;
And the pure heart polluted ne'er freshens again.
The wound may be healed but the scar will remain.

The slave of vile appetites, touched by remorse,
May weep o'er his follies and alter his course;
But still on life's tablet his record is plain—
The wound may be healed, but the scar will remain.

Then shun ye the tempter, and seek ye the goal,
Which promises peace to the world-weary soul.
If ye sin ye will strive to forget it in vain—
The wound may be healed, but the scar will remain.

THE FOOLISHNESS OF PREACHING.

For the benefit of several earnest searchers after truth, I invite attention for a few minutes before the breaking of bread, to the fact stated in 1 Cor. i. 18, that "it pleased God, by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." The preaching is foolishness to them that perish. They consider it foolish, and therefore do not believe, but perish. "But," says the Apostle, "unto us which are saved it is the power of God." What is the power of God unto us? Why, the very preaching that is foolishness to unbelievers. In Rom. i. 16, this same apostle says its the gospel that is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth. But what gospel has he reference to? I answer, The Gospel. There is but one gospel. It is the gospel Jesus went everywhere preaching. And to show you what gospel he preached, and also sent his apostles to preach, I quote his words in Matt. xxiv. 14, "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come." The gospel of the kingdom is the power of God. I am aware that other powers, or supposed powers, are offered for that purpose, but the power of God unto salvation, is the gospel of the kingdom. But did the apostles preach the gospel of the kingdom as he told them? They did. Philip was sent out by the apostles, and he preached it, for when the Samaritans believed Philip, preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized both men and women. It would appear that Philip believed and acted just as if Mark xvi. 16 was the veritable word of the Lord. His business was that of saving men and women; and his method was to preach the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, and then baptize those who believed it; evidently, then, faith in the things of the kingdom and name must precede baptism. Who dare say faith in anything else will answer the same purpose? In Acts xix. 8; Acts xx. 25; Acts xxviii. 23, 30, 31, we have abundant evidence that Paul taught the same things; the gospel of the kingdom is the gospel he tells us he is not ashamed of. Are there any conditions besides faith, before the gospel becomes the power of God unto salvation to us? Yes; it will not save us in our sins; they must be put away, and at this point I introduce the words of Jesus in Matt. xxviii. 19, 20; "Go ye, therefore, and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, teaching them to observe all things, whatsoever I have commanded you." He was just on the point of leaving them and could not repeat all that he had taught them, but remind them of it in this way. There is no mention of repentance here; but when Peter commenced the proclamation of the gospel under this new commission, he said, "Repent—reform—and be baptized, every one of you into the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit."

Matthew's only includes baptism into the saving name, so that they may become the legal, and adopted sons of God. Among the all things Matthew did not report at length, were repentance, faith, and remission of sins in baptism. But we read their warrant for repentance and remission of sin in his name in Luke xxiv. 47, "And that remission of sins should be preached in his name, among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem. "Remission of sins in his name;" out of that name, or without that name, then, there is no remission of sin. Solemn thought. How can we obtain that saving name? Listen to the sweet words of Jesus: "Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father." etc. What heavenly balm these words contain! If men and women could see the hallowed privilege of thus becoming sons and daughters of the Lord God Almighty, we should hear little about the duty of being baptized. We should hear no twisting and turning, or quibbling or straining to find an excuse for the evasion of baptism for the remission of sins.

Faith, reformation and baptism are three conditions necessary to make the gospel the power of God to our salvation; a blind confidence will not do; it must be faith in the gospel of the kingdom of God. And how reasonable this is, when we consider that it is the goodness of God displayed in the gospel of the kingdom that leads to repentance. We love him because he first loved us, and we are ready to obey him because we love him, and because the very first act of obedience secures to us all the rights and immunities of children of God. Repentance is not sorrow for sin. Sorrow for having sinned against the God of love leads to repentance—leads to a change of mind and conduct toward God. Baptism into the name thus secures to us the name, and secures our pardon.

But is there any other condition of salvation? Oh, yes; what we have hitherto found only makes us candidates for the kingdom of God—only elects us to suffer that we may reign; only enlist us to run the race, and to fight the good fight of faith. It is only he who by patient continuance in well-doing seeks for glory, honor and immortality, that shall have life, Rom. ii. 7. He must walk worthy of the kingdom to which he has been called. He must adorn the doctrine of Christ our Savior. He must be faithful unto death. This line of thought permeates the whole book of God. "To obey is better than sacrifice," is as true as it was in the days of Saul and Samuel. Men are not allowed to select their own trials, or define their own duties. It is God's prerogative to state the conditions on which his blessing—even life forevermore, shall be bestowed. It is the sheerest presumption in man, to dispense with any of them. The gospel is powerless until believed, but when believed it is the power of God. This shows that man has to save himself, by the use of means prescribed by God. Says the inspired record of Peter, "with many other words did he testify and exhort, saying, save yourselves from this untoward generation; then they that gladly received his word were baptized." And it is ever thus. Those who stumble at this point have not gladly received the word Peter preached or else they would do just as they did. They have received a word that caters to the flesh, and allows them to make their own terms, and define their own faith, or dispense with it altogether as it may please them. "It makes no difference what we believe," is dinged into my ears till it saddens and wearies me. Even some who claim to believe the kingdom is coming, and actually pray "Thy kingdom come," and claim to be heirs of it, only believe it as abstract truth—not as the veritable gospel. Proof of what I say is found in the fact that they teach that men can inherit what they will believe in.

But if the gospel of the kingdom and how to obtain it is not gospel, what is? I have shown you the apostles preached the kingdom of God for gospel. Are there two or more gospels? After offering us the gospel of the kingdom as the power of God unto salvation will he deliberately employ some other power that we know nothing of? If so, we shall be either lost, or else saved without faith in it. Allow me to ask, if the gospel of the kingdom be the power of God, is the gospel of the heaven beyond the stars for immortal souls, the power of God too? If you say yes, I ask you how you know? If you do not know, why do you say so? If you say "no it is not gospel unless God has promised it, then I ask, how can it save you? I talk with people who say, "Oh, yes, certainly, Jesus said, sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth," and then act on the principle that the sincere belief of a lie, will answer every purpose,—sincerity is the all important thing. As if the Spirit would make exceeding great and precious promises, that by these we might be made partakers of Divine nature, and then distribute the promised blessings promiscuously, whether believed or not. Is if the spirit would show us that aliens from the commonwealth of Israel and strangers from the covenants of promise have no hope and therefore without God in the world, and for all that, save this ignorant, faithless, hopeless, godless class just as if he had offered nothing for faith, and made no conditions. As if the Spirit would say, "without faith it is impossible to please God," and add: that faith cometh by hearing the word of God, and then depart from his own rule, and save without any faith at all in what God has promised.

If there be any truth in the statement, that it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe, those who do not believe the gospel of the kingdom will perish. Peter preached baptism into the name for the remission of sins, and Jesus said remission of sin should be preached in his name. In Acts x. 43, we read, To him give all the prophets witness, that through his name, whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sin. This is foolishness to them that perish, I know; but to us it is part and parcel of God's good message, and the power of God. This is where, and when, and how, we obtain remission—"through his name." If this was the mind of God in apostolic times is it not his mind now? There is no virtue in water to wash away sin; there was no poison in the fruit to kill the Adam; they died, nevertheless; disobedience killed them. This, too, is foolishness to them that perish. There is no virtue in water, but obedience brings us just where the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin.

Oh, what pains the Spirit has taken to give us clear conceptions of this truth in all its bearings. Christ is exhibited to us as the heir of all things. He is the only begotten Son, but by baptism into the name we become sons of God, and if sons, then heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ. We thus put on Christ, because it says, "as many"—no more—"as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ," "and if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." If men in apostolic times had to be baptized into Christ, must they not be baptized into him now? If men had to put on Christ by baptism in apostolic times, can they put him on without it now? Again we read, "we are buried with him by baptism into death." What for? That like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life; for if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection. If Paul was speaking for the Spirit, this grand result will surely follow our being planted together in the likeness of his death. But observe clearly, a death to sin is involved here. The word of truth is brought to bear on one who is alive to sin. He must be put to death. How can it be done? How must it be done? Remember, we have to fellowship Christ in death, if we would fellowship him in life. We are graciously permitted to do that without the loss of our natural life, but how? In this way: The consent of our mind to even die with Christ, if need be, is first obtained; and when in obedience to the Divine command we submit to a symbolic death and burial, it is an evidence of the mental and moral transformation that has already taken place. It is the obedience growing out of faith, and the proof of a living faith. And I want to press upon your attention the fact that this proof of faith is demanded. Before you leave your seats I want you to see that it is right here the sinner becomes a saint; right here the alien becomes a citizen; right here the far off one is brought nigh by the blood of Christ; right here the outcast becomes a Son and heir of God, and a joint heir with Christ. In a word, that all the teachings of Christ and the apostles point to this as the time when, and the place where the legal and constitutional change of relationship between God and man takes place. But do not forget that in order to this change of relationship, a change of mind—a transfer of the affection—a reformation of life must have taken place. Baptism will then, and then only, faithfully represent our death with Christ.

Because Paul thanked God that of the Corinthian Church, he only baptized Crispus and Gaius and the household of Stephanus, and said that Christ sent him not to baptize, but to preach the Gospel, some claim that he did not think it necessary to their salvation. But was he thankful that they had not been baptized? No! they had been baptized by others, as we see by I Cor. i. 13, where it says, "Is Christ divided? Was Paul crucified for you? or were ye baptized into the name of Paul?" Paul preached as others could, but they could and did baptize. A foolish partisan spirit sprung up and one was for Paul, another for Apollos, and another for Cephas, and the apostle would bring them to their senses by this strange presentation of the case. If you bear in mind that it was this same Paul who had to wash away his own sin by baptism, see Acts xxii. 16; that it was this same Paul who says we shall have a resurrection like Christ's if we be planted in the likeness of his death; that it was this same Paul who says, "As many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ;" that it was this same Paul who says these very Corinthians were in Christ, the objection will be seen to be weakness itself. Having proved the baptism of the Corinthians, I remark, If the omission of baptism would prove it nonessential, the observance of it would prove it essential. Besides, if it were essential for Crispus and Gaius, and the household of Stephanus, would it not be essential for all?

It is objected, too, that Cornelius received the Holy Spirit simply upon his faith in the glad tidings. Yes, and I would call your attention to the fact, that this was the third miraculous event in connection with this first Gentile convert. The whole circumstance tells volumes of God's wisdom, and goodness and love. Cornelius was devout, he was benevolent, he was in good repute. Can any more be said of those Gentiles now held up as patterns of piety? Now comes the test of his sincerity. Devout as he was, he was informed that he needed words whereby he could be saved. What did this mean but that he was in his sins? that he needed to be told of the God-given method of putting away sin? What did he do about it? Did he fall back upon his reputation, or his piety? No! The germ of obedience was there. He sent for Simon Peter. He wanted to be saved in God's way. And when he heard the message he believed it, and the Holy Spirit fell upon all who heard. This was not the ordinary course of God's dealings with men as abundantly proven elsewhere. It was doubtless a deviation for a beneficent purpose; and I think we have a clue to that purpose in the words of Peter while rehearsing the matter before the other apostles. They took him to task for his connection with these Gentiles, but the fact that the same gifts had been given to the Gentiles as had been bestowed upon themselves, convinced them that repentance unto life had also been granted them; they held their peace and glorified God; e[illegible] they might. Was Cornelius, then, in a salvable state because the the Holy Spirit had taken possession of him? By no means. This was an arbitrary, or involuntary supernatural endowment of certain powers. It made morally and legally no better or worse. Wicked men have been thus possessed for a purpose who remained wicked still.

Part of Peter's message to Cornelius was that he could have remission of sins through Jesus' name if he believed. See Acts x. 43. Were his sins remitted when the Holy Spirit fell upon him? I answer no. First because it is through the name the believer's sins are remitted; and secondly, we learn from Jesus words. Matt. xxiii. 19, that the name is obtained by baptized into it. Peter's work was only half done. He had prepared the candidate for induction into Christ, and now, in harmony with all I have said, he commanded them to be baptized. Plainly, then, we should do just as the Spirit directed Peter to do, show religionists who are ignorant of God's covenants of promise, that believers of the same can have remission of sins through the name, and the name is obtained when from the heart they obey the truth in baptism. This will test them.

It is also held by some that as the Lord Jesus did not deem baptism necessary in the case of the dying robber, it is not necessary in our case unless we feel like it. Only the most superficial can be taught in the snare. It was not necessary for Abraham and Isaac and Jacob and David, and all the prophets and patriarchs, to be baptized for the remission of sins and sonship, because God had not required it of them. The commission to make disciples of all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, Son and Spirit for the remission of sins had not been given when the thief was assured of paradise without baptism. This is a new and living way that had not been opened when the thief was assured of paradise. He, therefore, was not amenable to the law, because it had not been published. The fact of its publication is proof of its necessity. If it was necessary to publish it, is it not necessary to observe it?

It is my solemn conviction that the man who knows the truth, and becomes the apologist of those who will neither believe, nor obey the gospel of the kingdom in this heaven appointed way, is in a God-dishonoring and soul-destroying business. The church is the pillar and support of the truth. Let us stand for its defense. Let our plea be for a certain sound of the trumpet and for sound words. Let our sympathies go out toward those who dare speak the unadulterated truth of God. Let us beware of those who would make the narrow way broad enough to admit those who are ignorant of the first principles of the gospel of the kingdom of God; and remember that the obedient children wish to know their Father's will, so that they can do it.

Some say, Don't tell me that men and women who have been immersed into water as believers are necessarily thereby immersed into Christ, and have drank of his Spirit. From what I have said I trust you will know that I will never say that. Indeed I never knew one who claimed to be of the household of faith who said that. I regard this as a false issue, and one calculated to befog the mind, obscure the light of Divine truth, and as an apology and special pleading for self-willed, faithless and disobedient pietists.

It seems to be understood by some that the words, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one toward another" is a test of discipleship, irrespective of faith in the gospel of the kingdom of God, or of obedience to it in baptism. There were no unbelievers in the little company to whom the words were addressed, although one of them had a devil. I apprehend, therefore, in view of previous findings, that this is the believer's test, not the unbelievers; and if applied to Judas, would have shown that he was no disciple, although numbered with them. Mere intellectual assent is not enough. Our faith must work by love, and purify the heart, or it is of no account. It must influence our life, or it is useless. It must take hold of our affection or we may as well have no faith. We must stand beside the apostle who said we love him because he first loved us; and when the love of Christ constrains us, it will flow out toward every member of his body, and preserve to us the badge of discipleship.

To turn the tables, somewhat, let me say, do not tell us that the command to love is essential, and the command to be baptized is not essential. If the command to love be essential because it is commanded, is not baptism essential for the same reason? Do not tell us that amiable people who will not believe the gospel of the kingdom, and therefore have not been baptized into Christ are in him. You have no warrant for saying that. It is too plainly limited to "As many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ," to listen to that Syren song. It will be time enough to talk about such being in Christ after another way of getting into Christ has been discovered. Do not tell us that although baptism is not essential, it should not be left undone. Pray why not? Think of it a moment! Not essential, and yet it should not be left undone. But why not? Is it because it has been commanded it should not be left undone? Is it because remission of sins, and the adoption of sons, and joint heirship with Christ are secured in that way? Is it because we constitutionally and legally get into Christ thus? Is it because we become anointed ones when we put on Christ by baptism? that it should not be left undone? If so, what could be more essential? If not, will you please give us one good reason for being baptized at all?

Finally, may God bless those of us who have obeyed the truth in first principles, to live Godly; to present to the world faithful and lovely samples of the religion of Jesus; to be living epistles indeed. I rejoice this morning that I have the badge of discipleship, and from your beaming faces I judge that you, too love one another. This is the best of bonds, surely. How could it be otherwise, when we drink at the same fountain? When we believe the same promises? When we cherish the same blessed hope, the glorious appearing of the great God and the Savior Jesus the Christ. Hail happy day; soon may it come and find us fit to be gathered to that goodly land, with the faithful of all ages!

To those inquiring their way to Zion with their faces thitherward I would say, look not behind you, press on the search for truth as for hidden treasure, and when assured that you have found it think no sacrifice too great to secure God's great salvation. Obedience to the truth will cut you off from the world and make you peculiar, and the world will hate you just as it hated the disciples after their reception of the Father's word. And I would not be surprised if hatred came from a quarter from which you now expect different treatment. But if God be for you, who can be against you? If you cling to the promises, and live in reference to their fulfilment, the glorious Lord will soon appear for those who are his; and the abundant entrance into his everlasting kingdom administered to you, will cure all the ills of this life. Roll on, thou wheels of time, and bring the glorious day,

"When the redeemed shall come,
To Zion clad in bright array,
Their blissful, happy home."

Influences.

Men's minds are like wheels in ruts, controlled to some extent by the surroundings. Christ and his apostles, men from the hilly country of Galilee, were somewhat different in habits from those who lived in Jerusalem. Even so now, people who live in rural districts, in hilly, stony countries who see and handle but little money, are quite different in habits from those who live in lands of plenty surrounded by luxuries. And it is also a fact that those who control the press to a large extent control public sentiment. Therefore there is a great responsibility resting on editors and on those who say, what shall be published. If articles or pieces written mostly by those surrounded by plenty and luxuries are published, the public sentiment is influenced in that direction. But if articles from the humbler class be published the influence is in the opposite direction. For it is a fact that writers, perhaps unknowingly, express as it were between the lines, their conditions in life. But in these days there is a tendency to appear high-minded and literary, and the humbler class is not listened to.

DIED.

ONGLEY.—At Lincolnville, Pa., Aug. 18, 1889, Adah Ann, wife of John T. Ongley, aged 68 years and 10 months.

We have been married nearly 49 years. She was truly a Christian from twelve years of age. We embraced the blessed hope in 1844, and soon after, the glorious restitution, embracing the hope of Israel. She was always ready to aid me in going away to proclaim the precious truths we cherish, although at a sacrifice. Although so short a sickness, only six days, all our children with one exception, were gathered around her sick bed. Also my only brother, who was present when we were married, and his eldest daughter, came from Louisville, Ky., the day she was taken sick. Her half-sister and her husband, Elder Newell Wood, were also present at the funeral. Our children, grandchildren, and all, numbered thirty-two. The friends and neighbors for a number of miles around were present and brought floral offerings to show their esteem. It is stated that there were 100 vehicles and many of them followed in procession to the cemetery. Sister Mollie Grove, of Plum, Venango Co., Pa., spoke to the multitude from 2 Tim. vi. 8. It was said by some that it was the greatest discourse they ever heard. She is laid in the lot where father Ongley sleeps. I feel that I probably may soon follow. Yours in the blessed hope.

WAITING FOR THE KING.

'Twas in the spring that I received the message,
"The King is coming soon along thy way!"
And so I brought my richest gifts together,
As offerings at his royal feet to lay.

But mornings dawned and changed to dreary evenings,
And he came not, though weeks lagged by in vain,
Yet though sometimes I almost glimpsed his beauty,
He neared me but to turn away again.

And other days trailed out their bitter anguish,
While nights came on whose darkness knew no star,
Save the great hope of that unmeasured splendor
Which wrapped the King as he still trode afar.

And autumn came, and dying, brought the winter,
My tired heart grew more weary with the snow,
My soul was sick with the repeated question,
Why does he tarry when he promised so?

And still I wait in steadfast faith, believing
That he will come with surety of release,
That I shall see him in his matchless glory,
And know the blessing of his perfect peace.

JESUS IS COMING.

"He (the Pope) knows that it is a fundamental article of the Protestant religion to believe that he is antichrist."—Archbishop Hughes, in New York Courier and Enquirer, Nov. 22, 1851.

Opposition to Christ was manifested at an early day, 1 John iv. 3. He that was not for him was against him. This anti-ism grew. It opposed Christ's claim and sought to domineer over his flock. When it headed up in one man who boldly usurped God's prerogatives and Christ's claim to rule his own, it became pre-eminently the antichrist. Such was and is Popery. Anti signifies "against, opposite, contrary, or in the place of." (Webster). He who opposeth God and sitteth in the place of God, is anti to God, 2 Thess. ii. Such a one speaks great words against God. Dan. vii. If he deny the Christ his true place in the church as Head and Mediator, he is antichrist. The Papal imposture does this. In this way Popery "denies the Father and the Son," John ii. 22. This, says John, is antichrist.

Is the Pauline Man of Sin the true antichrist foretold in prophecy? Is his coming a future or a past event? If future, then the great apostacy and black day for Christ is yet to come; if past, then the Lord's advent is the next thing. If past no future hellish king of fierce persecuting aspect and world-wide power intervenes between our position and redemption; if past, antichrist is not a fancy or fact to come, but a thing in history, and looking for such a one in future may prove a snare. The Futurist view involves delay in Christ's coming: he does not look for that as coming suddenly, but rather for some huge demonized man, who is to fill the earth with terror. The question is important. Since its establishment in 1842, this paper has advocated the view named at the head of this article. It utters no uncertain sound. The Romish Hierarchy is Mystery Babylon of the Revelation, and the long line of Roman Pontiffs constitute Paul's Man of Sin. We see no reason to change this opinion. Rather does the conviction of its truth grow stronger. Perfectly conversant with the other view, we deliberately reject it as a ministration and perversion of Holy Scripture. With the great body of leading and Orthodox Protestant commentators and expositors, we hold the Papal system to include and exhibit all the marks and features of Daniel's little horn, Paul's man of sin, and John's harlot woman. Popery answers every description of the foretold monster, who after Pagan Rome fell was to invade the holy place and ravage the Church of Jesus. Popery came on time, Popery has reigned its time, Popery is waning, dying; Babylon, of which the Man of Sin is the headship, is fallen, as divinely foretold, and the apostate crew that refuses to reform, rushes on to its destruction at our Lord's advent in clouds. Hence the favorite belief with some, especially in England, and particularly the Futurists of the Pember and Baxter school of interpreters, that the great tribulation of Matthew xxiv. is yet to come on the whole world, caused by some willful antichristian king, variously interpreted as a single man or some infernal leader; a wonderful one who grasps supreme power inaugurates a reign of terror, and plays havoc among men for three years and a-half, when Christ will come and destroy him and deliver his Church,—this view we confess an utter lack of faith in. It is burdened with blunders, guesses, false applications, assumptions, lawless interpretations, and arbitrary conclusions. The view is unnecessary, burdening and unsustained. Fair, sound exegesis of Scripture, solid fact in history is against it. We hear the crashing footsteps of antichrist in the aisles of the past, and we stand in the path of prophecy, not before, but after his coming. We wait between antichrist's advent and Christ's advent, and long for the latter. The usurper of Christ's place, who has ruled in blood, is in history. The Papal system fills the bill in each and every particular. Not one similitude is wanting. We find Popery answering both in wholeness and detail the order, the rise, the methods, the character, the work, the domination and doom of the antichrist set forth in the Scriptures we have named, and Popery's coming, which was after or according to the working of Satan, is proved to be Satan's masterpiece.

First: Was the horn-power to arise out from the ten-fold division of the iron of the fourth empire—the Roman, Dan. vii. 8, 24? Just so did the Papacy, as all history shows. Were three of the ten to be violently plucked up and thrust aside to make way for it, vs. 7, 24? This too was exactly fulfilled in Italy when the Bishop of Rome took the throne at the world's center. Were the holy to be given by imperial power into the horn-power's hand? It was done by emperor, king and prince for 1,200 years. His hand implies a man's hand: who among kings but the Roman Pontiff ever had all the church in his hand? Was the horn who had a man's hand to have a man's eyes? A Bishop at Rome became this argus-eyed man, a man whose Jesuit detectives have eyes that search out all the earth. Was this man of eyes, this horn-man, this man with a mighty hand, to possess a wondrous mouth? Never did any have such a mouth as Popes, a mouth of arrogant assumption, a mouth fulminating curses, a mouth full of blasphemies. Was this man-mouth, or this strong-handed and evil-mouthed man, to utter great swelling words? Did any man on earth since Adam ever spake such pretentious words, claim such high titles, or issue such terrible edicts, as this man the Pope? Was the horn to speak great words against God? Gather up what Popes have said, and see if the Papacy does not fill the picture. Was the horn to wear out the saints (words that imply a long, continual process of pressure, friction and wasting)? Let John Fox's "Acts and Monuments" tell who has by every hellish art wasted the protesting Church since the establishment of the Inquisition in A. D. 1200. Was he to change times and laws? Who has done this mischief as has the twelve centuries of Roman Pontiffs? And who in human history can be meant save Popery, who, after domination as a king over kings for more than a millennium of years, has before our eyes had his dominion, estates, temporalities, or civil power taken away by an Italian papal king whom God gave to sit in judgment over his old master? Who but antichrist? All our proofs are in solid, well-known history. Its facts concerning Popery answer in every minutia to Daniel's little horn. No other power has or does or will so perfectly fill up the prophetic picture.

If we come to Paul's man of sin, here again in every foretold feature Popery is described. A long line of nearly 300 Popes fill the bill. Not a feature is wanting. Lying before him, between Paul's day, the inspired apostle sees the apostacy (apostasia) or falling away; not an invasion of the church by world-powers from without, but a defection from within, a backsliding era, and then would come, literally "he opposing," or "the opponent" (Diaglott); in other words, the one against, or the great anti. It is perfectly plain that Paul had in his mind the horn of Daniel vii. The coming one had marks: he was to be literally "the man of sin," i. e., a leading man who would arise out of the terrible apostasia and because of it. And he is also, literally, "the son of the destruction," i. e., the one "whom the Lord shall destroy," 2 Thess. ii. 8. Did the Papal abomination come from inside the church? Yes, a bishop became in time a pope and a king. Was he to be an opposer, an opponent, an anti, hostile to the true Christ? The Papacy from the first has been so. It is a perpetual menace to Christianity. Was he to still retain the Christian name? The Pope says he is his holiness, God's Vicegerent on earth. He without? No indeed. He is the Head of all within the Christian realm, as he says. Was this man to seat himself within the temple of God, words plainly denoting the church? Popery does so. Was he to exalt or lift himself above all other august or godlike things? All Popes have done so. Was he to exhibit himself as God, or show himself God? Pages could be filled with quotations from Popes, cardinals and Romish Doctors, who unite in declaring the Pope sits in the seat of God, and is God! Was he to be the "lawless one," and, as Daniel had said, think to arbitrarily, as if he were God, "change times and laws?" All who read history know how the Pontiffs, in decrees from the Vatican or edicts in councils, have done so. Was this man of sin to be revealed along down the coming centuries, when another existing and restraining power was removed? All know that when Pagan Rome gave way, its seat on the Seven Hills was occupied by the Papacy. Not one mark of this sinful lawless man named by Paul that is not found in the Papacy. And all is accomplished save the final destruction by the brightness of Christ's coming, 2 Thess. ii. 8. The coming of the antichristianism was the only prophetic obstacle between Paul's time and the advent. He never named another hindrance to that advent. When the hindrance stood up, and became a fact in history it would be wasted by the gospel and destroyed by the advent. Today the one hindrance in Paul's fourteen epistles is a nullity, and hence the coming Lord's day is at hand. It was not at hand when Paul wrote; it is at hand now.

If we turn to Revelation xvii. and xviii. a woman, a harlot woman, symbol of an apostate church, is seen, who at first rides the beast or is supported by civil power, and then she is thrown off and is supported by the people over whom she rules. The Papal system for centuries was sustained by the kings and itself had kingly power and temporalities, but today and since 1870 her civil power is gone. No political power upholds. Kings were once cajoled and infatuated by the harlot; today few if any sympathize. Think of Europe's kings just before Luther's time. All did the bidding of the Popes. Were the people of many lands to be made drunk by her? Look at the 200,000,000 today under the "strong delusion" of Romish superstition, held in awe and subjection by the forced belief that the priest and his superiors stand in the place of God! Was the woman to be clothed in purple and scarlet? This was the ancient dress of whores, and these are favorite colors at Rome with Pope, cardinal and all. Was the harlot rich? What church is richer with its $600,000,000 of property in Italy, to say nothing of the $225,000,000 invested in St. Peter's, the countless treasures of the Vatican, and church property all world over? Who but the papal hierarchy owns all, all? The people do not; the ruling woman does. Is this harlot church "drunk with the blood of saints?" The words identify her headship with the little horn of Daniel that was to wear out the saints. Claiming power over men's souls and bodies, Rome has, when she could, crushed all who opposed her, and her victims are millions. Is the harlot a "mystery?" The Pope once wore the word on his tiara. Is she "Babylon?" She adopted the mysteries of Babylon's idolatries. Is she "mother of abominations?" Let the revelations of Chiniquy, and Fulton, and a dozen others, tell the story of her rottenness. In every age she has shed blood; her thirst for it is not quenched; she would shed it now and establish again the Inquisition, if she could. In all our reading we have never seen one penitent word or act, or read one expression of regret for her persecutions and innumerable martyrdoms in the past! Not one! And against no other on earth is there directed such awful denunciations, such vengeful threats, such exterminating judgments by Almighty God as against this murderous Harlot!

Why then say antichrist has not come? Why scan the future to find what lies in the past? Why burden and blacken the future with shadow that already for more than a thousand years has covered the world? (The great tribulation of Matt. xxiv. and the fall of Babylon of Rev. xviii. are yet to form the subject of future papers). It is settled and is plain as evidence can make it, that no future apostacy or coming antichrist is needed to fulfil the word of God. In the words of the Crucified, "It has been finished," and the Church looks and waits for the true Christ to come out of heaven.—Messiah's Herald.

BURLINGTON ROUTE.

Cheap Lands in the West.

Along the lines of the BURLINGTON ROUTE in Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming and northwestern Kansas, particularly on its new extensions in that territory, there is still some Government land awaiting settlement, as well as other cheap land held by individuals. These lands are among the best to be had anywhere in the country for agricultural and grazing purposes. In the comparatively new districts are many improved farms which can be purchased at a very low rate of that class of restless pioneer settlers who are ready at all times to move "farther west." In the territory embraced by the BURLINGTON'S lines west of the Missouri River, there are in the vicinity of two hundred new towns which offer to manufacturers and business men an excellent opportunity to locate with profit. Send to the undersigned for descriptive pamphlets and other matter giving location and full particulars concerning these lands.

Map of the United States.

A large, handsome Map of the United States, showing North and South Dakota, mounted and suitable for office or home use and issued by the BURLINGTON ROUTE, will be furnished responsible parties free on application to the undersigned.

WHY SHOULD I Go to MONTANA?

Great Reservation. Because 18,000,000 acres of free Government land, with a delightful climate, and equally suited for general farming and stock raising, have just been opened to the homeseeker, in the Milk River Valley and near Benton and Great Falls.

Stock Raising. Because the favorable climate and superior grasses of Montana make it the natural home of horses, cattle, sheep and other domestic animals; and because winter feeding is not required, as stock graze at large the year round.

General Farming. Because a rich soil and abundant summer rains produce wheat, oats, rye, barley and the grasses and vegetables of a quality, size and yield unsurpassed.

Mining. Because Montana produces more of the precious metals than any other state or territory, and abundant opportunities remain to secure valuable properties at nominal cost.

Immigration. Because the Great Reservation is the meeting point of settlers from the Pacific Coast and from the Eastern States, and is the only extensive tract of good land left, suitable for settlement.

Business. Because the rapidly growing towns along the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Ry. offer splendid opportunities to engage in business.

Manufacturer. Because the 1,000,000 horse-power water-power at Great Falls, the extensive coal veins, the wool, mineral and grain raising resources of Montana offer exceptional opportunities to the manufacturer.

Tourist. Because the canon of the Gates of the Mountains, the Great Falls of the Missouri, the Giant Fountain and Continental Divide offer the most sublime and diversified scenery to be found on the Continent. Take a summer tour.

Why Travel by the St. P., M. & M.? Because only by it can you travel through the largest body of free land left for settlement. Because it reaches the Great Falls, with the largest water power on the Continent. Because it reaches Helena, the richest city of its size in the world; and because it is the shortest and best route to Butte, the largest mining camp on earth. Special tourists' and landseekers' rates. Daily trains through solid to Montana. Choice of three routes to the Pacific Coast. "THAT WORTHY NAME."

That the human mind aspires to something higher than itself is a truth as old as the history of man. This trait in man is the basis of all religion. Voltaire uttered a truth when he said, "If there were no God, it would be necessary to invent one." Man seems to recognize his need of some more exalted standard than he is capable of creating. This idea is forcibly put by Tyndall in the brief statement, "That mankind require the lifting power of a noble ideal." The conception of this "ideal character" has partaken so largely of the faults of those who conceived it that it has been a process like that described by Paul, "Measuring themselves by themselves," so that instead of elevating them the standard was lowered to suit their own base condition. Men in all ages having failed to find among themselves a noble ideal in reality have drawn upon the imagination to supply one. A striking instance of this is found in the life of the heathen philosopher Plato. In his description of an imaginary good man he represents him as possessing all the noble traits of our common nature while free from all the vices that stain it, yet covered with all the obloquy and disgrace that could be heaped upon him. This description accords so well with the life and character of our Savior that it is said the resemblance has been remarked by religious writers. And no wonder, for where in all the world's history of noble characters can one be found who will even compare with this grand and noble ideal. Truly may it be said of him that "he is the chief among ten thousand" the highest type of moral excellence among the children of men.

Like some vast monument that towers above every surrounding object, stands this grand model for the uplifting of fallen man. The contemplation of this wonderful character fills us with deep and reverential awe. The great ones of earth have been praised by their friends and abused by their enemies, but this truly remarkable person has by his conduct compelled even his enemies to praise him. Renan after trying in vain to account for the history of Christ from the standpoint of "rationalism" concludes his remarks by an outburst of admiration that is worthy of the most earnest Christian. He closes with these words "Among the sons of men the equal of Christ will never be found." O how true, even almost prophetic words!

After all the insane ravings of Ingersoll against the Bible he was constrained to bear this noble testimony to the excellent character of our blessed Lord. These are his words of eulogy; "For the man Christ I have infinite respect." These words of praise from the enemies of Christ bring to our minds most forcibly the words of the Psalmist "Surely the wrath of man shall praise thee, and thou restrainest the remainder of wrath." How grand then must be the being whose conduct can extort such praise from his enemies. No wonder "the common people" heard him gladly. No wonder thousands hung enraptured upon that voice, for "he spoke as one having authority and not as the Scribes." The thrilling tones of that voice touched the hearts that heard him speak.

The remarkable power of Christ's teaching is seen in all his discourses and familiar talks to the people. His great power as a teacher, apart from the fact of his being the Son of God, is due largely to his peculiar style of teaching. Two things distinguish his method from all others. First his use of simple and childlike language, and secondly the employment of beautiful figures and symbols by which he painted the truths he taught in the most beautiful colors. As evidence of his wonderful use of language the reader is referred to the sermon on the mount. It contains about 2400 words and would require an ordinary speaker from 25 to 40 minutes in delivery. More than ⅘ or 1900 words used are of one and two syllables, whole sentences being composed of words of one syllable. It is without a parallel in literature. The symbols used in his discourses were selected from the wide domain of nature. The beautiful flower of the field, the tiny blade of grass and the twittering sparrow each enforced a mighty truth. He rebuked the haughty Pharisees by hurling at them passages of the law that was given amid the blazing lightnings and rolling thunders of Sinai, and startled their consciences by the self-condemning sentence written in the shifting sand. As we study this truly wonderful character this question forces itself upon us; what was the secret of his vast superiority over all the sons of men? Did he possess a nature so different from ours that he developed a character so perfect that God could say "this is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased."

Was he exempt from the temptations that befall us? He enjoyed no advantage over us in this respect for we are told "that in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest, pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people." Instead of exemption from temptation "he himself hath suffered being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted." And to put it beyond a doubt as to the nature of his temptation we are told that "he was tempted in all points as we are yet without sin." How then did he surpass all others? The secret is told in one brief sentence "all my Father's commandments have I kept." This pure record is confirmed by Peter's testimony, that "he did no sin neither was guile found in his mouth." The most that can be said of any others of the human family is that a few only have secured a record of character that is even an approach to the great model Christ. It is said that "Enoch walked w[illegible]aham had the distingu[illegible] God," a[illegible] after G[illegible]." Nathanael was pointed out by the Savior as "a Nazarene in whom was no guile," while of John it could be said that "he was loved of Jesus," but alas! sin had stained the record of these noble men. Of not one of them could it be said "he was without sin" hence not one of them would do for a perfect model for man. God demanded in his Son a perfect character, for through him man was to be redeemed. Had God demanded of us absolute immunity from sin not one of us who have reached years of accountability could be saved. O what joy should thrill our hearts as we read the provision made for our short-comings, how "if we sin we have an advocate with the Father Jesus Christ the righteous" and that "if we confess our sins he is faithful and just to forgive our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."

O righteous advocate, thou knowest our poor fallen human nature, thou knowest our tendency to do wrong, thou knowest our temptations, having been tempted in all points as we are, but without sin. O listen to our confessions of past sins, O graciously hear our supplications for strength to overcome all the evils of our own fallen nature, and the many that surround us in this sinful world, thine own Father has promised through thee to freely forgive us if we confess our sins and forsake them. Let us then look to the author of our faith, this lofty ideal that can lift us from our low estate of sin into the glorious liberty of the sons of God. Yours hoping for mercy.

"BAPTIZED INTO CHRIST."

For as many of you as were baptized into Christ were clothed with Christ. Gal. iii. 27.

Know ye not that all we who were baptized into Christ Jesus were baptized into his death? Rom. vi. 3.

What is the meaning of these words, "Baptized into Christ?"

According to the best evidence I have been able to get hold of "baptized" primarily signifies "mersed," indicating "a position within a fluid." But Christ is a person. How can a person to be "mersed" into Christ? All words have secondary meanings. A secondary meaning of baptized is "brought under the power or control of."

Can a person be brought under the power of Christ so as to be controlled by him? Yes, and that is just what is wanted, just what the gospel was designed to do; to bring men under the power and control of sin.

Was not the apostle Paul engaged in turning men from the power of Satan unto God, that they might receive forgiveness of sins and inheritance among them that are sanctified by faith, that is "in Christ." Acts xxvi. 18. "Repent ye therefore," said Peter, and "turn again, that your sins may be blotted out," Acts iii. 19. Revised Version. "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins." R. V. Acts ii. 38.

"Repent and turn that your sins may be blotted out."

"Repent and be baptized unto remission of your sins."

The baptism here spoken of is baptism in water undoubtedly. Baptism in water is to be submitted to when a person comes to the turning point. It is not the turning but is a sign and evidence of it. The one who is turned will not try to get around it, but will walk right up to it, and submit to it, and be raised up out of the water, to walk in newness of life. That which turns him is the gospel, which is God's power unto salvation to every one who believes it. God's righteousness which is by faith, is revealed for faith, in his gospel. The gospel requires men to be baptized at the turning point in their lives. He therefore who believes the gospel, repents and turns, does, in presenting himself to be baptized, signify by that act that he takes Christ for his Redeemer and his Lord, and that he consecrates himself to his service as his Redeemer and Lord forevermore.

The minister in baptizing him, signifies, on the part of Christ, by whose authority he administers the baptism, [illegible] Christ takes him graciously as his [illegible], one purchased by his blood, and admits him to all the rights and privileges of the household of faith.

Baptism is a very expressive ceremony. The subject is not permitted to baptize himself, he must submit to be baptized by a servant of Christ. The sinner cannot save himself, he must submit to be saved by the Lord Jesus. He cannot establish his own righteousness by law, he must submit to the righteousness of God which is by faith, Rom. x. 1–11. This submission he shows by yielding himself into the hand of a minister of Christ, who puts him under the power of water, which, if he were left in it, would destroy his life. Thus showing what sin would do to him if he were left under its power. But it is not designed to destroy him, he is raised out of the water to breathe anew the breath of life, and devote that saved, redeemed, life to the service of the Redeemer lovingly forevermore. Who his own self, says Peter, carried up our sins in his body to the tree, R. V., margin, that we having died to sins might live unto righteousness.

It has been said, by some who contend for sprinkling, that the word baptize does not, in its primary signification, provide for the taking of the subject out of the water. I grant it, but the grace of God does. Christ died and was raised again; and we are to enter into the aionian life through a resurrection.'

Baptized in water, in which we cannot breathe, we are in a condition to die; but Christ has redeemed us by his death, and so we are raised out of the water to live to and for him. As the water had the control of our breath while we were immersed in it, so Christ is to have the control of our life henceforth forever. Baptized into Christ:—an abiding state. He is a living Savior. United with his life, it must be manifested in our mortal bodies. Baptized into Christ—"baptized into his death." His death has become ours, and we are clothed with his righteousness; so we should reckon ourselves dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord. Buried with him in the baptism. When Christ was buried he was put out of sight of the world and has never been manifested to it since that time. So we are separated from the world, and united to him whom the world crucified and put away from them, and whom they have seen no more. So we may say, we have died and our life is hid with Christ in God. When he, our life, shall be manifested we shall also be manifested with him in glory. Our relation to Christ then being so close, in this baptized state, shall we mingle with the world in its vain amusements and pleasures? Shall we join with the world in its associations? Shall we seek the honors of the world? No. We will glory in the cross of Christ, by which we are crucified unto the world, and the world unto us. If we are baptized into Christ, our wills are swallowed up in his will, his mind is our mind, we are led by his spirit, and the fruits of the Spirit will be manifested in our life. It takes more than the hands of an administrator to baptize persons into Christ. It takes faith which works by love and purifies the heart. If the belief of the truth has brought us under the control of Christ, brethren, what are we doing in the service of truth? In nine months $251.07 received by the treasurer of the General Conference! Where is the evidence of our consecration? of our being in Christ. If we are in Christ is not Christ in us? And if Christ is in us is he not working in us? And if Christ is working in us are we not working for him? If we are under the power and control of Christ and all we have belongs to him, is one tenth of our substance or income too much to devote especially to his service? We ought to esteem it a privilege to work for him who has done so much for us. Brethren, we have but a little while to work for our blessed Lord, our precious Redeemer, let us work faithfully, earnestly, lovingly. How pleasant it will be to hear him say, Well done, good and faithful servant, enter into the joy of thy Lord.

J. W. NILES.

MICA-PEN NOTES.

I have before me a volume of exposition upon some portion of Revelation, and among other things of the parturient woman and the man-child in chap xii. The woman is said to be the church of Christ, and the period to which the vision applies, "the opening of the gospel dispensation and at no other time, for then the glory of this dispensation, like the light of the sun had just risen upon her; the former or Mosaic dispensation, which like the moon, shone with a borrowed light, had just passed, and lay beneath her feet, and twelve inspired apostles, like a crown of twelve stars, graced the first organization of the gospel church. To this period these representations can apply and to no other." I will not quote further now. But let us look a little at the interpretation carefully.

What did Jesus tell John to do at the very beginning of the revelation made to him at Patmos? "Write, therefore the things which thou sawest, and the things which are, and the things which shall come to pass hereafter." R. V. The Emphatic Diaglott varies the rendering slightly, thus, "Even those which are, and the things which are about to transpire after these." We notice there is no reference to anything in the past, to any of John's experiences when he was one of the twelve with Christ, not a particle. He saw Christ on Patmos in his glory, and fell as dead. This vision begins the book. There is nothing back of that. This is important to remember. The book we have referred to, speaking of the man-child who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron, and who was caught up to God and his throne, says, "These declarations are true of our Lord Jesus Christ, but of no one else." The dragon which stood before the woman, in order to devour the child as soon as it was born, is also said to be Pagan Rome, and the fulfilment in Herod seeking to destroy Jesus "when he appeared as a babe in Bethlehem."

The woman is said to be the Christian church. But where was the Christian church when Christ was born? This is a fair question and an important one. Did the Christian church bring forth Christ, or rather did not Christ on the other hand build the church? The answer is easy. Christ said he would build the church, on the declaration of Peter that he was the Son of God. Granting that the disciples were the beginning of the church, they were appointed thirty years after the birth in Bethlehem.

Again Herod, representing Pagan Rome, did not stand ready to destroy the infant Lord before his birth. It was not till he was already born that he commenced to make his deadly quest. He was roused to action by the inquiry of the wise men at Jerusalem, and this led to the slaying of the young Bethlehem children. Jesus was already born before there was any act, attempt or intention to destroy.

Again, as a matter of fact, Pagan Rome did destroy the Messiah, but not in his infancy. Certainly our Lord was not caught up to God and his throne as soon as he was born. On the other hand he lived to adult age, and then was actually put to death by the Roman power. Here are two circumstances absolutely incompatible with the interpretation, viz., Jesus was not caught up as soon as he was born, and pagan Rome did kill him at adult age before he was caught up at all. And further yet, there was no attempt made by Pagan Rome to destroy him after he was really born through the resurrection from the dead. The guard set to watch his tomb was placed there, lest haply his disciples come and steal him away, and say unto the people "he is risen from the dead."

Still further. Seeing clearly that the Jewish church did not bring forth Christ, for that church was hostile to him and would not receive him, and seeing also that that church supposed to be represented by the moon, was under the feet of the woman, and keeping in mind that the Christian church had no existence when Christ was born, how could either Jewish or Christian church be in the pangs of labor as noted by the Revelator? The disciples, if a church, as we have said, were in no sense a mother of their Master, but far otherwise. They were his creation rather. And allowing that they with the women were in awful agony at the crucifixion, it was agony in contemplating a death, not a birth. He died before their eyes. Pagan Rome destroyed him. They were utterly powerless to interfere. They could do nothing. They could neither prevent his death nor raise him from the dead. And when as a matter of fact he rose from the dead it was by the power of God, without their instrumentality in the least.

I ask that these particulars be carefully considered and retentively remembered, and I submit if it is possible by any means, without great violence, to make any such interpretation, which by the way, to my regret I see so commonly and currently put forth. And why? Partly because of the prevailing tendency to put so much of the apocalypse far back into the past, and then again partly because it is written, the man-child "is to rule all the nations with a rod of iron," and it is thought this can only mean our divine Lord.

Suppose it were possible to suppose that the woman was the Virgin Mary, the same insuperable difficulties would exist. And in that case or in any other, the twelve apostles, whether viewed as symbolized by the crown of twelve stars, or as a church, had no existence. They could neither be the parturient woman, nor could they symbolically crown her with stellar glory at the time of the birth of Christ.

What then may we fairly conclude? Is there not a possibility of a fulfilment yet future and actually impending, it may be, of this apocalyptic vision? It is certainly a remarkable one. It is intensely interesting, and doubtless exceedingly important. To my mind it is a kind of introduction to scenes and events of tremendous interest and signification. Let us now look at the matter candidly, uninfluenced by prejudice in the slightest. Allow that the woman is the Christian church, or if you please a select or an elect part of the church. She is full of light, she has knowledge and pre-eminence. But there is yet a more secretly and strictly elect, and in some sense important subject or object, and that is the man-child, who is appointed to governmental or imperial functions. To rule the nations, not harshly, but firmly, for that is the meaning of the iron rod, at least after the antichristian systems of the world are broken up. Look at the promise to the overcomers in the case of the Thyatiran church. They shall rule the nations with a rod of iron, and so in the Laodicean church, some shall sit with Christ on his throne.

Now I ask, if the woman represents the enlightened church, and is therefore a [illegible] body, must not the child be considered also? The [illegible] is not an individual, neither is the child. Hidden away then in the church, comparatively unseen and unknown, is a company of Christians who are to rule the nations [illegible] Christ, and with Christ. That is the grand idea. When the child is to be born, the mother is seized with parturient pains, and such as were little known and thought of in the earth and suddenly raised, lifted up, on to the rulers of the nations. That this is the true interpretation, there is scarcely the shadow of a doubt. That there has ever been a translation of holy, devoted, watching and ready children of any church, hitherto, we have no evidence. That any who died in martyr times have been raised from the dead, we have no proof or sign. Those who were martyred in fact did not escape the dragon, but were put to death by him. Is there not reason to think, some sudden commotion, some sudden anguish, soon awaits this apocalyptic woman, as the result of which a child born to rule, will be raised to a reigning eminence? Let those call it chimerical who choose, we only [illegible] the sober truth.

Some have made this man child identical with the 144,000, but, though omitted from the Vatican manuscript, yet we have retained in R. V. the saying that they are virgins, which would not seem to confirm the identity. There is an evident variety in the ranks of the redeemed. Why not remember it carefully? The book we have quoted from distinctly affirms the 144,000 to be also identical with those who stand on the sea of glass and have got the victory over the beast, which we think by no means likely. The identity is put on the ground that both classes are "before the throne." But what an immensity of vastness is such a place of glory to be [illegible]! One class are seen on an elevation, the heavenly mount Zion, the others on a glittering plain. We may hereafter show more fully the non-identity of the two.

But what is the great red dragon? Is it surely Pagan Rome? Or is it rather the Spirit of evil, of hate, of hostility and antagonism to Christ and his saints, ever ready to assail and devour? This Spirit has an encounter with Michael, and is overthrown and cast down, though not destroyed, but rather brought nearer to man on earth to their grevious danger and detriment. We can not dwell on this subject further now. Let us be fully awake to events possible and very near. We would not be rash. Quite the opposite. But when a current interpretation is seen to be simply and utterly impossible, why should we retain it? If suddenly there is to be an eraption into heaven, is there not reason enough why we should be holy, watchful, earnest and ready? Such an eraption seems clearly the very opening and beginning of grand transactions. [illegible] the commencement of the great hour of judgment, for after it, the great harlot is judged, and mark it well, thereupon there is a great voice of a great multitude in heaven saying, "Hallelujah, hallelujah!" And holy apostles and prophets are called on to rejoice. Have they not then been raised from the dead? For we are clearly notified that along with a translation of the saints, there is a resurrection also out from among the dead And even in a first fruit there still may be or must be both living and dead.

C. COLEGROVE.

We are solemnly enjoined to prove all things, hold fast that which is good; but how shall we prove them? How shall we protect ourselves against false teachers? We answer, by the infallible detector. We have a standard for truth. In prayer to his Father, Jesus said, "Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth." This is the touchstone, and the Spirit in Isaiah directs us to appeal to the law and the testimony, for "if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."

THE RESTITUTION

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty [illegible] of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

To the Brotherhood.

I am here at Ripley, Ill., holding meetings with very good interest. Since I have written to you, I have travelled a great deal, and have baptized eight persons into the all-saving name of Jesus the Christ. Will be here till next Friday night, when I go to Cooperstown to hold over the first Sunday in October. We have a very good class of brethren here. Nearly all of them are poor so far as this world's goods is concerned, but rich in faith. Let the good Lord have all the praise for all the good done. They have a very nice church house, neat and plain. They hold Bible reading every first day of the week, with Bro. Hiram Bowman as their Elder. They number about thirty members in all. They take the word of God as their only rule of faith and practice. Wherever that leads them they are willing to go; when it stops they stop. A very good plan; I wish that all the churches would follow in their steps. It would be much easier to preach the gospel than it is now. They are willing to administer unto the faithful evangelist. They do not believe that one servant of God has a right to live in ease and luxury, and another barely have clothing fit to put on when going out in company. They do not believe that an evangelist should wear himself out preaching, and spend all he has got and die in the poor house, while others live on the interest of money that they gain by lending to the poor. Brethren should meet as often as convenient, once or twice a week if possible. Exhort one another and so much the more as they see the day approaching. Lay by them in store as God has prospered. Let the elders which are among you feed the flock of God, neither being gods over God's heritage, and when the Chief Shepherd appears ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away. What we do let us do quickly. We are just at the closing up of this age. God's Spirit will soon cease to strive with men as it did in the days of Noah. May God bless you all, both spiritually and temporally, and may we all so live that whether we are awake or asleep we may be ready to meet the Savior. Be perfect, be of good cheer, be of one mind, live in peace, and the God of love and peace be with you, is my prayer, for Christ's sake.

JOHN FOORE.

To the Brethren Scattered Abroad in Nebraska.

Bro. J. T. Prime was elected at our Annual Meeting as delegate to the General Conference, and it will be necessary for us to meet the expense. We appeal to you for aid. Let every one send in what they feel able to spare for this purpose; ever so little will be acceptable. Should there be more than enough received to bear the expense of the delegate to Chicago, it will be appropriated to the evangelist fund. Now brethren send in your amounts as soon as possible that we may have it all made up by Nov. 13th. Send to A. F. Harlan, Arapahoe, Neb.

ALMUS ADAMS.

There are heaps of crookedness in the fleshly mind. If we affirm that the Gospel of the Kingdom is God's power to save, something else will do just as well. If we affirm that remission of sins is obtained through faith in the Gospel and immersion into Christ, sprinkling is a far better way. If we show them that they cannot be born out of a sprinkle or brought forth out of a pouring—its no matter any way. If we affirm that the candidate must be buried with Christ and raised in the likeness of his resurrection, neither of which can be prefigured by pouring or sprinkling—they were taught some other way and will run the risk. Joined to their idols.

The startling information is made public, that a great catastrophe during the national encampment, was averted by mere chance. The sloping hillside at Juneau Park, where 100,000 people were seated on the night of the sham naval battle, was moved six inches. Had it not been for the stone road bed of the railway at the foot of the hill, the whole side of the bluff would have slipped off into the lake, carrying the people with it.

STOCKHOLDERS' MEETING.

The Annual meeting of the Stockholders of the Christian Publishing Association will be held at Plymouth, Ind., on Saturday, Nov. 9, 1889, (as per Articles of Association,) for the purpose of electing a Board of Directors, and for the transaction of such business as may come before the meeting.

There is no special change in the condition of Brother Chaplin. He has had a few sinking spells the last week, when friends thought the end very near, but at this time (Tuesday) he is easier, and has taken some nourishment.

We give place in this issue to an article from the Chicago Tribune, headed, "Why Italy is in the Triple Alliance." Just what the significance of this union of nations may be, we do not pretend to state, but the powers are forming these alliances with the certain knowledge that a conflict is coming soon. We shall endeavor to keep our readers posted on the movements of the nations.

There is considerable excitement in Vienna, caused by the report that the Prince of Montenegro has ceded a part of the Bay of Antivaris to Russia for the establishment of a naval depot. This will give Russia what she has long wanted, a station on the Mediterranean, and Austria and the other great powers of Europe will doubtless investigate the matter, and it will furnish delicate work for the diplomats. Whatever may be the outcome, it proves that Russia, though apparently idle, is nevertheless quietly working day and night to gain her ends.

The following strange request is taken from Microcosm, published by Dr. Hall:

"We beg of our subscribers not to be in a hurry to renew their subscriptions for Vol. VII., as we have no time to receive remittances and make the credits. We will notify our subscribers when to send in their renewals."

We presume a rush of business made such a request necessary. This is the only instance we ever heard of where a man in any business asked his debtors to delay payment. We will say that we are quite busy—but will find time to attend to just a few more remittances. Do not delay your renewals to The Restitution a moment. We will hire an extra clerk if we got too much on hand. We are willing, indeed anxious, to be rushed with renewals. Let each one examine his account, and if you owe us, rush our business a little.

A sister at Minneapolis, says, "A man lecturing here on baptism, said he had travelled in the Holy Land, and that the river Jordan was so shallow it would be impossible to immerse a person therein. I suppose it may have been different in the time of Christ, but would like to understand it better." We presume this lecturer wished to make it appear that it was necessary to pour or sprinkle, and not immerse, there being lack of water. The commonest reference book will show this to be false. Chamber's Encyclopedia, after giving a lengthy description of the river Jordan, says, "The bed of the river varies much in breadth, and its banks are in some places flat, in others steep. Where it enters the Dead Sea it is 180 yards broad, and three feet deep; but a little way farther up it is only 80 yards broad, and seven feet deep." Dr. J. L. Porter, who travelled extensively in the east, and wrote "The Giant Cities of Bashan, and Syria's Holy Places," says, in speaking of the Jordan, "The appearance of the river itself is exceedingly varied. Now it sweeps gracefully round a green meadow, softly kissing with its rippling waves the blushing flowers of the oleander as they bend over it—now it clasps a wooded islet in its shining arms—now fretted by projecting cliffs, and opposed by rocky ledges, it dashes madly forward in sheets of foam. But the most interesting spot on the Jordan is unquestionably that now called the 'pilgrim's bathing-place,' opposite Jericho. Here the channel is deep, the current rapid, and yet, on three different occasions, the river was stayed by a miracle, and the channel left dry, to let God's people pass over. And an interest still higher and holier clings to it. It is the scene of Christ's baptism." There is not the least doubt but there is sufficient water in the Jordan to baptize, and that by immersion.

The following from the American Israelite of Oct. 3rd is largely applicable to many not of the Jewish faith: Our sins of omission are many, and far outnumber the sins of commission, yet how little attention we pay to them. We should not wait for some special season to come when we can be revived, but examine self at once, and have a revival now.

YOM KIPPUR, 5650 A. M.

Tomorrow (Friday) at sunset begins the Day of Atonement, as ordained in the Law of Moses, Leviticus xvi. xxiii. 26-32; xxv. 9; Numbers xxix. 7-11; and referred to by the prophets, Isaiah lviii.; Ezekiel xl. It is that great day upon which the high-priest was permitted to enter the Temple, and to make atonement for himself, his house, and the whole congregation of Israel. The high-priest himself was required to perform all the sacred ceremonies on this day.

To the American Israelites, the Day of Atonement is a day of annual revival and reunion. Besides our other sins, our daily occupations, the struggle for existence, or rather subsistence, the ceaseless running and grasping for wealth and pleasure, the ever-increasing necessities of life and artificial wants, the spirit of this materialistic age and over-satiated country, bedim the generous ideals of humanity and estrange us from God and man. We need these annual revivals and reunions vastly more than our fathers and mothers did, in order not to be swamped in the quagmire of sensualism and gross materialism. Ever so many of us drift all year round in the direction which leads into the abyss of self-destruction, into the bottomless pit of benumbing isolation, where there are no God and no holiness, no loftier ideals and no higher aims, no humane and no divine light and life. Then comes the God-sent Kippur Day and commands: "Halt! stand still and consider; render account to your God and your conscience; halt! look about you, and see that you are a mere member of the human family, and not a god yourself, a mere son or daughter of Israel and not God's chosen people; halt! come back to yourself, to your own manhood and womanhood, to your fellowman, to God and to Israel." The Kippur Day is a God-sent messenger to all of us, especially as a day of revival and reunion.

While we are repeating our sins, we might just as well run over the whole account of our commissions and omissions and effect a final settlement. The formula of confession in the prayer-book is an alphabetical reminder of the sins of commission, in which every one may find his own shortcomings. The sins of omission, however, have no place in that register, and yet they are both numerous and grievous. Neglect of duty, for instance, is a sin of omission; so is the lack of gratitude to whom gratitude is due and veneration for whom veneration is proper. Inconsiderate carelessness and levity are mere omissions, and yet they are sins of considerable magnitude. False pride, haughtiness, self-aggrandizement, self-delusion are no less sinful, because they are not actual deeds. The sensation-monger sins against the majesty of truth and veracity, although he commits no actual wrong which hurts his fellow-men. Leaving undone that which one ought to do, and being other than that which one ought to be, are sins of omission. One is uncharitable; he can not give any support to persons or institutions that need support; he can not speak kind words to his fellow-man, or of him in his absence; he can not do a favor to him that needs it; he can not forgive and forget even the slightest wrong done him; he claims great thanks for small favors, and big honors for little services; he can not thank God for life and health and happiness; he can not venerate that which is venerable and holy; he can not respect the good and the true;—is he not a wretched sinner? And yet these are mere sins of omission. Their number is legion, and they are hard to overcome. And yet, in order to be a true Israelite, a generous and noble character, a true man or woman, these sins of omission must be eradicated, the will and the intellect must be emancipated from this abject slavery; one must be free of them to be a free, self-governing individual. Let us not forget to repent our sins of omission. It is sinful to profane the Sabbath, and no less sinful to neglect the object of the Sabbath, viz.: self-culture and self-sanctification; and the latter is merely a sin of omission. It is sinful, we are told, to eat forbidden food, and no less sinful to withhold food from the hungry if it is in our power to give it; and so on ad infinitum.

Repair your character, cleanse your moral nature, correct and adjust your intelligence, fill the vacuum with generous resolves, declare the dominion of the spirit over the flesh and the lower passions, liberate your will from the chains of sensualism. This is repentance, expiation, atonement and remission of sins. This is genuine Jewish doctrine, based upon the grace and mercy of God, for all of which the Day of Atonement is the symbol. Let us go through a radical rejuvenescence, and be blessed.

"I wish some one well informed would write a short article on the Thief on the Cross. I suppose to some it is so well understood it may seem as if enough has been written on the subject, but to some of us younger ones a short article would be read with interest."

Mrs. E. H. W.

In accordance with the above request we give herewith three extracts from articles written by eminent scholars on the "Intermediate State." They were first published in the Bible Standard. A short additional article by one of our correspondents will be gladly received.

Regarding the words of Christ to the penitent thief, "today shalt thou be with Me in Paradise," we ought to take into account the circumstances of the case in connexion with the words of the Savior. These words were the gracious answer of our Lord to the prayer of the dying man: "Lord, remember me when Thou comest in Thy kingdom." His thought in his prayer was not of the departing of Christ in death, but his coming again in his kingdom; obviously involving the idea and belief of his rising again from the dead. And surely the truest and highest as well as the most Scriptural conception of Paradise is in connexion with "the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ," which kingdom is always associated with his coming again. Observe the words of the dying man. It is not when or where Thou goest, but "when Thou comest." He was not thinking as regarded himself of how it would be with his soul when he died, but how it would be with him after death, when raised again to life. And the answer of Christ is appropriate to the prayer, and it assured the dying man that he should be with him in glory,—"Thou shalt be with Me in Paradise," I will not forget thee in the day of my kingdom and my glory. Presumably then the "today" has reference entirely to the time in which the gracious promise was made to him; and Zech. ix. 12, is an example of the same use of the phrase in which it is used by Christ, namely as having reference emphatically to the time of promising or declaring something that shall afterwards be fulfilled; and according to which a true and just paraphrase of the passage would read—"Even today do I declare unto thee, thou shalt be with Me in Paradise."—Francis Cooper.

The thief on the cross would have some difficulty in meeting the soul of Christ in Paradise, for the simple reason that Jesus did not go there, being in Hades between his death and resurrection, See Acts ii. 24, 27, 31. If Paradise was Hades, it is strange that David and Peter should represent Christ as rejoicing to get out of it, while, at the same time, we are asked to believe that it was a special favor for the thief to be allowed to go there.

I believe the natural explanation of the difficulty in this saying of Christ to the dying thief is, that the comma is misplaced. Literally it reads, without stops, "Verily I say to thee today with Me thou shalt be in Paradise." The thief did not ask for an answer: Jesus goes beyond his request and gives him his promise most emphatically there and then. The use of the "today" to give emphasis is common enough in Scripture, and we ourselves constantly use the word "now" in a similar manner.—M. M. Wilson.

The Lord Jesus said to the penitent thief, "Today shalt thou be with Me in Paradise." The distinction I have laid down is literally embodied in these words. Thou shalt be with Me. Not thou shalt be alive and full of joy in the presence of God. Psa. xvi. 11. The Savior himself would not be in that glorified state till his "flesh had rested in hope" through the Sabbath, and had felt the touch of resurrection on "the first day of the week." "Today," said the Savior, "thou shalt be with Me." That met the case abundantly. It assured him of pardon, of divine acceptance, of eternal safety, of an identity of interest with Jesus. "Paradise" is a word of indefinite import. As a popular term denoting a state of acceptance with God for the departed, it met the case precisely. But we cannot rely upon it for a single idea beyond the general sense of divine acceptance. Our busy, bustling thought will be inventing details and particulars for such a general term; our very feebleness of intellect disqualifying us to pause and rest in the simple language of Christ; nevertheless there stands the language itself, so grand in outline that every association of detail does not dwarf or becloud it.—W. Griffith.

Get pure hearts if you desire pure lips and pure lives.

An important question: are few or many saved? but a more important one is, shall I be one of them?

He who is false to present duty breaks a thread in the loom, and will find the flaw when he has forgotten the cause.

The truth is that we are our best when we try to be it not for ourselves alone, but for our brethren; and that we take God's gifts most completely for ourselves when we realize that he sends them to us for the benefit of other men who stand beyond us needing them.—Phillips Brooks.

O, there are moments in man's mortal years,
When for an instant that which long has lain
Beyond our reach is on a sudden found
In things of smallest compass, and we hold
The unbounded shut in one small minute's space,
And world's within the hollow of our hand;
A world of music in one word of love,
A world of love in one quick wordless look,
A world of thought in one translucent phrase,
A world of memory in one mournful chord,
A world of sorrow in one little song.
Such moments are man's holiest: the divine
And first-sown seeds of love's eternity.

The story is told of an eagle that, flying over an ice-covered valley, saw a dead animal, and, descending from its lofty flight, feasted so long upon the carcass, that when it thought to mount, it could not, its wings having become frozen to the ice. Like to this is what is often witnessed of the influence of the world on the heart. How men seem to be completely earth-bound!

Attainments are never so well exhibited as when they exhibit themselves. The attainment ought to show the man, not the man the attainment. A small man is generally anxious to show all the size that he can; but a great man's size is seen without his effort to show it. Morally, a Christian ought to be the biggest of men. If he is a man of the Christian size, it ought to show for itself. Any one ought to be able to recognize a Christian on very short acquaintance.

There never was an age in which such a life as that of Christ could have been palmed off upon mankind, if it had not been a reality, or in which such results of that life as are described in the Book of Acts could have been secured by a pure fabrication. The genius of man is not equal to such a task. The Gospel narrative, while the most remarkable ever written, bears all the natural marks of a story founded on facts, and guided in its recitals by facts.

"We build the ladder by which we rise,'
Honor and truth shall the framework be,
Diligence, patience, fidelity, love,
These are the rounds in the ladder we build,
By which to climb to the regions of love.
Slowly and carefully, day after day,
Round after round must be fitted secure;
So as we build shall our characters grow
Noble, reliant, unselfish and pure.

A noble disposition eager for self-improvement will accustom itself to court censure as frankly as most people court commendation. It will not merely receive with grace, and accept, but it will use censure. Whether the strictures be from the soul of enemy or friend; whether prompted by love, sympathy, pity, jealousy, or malice; whether they bear the impress of a refined or a vulgar spirit; whether just to the point or entirely untimely; whether chiefly true or chiefly false; whether conveyed in general terms or specifically,—makes little difference. They are an eye-glance from outside into the self, too valuable to be contemptuously discarded. Possibly they point a deep lesson for us. If the blame does not hit the mark in this instance, we may vividly recall instances in our past when we were standing just where it would have pierced us, had it come at that time, and we are able to take a warning lesson for the future. And even if the censure is so undeserved that it fails to remind us of anything erroneous in what we have been, and fails to open up to us any weakness in what we are, it nevertheless still serves the important purpose of revealing to us what some one outside of us thinks we are. Let us strive in every case of censure so to restrain our personal feelings as to be able, without regard to the motives in the critic that prompted its utterance, to reap for our improvement the full benefit of that insight which the censure may open up to us.

NOBLE WORDS.

Whene'er a noble deed is wrought,
Whene'er is spoke a noble thought,
Our hearts, in glad surprise,
To higher levels rise.

The tidal wave of deeper souls
Into our inmost being rolls,
And lifts us unawares
Out of all meaner cares.

Honor to those whose words and deeds
Thus help us in our daily needs,
And by their overflow
Raise us from what is low.

HE PUSHED THE LACKING POUND.

Some years ago there was a vessel built. When the vessel was completed and the day had arrived for the ship to be launched crowds of people gathered on the banks, while others were out on the river waiting to view the grand scene. But to their dismay, when the men who were engaged in the work tried to push the vessel into the river, their strength failed them. The vessel could not be moved. There was a lacking pound somewhere. Just then a little boy who had been standing at one side quietly looking on said: "I can push a pound." He pushed with all the strength he possessed, and immediately the vessel was launched. That little boy pushed the lacking pound.

Then, why should so many people stand looking at a few who are battling with intemperance, and not able to wholly banish this evil from our land? Let those who are looking on, place themselves in that boy's position and lend a helping hand to push the lacking pound. Thus more speedily may the cause of temperance be advanced.—G. H. Ferguson.

"THANK YOU."

Several winters ago a woman was coming out from some public building where the heavy door swung back and made egress somewhat difficult. A little street urchin sprang to the rescue, and as he held open the door, she said "Thank you," and passed on.

"Cracky! d'ye hear that?" said the boy to a companion standing near by him.

"No; what?"

"Why, that lady in sealskin said 'Thank ye' to the likes o' me."

Amused at the conversation, which she could not help overhearing, the lady turned round and said to the [illegible]

"It always pays to be polit[illegible] boy: remember that."

Years passed away, and last December, when doing her Christmas shopping, this same lady received an exceptional courtesy from a clerk in Boston, which caused her to remark to a friend who was with her:

"What a great comfort to be civilly treated once in a while—though I don't know that I blame the store clerks for being rude during the holiday trade."

The young man's quick ear caught the words, and he said:

"Pardon me madam, but you gave me my first lesson in politeness a few years ago."

The lady looked at him in amazement, while he related the little forgotten incident, and told her that that simple "Thank you" awakened his first ambition to be something in the world. He went the next morning and applied for a situation as office boy in the establishment where he was now an honored and trusted clerk.

Only two words, dropped into the treasury of a street conversation, but they yielded returns of a certain kind more satisfactory than investments, stocks and bonds.—The Congregationalist.

THE LITTLE JEW.

The other day, as a city missionary was pursuing her walks of usefulness in our streets, she observed a group of children, who were behaving with great disrespect to an aged man. Among them she observed a little Hebrew boy, who was taking no part in the cruel sport, but stood silently by watching his companions. Turning to him, and noticing the thoughtful expression of his face, she said, "Well, my lad, what have you to say about all this?"

"Madame," he replied, "I am taught to rise up before the hoary head and honor the face of the old man."

The children blushed. They felt reproved by the words of a playmate who had never had the privilege of going to the Sabbath-school, where they were taught the "old, old story of Jesus and his love," and the new commandment that we "love one another."

"This you were taught from the Bible," said the missionary.

"Yes, madame."

"What other lessons are you taught from that good Book?" she said.

"We commit to memory the Ten Commandments, which were given by God to Moses," he replied. "And we are told that we must remember our Creator in the days of our youth, to seek him early and we shall find him; and another sweet verse," said the polite little lad, "Seek the Lord and his strength, seek his face forevermore."

The missionary bade him good-by, wishing in her heart that Christian parents who have the blessed New Testament in addition to the Old, and have learned the good news of salvation by the Lamb of God, who takes away the sin of the world, were so faithful to instruct their little ones in the ways of truth and godliness.—Advocate and Guardian.

TRUST.

Confidence; faith; to rely.

Lesson Chapter, Psa. xl. 4.

Blessed is that man that maketh the Lord his trust, and respecteth not the proud, nor such as turn aside to lies. Psa. xl. 4. For thou art my hope, O Lord God; thou art my trust from my youth. Psa. lxxi. 5. Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted in me? hope thou in God for I shall yet praise him for the help of his countenance. Psa. xlii. 5. He that putteth his trust in the Lord shall be made fat. Prov. xxviii. 25. The fear of man bringeth a snare, but whoso putteth his trust in the Lord shall be safe. Prov. xxix. 25.

Who can we trust when trouble overtakes us?

The Lord is good, a strong hold in the day of trouble; and he knoweth them that trust in him. Nahum i. 7; Isa. ii. 6. The Lord also will be a refuge for the oppressed, a refuge in time of trouble. Psa. ix. 9. He forgetteth not the cry of the humble. v. 12. And to you who are troubled rest with us, etc. 2 Thess. i. 7. And if ye suffer for righteousness sake, happy are ye, and be not afraid of their terror, neither be troubled. Pet. iii. 14. Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God believe also in me. John xiv. 1, 27. For the Father himself loveth you, because ye have loved me, and have believed that I came out from God. John xvi. 27. O taste and see that the Lord is good; blessed is the man that trusteth in him. Psa. xxxiv. 8. The righteous cry, and the Lord heareth and deliv[illegible] out of all [illegible] in the [illegible] xxii. 8. [illegible] he is a shield unto them [illegible] their trust in him. Prov. xxx. 5. Behold, God is my salvation, I will trust and not be afraid, for the Lord Jehovah is my strength and my song, he also is become my salvation. Isa. xii. 2.

The British and Foreign Bible Society was organized in 1804, the American Bible Society in 1816. The average age of the two societies is seventy-nine years. During the year ended April 1, 1889, the two societies together issued 5,117,699 copies of the Bible of all sizes. Their combined receipts for the same period were $1,631,204.09. The moneyed receipts of the two societies for the whole seventy-nine years have reached the very large sum of $76,517,339.81, besides legacies, of which they can spend only the income, and, also valuable real estate, which is necessary for their operations, and which has risen constantly in value on their hands. The two societies, in their history of seventy-nine years, have issued the enormous aggregate of 171,406,801 copies of the Bible and parts thereof. Over one-fourth, however, of this whole issue of the two societies has been within the last nine years, within which time the new version made its appearance. The average per year for their existence is over 2,000,000 copies, and for the last five years over 5,000,000 Bibles every twelve months, or 17,484 for every business-day. In other words, nearly as many Bibles are issued every year as would be required to put one new Bible in the hands of every inhabitant of the Empire State. Some eminent statisticians are of the opinion that the two great Bible Societies of the world, by their present issues, have caught up with the increase of the population of the earth, i. e., the increase of births over deaths.

God has plainly revealed the great truth that when the time to restore all things foretold by his prophets shall have come, he will send Jesus to earth again to assume its government. During his absence others are invited to reign with him on conditions of faith in and obedience to the good message. Will it be any wonder if those who quibble and squirm, and wish it were somewhere else, or something else, should be shut out of the kingdom? To be faithful to our fellows we are obliged to tell them, if they do not receive the kingdom God offers with the simplicity of a child, they will never enter it.

To the Readers of Our Paper.

The Church of God at Gallimore Hill, N. C., met Friday, Aug. 16, and continued for three days to preach and talk and sing of the good news of a better life than this. Some of the brethren and sisters from Transylvania county were with us and aided in our worship. Bro. Pickelsimer came and did a good work among us. Sister George on Saturday evening gave the church a public talk that will not soon be forgotten. Bro. Anderson preached from the text, "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, today and forever." I will only say we are always glad to hear things new and old. Bro. Anderson and Bro. Wm. Case are both at home at Gallimore. I now say to all the Church of God that Bro. Jacob Lyda, from Liberty Church, was here and preached us the good news of the promised life, on Saturday and Sunday. He told us the conditions by which we could get eternal life. Bro. Lyda's preaching is practical. He urges his hearers to put their faith into practice. What our hands find to do must be done soon, and so much more as we see the day approaching. I must say that we have the Christian Hymnals at Gallimore and we like it and sing better than we expected. Bro. Case, our preacher, says we must excel others in everything, first in preaching, doing right and in music.

Possibly it will be answer enough to the argument in favor of relieving Catholics who support parochial schools of the tax for public schools, that they need the public school as an incentive and example. We might feel a good deal more like listening to their arguments, did we not know that education by the Catholic Church has proved a complete failure. We only have need to ask the Catholic nations of the world their experience. Every independent nation in the two Americas, except ours, is Catholic; and with one insignificant exception, they have all been compelled to remove education from the Church and give it to the State. It is so equally in Europe. When we read an argument to prove that arithmetic and grammar must be taught in a specially Catholic way, that all the five school-days in the week must be devoted to teaching Catholic virtue, then we feel inclined to bid our critics leave us alone and first convert their own people in Italy and France and Mexico and Brazil and the Argentine Republic.—Independent.

SECRET SINS.

"Thou hast set our secret sins in the light of thy countenance."

Our secret sins to thee are known,
The sins that we conceal;
They rise, unnumbered, to thy throne
And there our guilt reveal.

No mortal on thy face can gaze;
None can endure the sight;
Yet thou hast set these in the blaze
Of that consuming light.

The sins are there that did not break
The hearts that love would spare;
The sins, for reputation's sake,
The day did not declare:

The sins that filled the guilty soul
With anguish or unrest;
That burned the bosom like a coal,
But never were confessed:

The sins that never have been brought
From fiction into fact;
The sins that often were a thought,
But never were an act.

Nor this alone. They never pass,
These secret sins of ours;
They do not wither as the grass
And perish as the flowers.

In thy remembrance they are plain;
They still confront thy gaze;
And there, unaltered, they remain
Until the day of days.

These secret sins that in our eyes
Had never wrought disgrace,
Will, like a cloud of darkness, rise
And hide from us thy face.

Lord, in that day where shall we hide,
And who will bear our blame?
Our only hope is he who died
To save us from our shame.

Through him alone is pardon given,
His service bringeth peace;
And when by him we enter heaven
Our secret sins will cease.

Then shall we comprehend the grace
That doth not now conceal;
But sets our sins before thy face,
Their nature to reveal.

ORIGIN OF EVIL.

As I have been asked to give my reason for believing in certain doctrine set forth in the word of God, which writers of the present age seem to have overlooked, and as the request came from those that have a right to know what I do believe, I will try to give them my belief to the best of my ability, asking them to overlook the many grammatical errors they will find in it. But first of all I should like to ask a few questions.

Why is there so much wickedness in our world? There must be some cause for it. There is no effect without a cause, and where can we find the cause of all the wickedness that we daily see around us. John the Baptist in his day called them serpents, generations of vipers. Matt. iii. 7. Christ called them the same. Matt. xii. 34; xiii. 33. In John viii. 44, Christ told them that they were of their father, the devil; and the lust of your father ye will do. He was a murderer from the beginning and abode not in the truth because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie he speaketh of his own for he is a liar and the father of it. This is harsh language but true, for an untruth never came from Christ's lips. He spake nothing but what his Father gave him to speak. Then what did Christ mean? Where can we go to find it? In Gen. iv. 8–12 we can find the first murderer. But how came his children down to the days of Christ? In Gen. i. 11, 12, 24, 25, we can find, for everything that God had made brought forth seed after their own kind. There is nothing in the vegetable kingdom that has changed, from the mighty oak to the blade of grass; all continue as they were from the beginning. The wild beast of the forest keeps true to its own kind. Nothing that God has made has changed; they bring forth their own seed. And Paul in 1 Cor. xv. 38, To every seed his own body.

From the above we see that as everything produces its like, that Cain's seed would be like himself. But when God created man in his own image and gave him dominion over all that he had made. That he gave him a law to keep, and if he broke that law that he should surely die. Gen. ii. 17. In the third we find that that law was broken and the penalty of death pronounced on them for so doing. Because they had broken God's law, the ground was cursed for their sake, thorns and thistles it should bring forth as a punishment for their sin. But Adam was not Christ. O! no, thanks be to our God that he did not curse him, for if he had Adam's seed must, and their father forever lain in the dust; for the law of our God changes never. The words that have gone forth out of his mouth shall never return unto him void, but it shall accomplish that whereunto he sent it. But in the fourth chapter we find that when Cain slew Abel that God cursed Cain from the earth; a fugitive and a vagabond he should be in the earth. But the question arises, why was Cain so wicked and his brother Abel righteous? They certainly were children of the same parents? See verses 1 and 2. Then where did Cain get that wicked nature from? Adam had it not nor yet Abel. Then where could Cain have gotten it? Such questions have often come into my mind, and I should like so much if some one could tell me how. His seed are called the seed of the serpent, and why are they so called?

When Seth was born, he and his seed seemed to have lived in the love and fear of God and called themselves the sons of God. His seed and Cain's was kept distinct for many generations, until the sons of God saw the daughters of men, or the seed of Cain, and married with them, that their children soon became as wicked as Cain's were, until God could bear their wickedness no longer and drowned them all except Noah and his family for his sake. But if all that wicked seed was drowned, how came they here after the flood? It is recorded in the book of Joshua that Ham's wife was one of the family of Cain. If it is so we can see how that wicked breed still are on this our earth and causing all the trouble that our eyes see and our ears hear every day of our lives.

Ham's wife had four sons, Cush, Mezraim, Phut and Canaan. Cush begat Nimrod who settled in the land of Shinar and builded Babylon, the first act of open rebellion against God after the flood; and their descendants from that day to this have ever been the same rebellious race. Canaan and his seven sons settled in the land of Canaan that bears his name to this day. And what were they? See Gen. ix. 20–27. He and his seed was cursed by Noah. Noah did not curse Ham. But why? Ham was one of the seed of Seth; his blood had not been mixed with that wicked blood, but his son was partaker of that wicked breed, and from him came that seed who lived in Sodom and Gomorrah and for whose wickedness that land was burned, when God called Abraham out of the family of Shem to go into that land that he would afterward give to him and his seed for an everlasting possession. But his seed was [illegible] in a land not theirs for 430 [illegible] of that nation was [illegible] the 430 years wa[illegible] back the children o[illegible] land that he had promised [illegible] give him and his seed forever, and told Moses that their iniquity was full, that they should slay them all off and take possession of the land. They should have no affinity with them; they should not take their daughters for their sons, nor give their daughters to wife for their sons forever, for if they did it would turn those hearts from the God of Abraham to serve their gods, idols made of gold, silver, wood and stone; to follow their abominations.

Read Deut. vii., 1 Kings i. to xiii., and Ezek. ix. through and see if they obeyed God or not. They married among them and worshiped their gods and practiced their abominations until God's anger was kindled against them and he scattered them to all nations, and when Judah was carried captive to Babylon in the land of Shinar among the seed of Cush, the children of Nimrod, God gave the rule of this world to Nebuchadnezzar, until Christ shall come to claim the promised inheritance that God promised to give to Abraham and to David and to their seed forever. Then not a Canaanite shall dwell in the Lord's house forever, neither will God take a top or corner stone out of Babylon for his house. Read Psa. xxxvii. and Mal. iv. and see their doom. In Gen. iv. we found who was the first murderer and that he was cursed of God, a fugitive and a vagabond he was to be on the earth; and as God's law is that everything should bring forth seed after its own kind, Cain's seed must be like himself. Christ said the first murderer was a devil. So we see who the first devil was and can learn who they are now. They must belong to their father, the devil. God cursed them from the earth. David in Psa. xxxvii. 22, 28, 38. But what are they cut off from? Why, cut off from inheriting the earth, when Christ shall come and destroy all sickness, sorrow and death, and restore this earth to its more than Edenic beauties. They, the wicked shall never have any more share of anything done under the sun. They will then have perished from the earth and their memory have perished with them.

I have now given you a few of my reasons for my belief; if I am wrong I hope that some one will show me a more perfect one; I am open to conviction. It is the truth that I want. From your humble servant.

NEWS AND NOTES.

Two Bagded Jews have bought the entire site of Ancient Babylon. On this, Le Chretien Belge remarks: "Is it not a significant fact that two Israelites should today possess the soil and the ruins of the immense city where their ancestors were captives and slaves, and of which their prophets had announced the utter destruction?"

The nationalist club has issued an address to the citizens of Massachusetts, from which we cite the following: —"You are confronted with a question of the greatest importance. The quality and the character of your legislature has steadily declined from year to year, during the last decade, until now the General Court of 1889 is openly charged with being the most incompetent and corrupt body that ever set in the State House. This corruption is caused by vast moneyed interests, wielding the power of their wealth to their selfish advantage, and by private corporations—seeking to control the law-making power, and tax the public for their own profit. To attain these ends, they scruple at nothing. Who can exaggerate the danger to our free institutions, from a plutocratic class, ruling the land by the power of the most enormous fortunes that the world has ever seen." This is the most vital question of the day, dwarfing all others into insignificance. What danger is greater than that which now faces us, a government of money, by money and for money?

Austria, Spain and Italy have State Lotteries in unbroken operation throughout the whole year. All over Italy, the Government has spread a net-work of lottery offices, and made the meshes finest where the people are most likely to be caught. More than one-fourth of the 140,000 people of Venice, are paupers. Yet fifty State Lotteries have been planted in Venice, and officials are among the busiest people in town, selling tickets. On Saturday afternoon, a motly throng of miserable looking men and women, and ragged boys and girls, are watching with wild eyes and flushed faces, for the coming out of the lottery numbers. On the ten-thousandth part of a chance for drawing a prize, their honest or dishonest gains, each week, are swallowed up. On Saturday, Aug. 13, the population of Naples, a city proverbial for its poverty, filled the streets in ex[illegible] the weekly drawing. The [illegible] demoralized, having [illegible] million francs on lottery tickets. The police were unable to keep order. When the fatal number was announced, one yell of grief rent the air. Men beat their heads. Girls fainted, and many fell and were trampled upon. When will people cease from being seduced into acts of almost incredible and insane folly? Not in one age or nation alone, but throughout many countries and ages, does history disclose the same wild, reckless and desperate spirit of adventure?

When it was announced that two out of the five precincts in Salt Lake City, were carried by Anti-Mormon majorities, the pent-up enthusiasm broke loose. Cool-headed business men, bank presidents, wholesale merchants, leading lawyers, lost their coolness of head, and behaved like college sophomores. The successful candidates were borne about on men's shoulders. Speeches were made amid deafening cheers. As goes Salt Lake, so comparatively goes Utah. Two hundred Mormons voted against the dictates of the church, with many more soon to follow. Tonic air, grand scenery, a sunny sky, and rich and varied resources, speak well for Utah.

It may be spoken to their credit, that some Roman Catholic ecclesiastics are thorough Temperance men, and the Third Plenary Council of Baltimore in 1884 in their pastoral gave utterance to the following:—"We call upon all pastors to induce all their flocks that may be engaged in the sale of liquors, to abandon as soon as they can, the dangerous traffic, and to embrace a more becoming way of making a living." To the workingmen:—"carry your wages home to your families where they rightfully belong. Turn a deaf ear therefore, to every temptation, and then Sunday will be a bright day for all the family. We invoke a blessing on the cause of temperance and on all who are laboring for its advancement in a true Christian spirit."

"Water has put in its claim, this year to be regarded as man's worst natural foe. The terrible disaster in the Conemaugh valley is only partially repaired, the immense destruction by the sea upon the Jersey coast is scarcely a week old, and now comes a report from Japan of the worst calamity of the year in the flood which devastated the province of Kii in August. It is to be hoped that the first reports will be exaggerated as were those from Johnstown, but they are evidently authentic enough to indicate an almost unparalleled disaster. The lowest estimates place the loss of life by flood and avalanche at 15,000. Not many months ago Japan was visited by a dreadful calamity in the bursting of a volcanic mountain, which overwhelmed a wide territory with debris and caused great destruction of life and property. The latest catastrophe is hightened by a vast mountain landslide which buried whole villages. Something similar to this, though on a much smaller scale, is reported from Quebec, where a great slice of rock fell from the precipice, known as Cape Diamond, demolished a number of dwellings and caused the death or injury of a large number of persons. What with earthquakes, volcanoes, conflagrations, tidal waves, floods and cataclysms of all sorts, it is not difficult to believe that this old world will come to its end, some time." —Springfield Union.

From the recent report of Dr. Tracy Chief of the bureau of Vital Statistics, we learn that 1,100,000 human beings live in tenement houses, in New York City. Of these over 142,000 are children under five years of age. Alas, with what a moral and social atmosphere, are many of them surrounded!

The statistics of our states prisons show the alarming fact that the ratio of prisoners to the population is rapidly increasing, and the still other startling fact that the average age of those committed to them, is considerably below that of those committed twenty years ago.

Prohibition has closed every saloon in Kansas, killed the power of rum over politics, and made of this a comparatively moral commonwealth. Topeka ought to spend $10,000, advertising it as the only city of 60,000 people on the globe, without a saloon, and inviting people to come to live. Every banker in Topeka is for prohibition.—N. Y. Times.

Provincetown, situated at the extremity of Cape Cod, is a quaint and interesting place. There are no saloon signs in the streets. Alcohol, or brandy, even as a medicine, seems to be difficult to get. Here was born Peregrine White, the first pilgrim-child; and notwithstanding the old story of Plymouth Rock, there was an earlier landing at Provincetown.

There is considerable excitement in Europe in view of the Congress of American nations convened at Washington. The fear is strongly expressed that European nations will be commercially greatly injured by a diversion of trade from Europe to the United States.

A further fall of a portion of the rocky mass of Cape Diamond at Quebec, is feared, endangering the destruction of 900 houses. One calls to mind the language of the prophet Nahum. "The mountains quake at him,—and the rocks are thrown down by him."

One should feel that no kind of work, or knowledge or culture is an end in itself, but that the ultimate object of it all is to make the world sweeter, and the men who live in it better.—Christian Union.

It is always best to be careful in interpretation. Application of prophecy needs wisdom. But in these days one is reminded of Scriptures that are at least, appropriate for citation. Take Zeph. iii. 6. "I have cut off the nations,—their towers are desolate,—I made their streets waste, that none passed by." Take Ezek. xxvii. 11. "The men of Arvad (noted mariners) with thine army, were upon thy walls round about, and the Gammadim, (the brave, the warlike) were in the towers." Tyrus here referred to, is sometimes taken as a type of modern latter day glory. And again in Isaiah xxxiii. "Thine heart shall meditate terror. Where is the scribe? Where is the receiver? Where is he that counted the towers?" And this is spoken in immediate connexion with events of vast and world-wide importance. Look, and study the context. Once more in Isa. xxx. "And there shall be upon every high mountain, and upon every high hill, rivers and streams of waters in the day of the great slaughter, when the towers fall." And this is along side of the ensuing and unvailed glory of God. Why do we cite these passages? Partly because of the rage for building towers and monuments in these days. It is needless to enumerate them. The Eiffel tower stands forth a marvel of daring mechanism in Paris. And there is mention of others projected, to far exceed that in loftiness. But what a fall awaits them, if these Scripture quotations apply as we suppose they do, (in part at least).

The widow of a clergyman writes: "A member of our church once told me that my husband preached such long sermons, that she could seldom get home till after 12 o'clock, and to avoid unpleasantness at home, she staid away from meeting, and three others of her acquaintance were detained for the same reason. I told my husband, and he determined to make a change. He merely read the first verse of a hymn, instead of the whole, began precisely at 10:30, shortened his prayers, and closed preaching at 11:45. Within three months there was a revival, and one of the first brought in, was the husband of the woman above referred to."

The union of the individual with God is the starting point and constant aim of all education. All education that is not founded on the Christian religion, is one-sided, defective and fruitless.—Froebel.

God's Precious Seed.

"Light is sown for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart." Psa. xcvii.

We have some very rare seed presented to us of a beautiful flower. We hold it in our hands and consider its value, but we can realize nothing of its perfect beauty till we put it away out of our sight in the ground, and we do it in full confidence that these little dark seeds will be mysteriously transformed into lovely flowers. When we read in God's word, that light and gladness is sown for God's children, we know it is some great good put away out of our sight for a period of time, to accumulate in fulness and glory. While we are enjoying every day God's temporal and spiritual gifts, our heavenly portion of light and gladness is enlarging and doubling. In view of this, the Psalmist exclaims, "Oh, how great is thy goodness which thou hast laid up for them that fear thee; which thou hast wrought for them that trust in thee before the sons of men."

With regard to our bodies formed by God, these also must be planted in hope. "The time comes, and comes again, when we must bury our best things in the soil. The hand so masterful, yet so gentle, makes us cast our seed corn into the furrow, and the hope and love of our hearts is dead with it—yet is sad and bare, it is only as the granary is bare in June; the harvest will surely come at last; after the sorrowful sowing, we shall reap in joy." —Guide to Holiness.

"Hearken, my beloved brethren, hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him." If that be so, what is to become of the rich professors and their hoarded millions? An English magazine article informs us that the last of the eleven bishops who lost their palaces when the Irish church was disestablished, is now dead, and makes the startling statement that these eleven bishops left behind them $9,376,000. They passed themselves off as successors of the apostles, but they do not answer James' description of those who are chosen heirs of the kingdom.

"Fear not little flock, it is the Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Here the Father's purpose is disclosed by the Son. The little flock is to take the kingdom. He could not give the kingdom to everybody—there would be no kingdom then. The little flock are in training for rulerships; that is why the way is narrow. "He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God."

"One cannot shut his eyes," remarks the India Watchman for July, "to the fact that the habit of drinking is spreading at a fearful rate among the natives of this country. The Government, our railways, and the military all vie in giving aid to the liquor traffic. 'It pays' is the only reason that justifies this murderous, conscienceless business of human destruction. As matters are going on now what will the next generation be? Thousands of little children can be seen drinking toddy, and as they grow up, taking to stronger brands. God will judge this nation if she does not stop her planning to live on the blood of her subjects."

That was a noble expression of the Chancellor Benevolus when directed by the Emperor Valentinian to write the bloody edict in favor of the Arians, being threatened with banishment if he refused. Taking off his girdle, the ensign of his office, he threw it at the feet of the Emperor, and said, "Take back your honors and leave me my conscience."

Paul tells the church at Thessalonica that God has called them to his kingdom and glory. Is it any wonder that their discipline is strict? Is it any wonder they should be required to prove their fitness to reign by governing themselves?

Why Italy is in the Triple Alliance.

An article in the Contemporary Review upon the triple alliance of Germany, Austria, and Italy and the place which Italy occupies in it, by some supposed to have been written by Mr. Gladstone, is attracting much attention in Europe owing to the severity with which Italy is attacked for placing herself in a position of antagonism to France. "For her," says the writer, "to take up arms for the purpose of thwarting the policy and aims of France, to whom she owes her independence in the war of liberation, would be one of the gravest and most shocking scandals of history." The writer, whoever he may be, has studied history to little purpose if he is not aware that Italy has been forced into her present alliance with Austria and Germany by the hostile action of France, and that she would have submitted to anything short of national disgrace and humiliation to have remained friendly to France after the latter had helped her in the opening steps of national unification.

A brief historical resume will make this point clear. In 1859 France assisted Victor Emanuel to increase his territory by rescuing Lombardy from the Austrians, with the exception of Mantua, the papal states, and the duchies of Parma and Modena. In 1866, as the outcome of the struggle between Prussia and Austria, Victor Emanuel, with the aid of Count Cavour's eminent diplomatic ability, was enabled to seize the rest of Lombardy, with Venetia, and unify Italy with the exception of Rome and the papal states which were occupied by a strong French garrison in behalf of the Pope. Confronted with a notification from France that she could not have the states of the church and Rome, the capital was moved to Florence, there to await the time when Italy could regain her ancient capital. That time came sooner than was anticipated. In 1870 disaster followed fast upon the heels of disaster to the French arms at the hands of victorious Germany, and the garrison at Rome had to be recalled. It was Victor Emanuel's advantage, and he promptly improved it by driving out the ultramontane Irish and French-Canadian bodyguard, annexing Rome and the states by plebiscite—i. e., popular vote—and repossessing the ancient capital of the Cæsars.

The French government, however, did not acquiesce and relinquish its unfriendly purpose, but notified Italy that when the opportune came it would drive her out of Rome and restore the Pope to his political power, and from that time to this France has cherished and maintained that determination with unchanging implacability. The Italian people are just as resolute in their purpose to cling to their ancient capital, as it belongs to them both by ancient title and by every modern international right. They are ready to forfeit the favor of France and to burden themselves with taxation, and have raised an army and navy far beyond their resources for maintenance rather than surrender their capital and submit again to priest rule in politics. Not being strong enough of themselves to successfully resist France when she shall again attempt to impose papal domination on them, they have taken refuge in the arms of Germany, who was the real unifier of Italy in her war of 1866 and 1870, and made friends with Austria, who has no further cause for complaint, having recouped herself in the Balkan provinces of Turkey.

Whoever wrote the article in the Contemporary Review, therefore, was short-sighted in not appreciating the motive which has urged Italy into an alliance with Germany and Austria. Italy will never surrender Rome. It is as dear to her as Paris is to France. If France really believes that the present and future wellbeing of the Pope depends upon his regaining political power, why does she not demonstrate her devotion by installing him in Paris? There can be no possibility of friendly feeling between Italy and France until the latter renounces her purpose of interfering in the domestic affairs of Italy and engages not to assist the Pope in seizing and occupying Rome and setting up again the abhorrent dogma of temporal power.

In the conduct of this business France has made two extraordinary blunders, first, in driving reluctant Italy to Austria and Germany for protection, and, second, in forcing England to enter into some sort of alliance or arrangements with them by which she will be upon their side when the tug of war comes as the outcome of France's threats to drive England out of Egypt and seize her highway to India. If France had treated England in this matter as England treated her in the Tunisian affair she would have secured her benevolent neutrality. If she had given Italy assurance that she would never interfere with her possession of her own capital and would never seek to impose the papal yoke upon her again Italy would still have been her friend. This is what history demonstrates. French statesmen and politicians have badly blundered.—Chicago Tribune.

DIED.

HUBBEL.—At the old home of his grandma (Sister Nancy Guffin) near Bracken, Huntington Co., Ind., Sept. 30, 1889, Chester O. Hubbel, aged 7 years, 11 months and 23 days.

Chester was the youngest son of Sister Lida Hubbel. He was a very bright and cheerful boy, and was, therefore, doted upon by the entire family. He struggled patiently for the long period of twenty-three days with brain trouble, during which time his suffering was intense. The relatives and friends put forth every effort to relieve the little sufferer, and to restore him to health, but all in vain. The enemy had claimed him. Of the immediate family, a mother, one brother and one sister survive him. Funeral sermon by the writer, after which we laid him away to rest until he who said "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God," shall come to gather "his jewels," and distribute the "crowns."

Then may this little, tender bud,
Who was here so fair and gay,
Have no dark spots to dim his crown,
But with stars shine bright as day.

L. E. CONNER.

SMITH.—At Huntsville, Mo., on Sept. 24, 1889, of apoplexy, Chas. P. Smith, aged 48 years.

Bro. Smith was born in Glasgow, Scotland, and was left an orphan at an early age, his father, mother, brothers and sisters all dying with cholera. He has belonged to the church about fourteen years and was well respected by all who knew him. His daily Christian walk was worthy of imitation.

ANDREW MACKIE.

LaRue and Miss Alberta Morris, the ceremony being performed by the writer. The guests numbered about twenty, the greater part being relatives. Reception at groom's residence, Rensselaer, Ind., Oct. 2, 1889. L. E. CONNER.

SLEEP.

"So he giveth his beloved sleep." Psa. xxvii. 2.

He sees when their footsteps falter, when their hearts grow weak and faint,
He marks when their strength is failing,
and listens to each complaint!
He bids them rest for a season; for the pathway has grown too steep;
And, folded in fair, green pastures, he giv-
eth his loved ones sleep.

Like weary and worn-out children that sigh
for the daylight's close,
He knows that they oft are longing for home and its sweet repose;
So he calls them in from their labors ere the shadows 'round them creep,
And silently watching o'er them, he giveth his loved ones sleep.

He giveth it, oh, so gently! as a mother will hush to rest
The babe that she softly pillows so tenderly on her breast;
Forgotten are now the trials and sorrows
that made them weep,
For with many a soothing promise, he giv-
eth his loved ones sleep.

He giveth it! friends the dearest can never this boon bestow;
But he touches the drooping eyelids, and placid the features grow;
Their foes may gather about them, and storms may round them sweep,
But, guarding them safe from danger, he giveth his loved ones sleep.

All dread of the distant future, all fears that oppress today,
Like mists, that clear in the sunlight, have noiselessly passed away;
Nor call nor clamor can rouse them from slumbers so pure and deep;
For only his voice can reach them who giv-
eth his loved ones sleep.

Weep not that their toils are over, weep not that their race is run;
God grant we may rest as calmly when our work, as theirs, is done!
Till then we will yield with gladness our treasures to him to keep,
And rejoice in the sweet assurance, he giv-
eth his loved ones sleep.

EXPERIENCE AND ASPIRATION.

If we have a heart to bear burdens here, and bear them bravely and well, we may the better bear our joys in the world to come. If we cannot, or think we cannot, endure evils or inconveniences now, how shall we feel certain of bearing the good that God prepares for his saints? Paul expected an exceeding and eternal weight of glory. By having his shoulders fitted to burdens in his life militant, he would the better carry the weight of blessings in the life triumphant. What a blessing to take the yoke of Christ on our shoulders in this earthly serving time! May we have not only readiness but alacrity, even to eagerness, for all the will of the king, the true, perfect, immortal Brother!

All saints will say—let Christ be exalted. Let him be exalted in our thought, in our obedience and in our speech. Let us avoid speaking lightly, the name of Jesus. There may be lightness in too oft repetition. His name should be ever most sacred and precious to us. He should be ever most wonderful to us in every excellence. We may call him most holy, because, for one thing, he is the High Priest in the most holy place, in the heavenlies. There is a rare and sacred and blessed familiarity of faith and love, but a familiarity of lightness and light-mindedness and routine, is greatly to be deprecated. If we will be holy ourselves, we must have the Lord hallowed in our hearts. And it is best to avoid discussions of the nature, origin or being of Christ, that involve any sacrifice or the most sacred reverence, and the most scrupulous enshrining of his blessed perfections in our hearts.

Jesus is wonderful, and this is the testimony of the prophet. He is and always will be wonderful, and a wonder always to interest and delight his saints. I love to think of him not only as man immortalized—but as supremely spiritual—yes, even a quickening Spirit. What can he not do for us then? What can he not do now, as well as hereafter? Can he not do wonderfully and mightily? Let us have more faith. He is the life, and can he not give us spiritual life, and literal life also? Can he not give us physical health and strength? Is he not an enemy of sin, and also disease? He can heal our backslidings, and he can heal our sickness. First of all we want less unbelief. In fact we want none at all. What wonders are possible to faith! Let us think of it more, and understand it better. Surely he loves to help us, if we are ready to be helped. And he must delight to chase away bodily ills, as he did when he was on the earth. He never changes. He is the same to day, yesterday and always.

What a grand thing that God shall have easy and perfect control of us! That he shall dictate our thoughts, govern our will, and move us perfectly as he pleases! This too, with our own hearty and delighted concurrence in the very beginning. How ineffably blessed to be thus wielded, so that God shall think in us, as it were, and we all the while intensely grateful and joyfully active! Here and now, let us remember that our words are to be ministers of righteousness. If our members are to be such instruments, so will the exercise of the members be. If the tongue is such a holy minister, so will its utterance be, and if the hand, so will be its speech in ink or printer's type.

Truth hath her very seat in the highest heaven, and is full of goodness and love to those that love and seek her mighty and precious help, for truth dwells in God, and is God. Jesus said, "I am the Truth." What a greatness and elevation of being is here! Truth is infinite. Happy is he who seeks first and most of all to be a child of Truth, and who, seeking, believes he will find, and believes he has found, and that he is truly thus most nobly and highly born. But to be begotten of the truth is no light thing, and to be born, is a matter of God's wisdom and pleasure, to be accomplished in his good time.

Lord, help thou our weakness, and shine upon, and heal all our blindness. Work mightily in us, and no less than mightily. Do according to thy exceeding greatness in wisdom, power and love. May we have holy fire in our hearts forever and sweetly burning. Speak, and it shall be done. Nothing is too hard for thee. May we never think evil. May we raise from the dead, and be thine wholly and forevermore.

I cannot change my heart, but I can hand it over to thee to be rectified. Thou canst help and fit us to bless and help millions; if it please thee, not a whit less. Thou art great and hast all things at thy command. Turn the hearts of all thou wilt,—turn their hearts from following vanity,—turn them to thee, and right, and good. By the very fact of their native bias, wrong and error, we appeal to thee. Remember their imperfectness from birth, their deflected and divergent tendencies by inheritance. Influence the hearts of some at least kindly toward us.

I raise my right hand to the Father, and my left hand to the Son,—and join them together in mingled tribute and earnest petition.

God continues to create new souls, age after age. Is it not for some great and eternal good? None that are born to die, are ever re-born naturally. No soul of two hundred thousand millions, re-appears! What a stupendous and never-ceasing work of creation! But all will be re-born by resurrection. O that we may be re-born, to be helpers of others.

Why do we ask of God and not believe that he gives? Unbelief resists the gift, or excludes it, though we should even ask earnestly and with many entreaties. Let us believe and know that when we ask right things, they will be surely granted.

What joy and bliss when we actually do love others as ourselves; love because the love is in us and we cannot help it. How different from hoping or trying to love, and coming far short.

Christians Pay Your Debts!

"That man is a jewel of a church-member," said an "outsider," in regard to the subject of our conversation. Continued he: "I persuaded him five or six years ago to go through bankruptcy; he did it reluctantly, but has labored ever since, and yesterday he came and paid me what he owed, and said, it was the last dollar of his liabilities—all this time he has supported a family. That is an honest man!"

Do you hear? Is a Christian doing well who stakes his honor, his reputation as a follower of Christ, his association with those who are lights in the world, and raises money on this stake, or obtains goods, and then goes through a form of law freeing him from his legal obligations, and forgets those obligations?

Is he an honest man? Nay, more; has he not put up Christ and his church as indorsers to his own honor, and then repudiated the whole? Has he not abused Christ and abused the church? He has done more—he has forgot the name of his Redeemer and the name of the church, and then stepped out and left them to pay the debt! Christian, "Owe no man anything," but, if you do, pay it, if it takes the last day of your life to earn the money.—Pacific.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

The 2nd General Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus, for the United States and Canada, will assemble at Chicago at 10:30 o'clock, Friday, Nov. 15, 1889.

The following extracts from the Constitution, By Laws and Rules, govern the election of Delegates:

FROM THE CONSTITUTION.

ART. II. It shall be a Body composed of one delegate from each organized church of ten or more baptized believers in "The things concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ," and one such delegate from each organized District Conference, the latter also to represent churches of less than ten members and isolated brethren.

FROM THE BY LAWS.

1. This conference shall hold annual meetings on the first Friday on or after the 15th day of November, 1889.

2. Any person appointed as a delegate must present to the conference proper credentials from the church or conference by which he is appointed.

FROM RULES ON VOTING.

1. No Church shall be entitled to vote through its delegate which has not furnished him with a certificate or other authority from such Church.

2. Each delegate may cast one vote for each Church represented by him.

3. When a Delegate represents a Conference he shall be entitled to one vote.

4. When a Delegate represents a Conference and a Church, he may cast two votes.

From the foregoing it will be seen that each church of 10 or more members is entitled to one delegate.

Each State or District Conference is entitled to one delegate.

A Delegate may represent both a Conference and a Church with power to cast two votes—one for each.

As Chicago is a central point, easy to reach, we hope for a full representation.

Delegates may be elected now at any time. All delegates will be provided for by the brethren at Chicago free of expense.

Delegates will please notify the Corresponding Secretary as soon as elected, so that we will know how many to provide for. Direct all communications and inquiries in relation to the Conference to Jas. W. Wilson, Cor. Sec., 166 Washington St., Chicago Ill.

The Two Dakotas—South and North.

Public attention is now, more than ever, directed to these two new States of the Union. Climate, soil and opportunities for investment of capital, are unexcelled by any other section of the Great West. The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co., which has lines of its own in both South and North Dakota, has just issued an illustrated pamphlet entitled "Plain Facts about Dakota" containing numerous letters from farmers and others which are well worth reading, as they show the results of each writer's personal experience in the North-West, and convey a great deal of valuable and reliable information which will be of benefit for those seeking new homes in South and North Dakota. For a free copy of this pamphlet address A. V. H. Carpenter, General Passenger Agt., Milwaukee, Wis. dec31-9

BURLINGTON ROUTE.

Cheap Lands in the West.

Along the lines of the BURLINGTON ROUTE in Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming and northwestern Kansas, particularly on its new extensions in that territory, there is still some Government Land awaiting settlement, as well as other cheap land held by individuals. These lands are among the best to be had anywhere in the country for agricultural and grazing purposes. In the comparatively new districts are many improved farms which can be purchased at a very low rate of that class of restless pioneer-settlers who are ready at all times to move "farther west." In the territory embraced by the BURLINGTON'S lines west of the Missouri River, there are in the vicinity of two hundred new towns which offer to manufacturers and business men an excellent opportunity to locate with profit. Send to the undersigned for descriptive pamphlets and other matter giving location and full particulars concerning these lands.

Map of the United States.

A large, handsome Map of the United States, showing North and South Dakota, mounted and suitable for office or home use and issued by the BURLINGTON ROUTE, will be furnished responsible parties free on application to the undersigned.

WHY SHOULD I GO TO MONTANA?

Great Reservation. Because 18,000,000 acres of free Government land, with a delightful climate, and equally suited for general farming and stock raising, have just been opened to the homeseeker, in the Milk River Valley and near Benton and Great Falls.

Stock Raising. Because the favorable climate and superior grasses of Montana make it the natural home of horses, cattle, sheep and other domestic animals; and because winter feeding is not required, as stock grazes at large the year round.

General Farming. Because a rich soil and abundant summer rains produce wheat, oats, rye, barley and the grasses and vegetables of a quality, size and yield unsurpassed.

Mining. Because Montana produces more of the precious metals than any other state or territory, and abundant opportunities remain to secure valuable properties at nominal cost.

Immigration. Because the Great Reservation is the meeting point of settlers from the Pacific Coast and from the Eastern States, and is the only extensive tract of good land left, suitable for settlement.

Business. Because the rapidly growing towns along the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Ry. offer splendid opportunities to engage in business.

Manufacturer. Because the 1,000,000 horse-power water-power at Great Falls, the extensive coal veins, the wool, mineral and grain raising resources of Montana offer exceptional opportunities to the manufacturer.

Tourist. Because the canon of the Gates of the Mountains, the Great Falls of the Missouri, the Giant Fountain and Continental Divide offer the most sublime and diversified scenery to be found on the Continent. Take a summer tour.

Why Travel by the St. P., M. & M.? Because only by it can you travel through the largest body of free land left for settlement. Because it reaches the Great Falls, with the largest water power on the Continent. Because it reaches Helena, the richest city of its size in the world; and because it is the shortest and best route to Butte, the largest mining camp on earth. Special tourists' and landseekers' rates. Daily trains through solid to Montana. Choice of three routes to the Pacific Coast. AN ADDRESS BEFORE BAPTISM.

No words at my command can express the joy I feel this morning, brethren and sisters. Only one week ago we were privileged to welcome six obedient ones to the body of the anointed, and now I am about to assist three others in obtaining the sacred name, and the forgiveness of sins. I am sure there is not one of you but what feels like praising God for smiling upon our efforts to lead our fellows to the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world.

As a foundation for a few remarks on this interesting occasion I have selected the 9th verse of Psa. cxix., "Wherewith shall a young man cleanse his way? by taking heed thereto according to thy word." The first thought that occurs to me is, that a young man has the ability to cleanse his way. Secondly, that he is expected to do it. Thirdly, that God supplies him with the means with which to cleanse his way. He is not to do it in his own way, or it will be a failure. It is his own way that needs cleansing; and a clean thing cannot come out of an unclean thing. Now then in regard to the means. Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way? The answer is, by taking heed to his way according to God's word. This is in beautiful harmony with the prayer of Jesus for his disciples, "Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth;" and with Psa. cxix. 30, "The entrance of thy word giveth light; it giveth understanding to the simple." And to show the Psalmist's appreciation of God's word, he says, at the 105th verse, "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path." And at the 97th verse, "O how love I thy law; it is my meditation all the day."

To show God's regard for his own word, I refer you to Psa. cxxxviii. 2, where we read, "Thou hast magnified thy word above all thy name." And to show the awful consequence of despising, that is, underrating, neglecting, discarding the word and taking our own course, I quote to you Prov. xiii. 13, "Whoso despiseth the word shall be destroyed," not may be destroyed, shall be destroyed. And to show the fallacy of regarding reason or conscience as an infallible guide, I invite attention to Prov. xiv. 12, "There is a way which seemeth right to a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." I tremble to think of the harvest death will reap from this divine rule. Every day of our lives we hear it said, It matters not what we think or believe, if we are only sincere. And when we attempt to show them the narrow way of life we are met by the assertion, "O I am just going one way and you another—we'll meet all right at last." I entreat you all to bear in mind the quotation last made, even if you have to forget every[illegible] that may be said this morning: "There is a way which seemeth right to a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." "This cuts the ignorant, good-feeling, good-intention, honest, sincere idea into shreds." It seems right to them; it appears right to their distorted moral visions, or else they would not travel that way. But why will men and women risk their salvation on a "seems so"? when God's director is at hand to point out the way he has marked for us? Why will they grope in darkness and uncertainty when the lamp of life and light is at hand to guide?

This, dear friends is divine instruction to the seeker after truth. There is no guess-work along here. If we would cleanse our way we must take heed thereto according to the word of the Lord. The cleansing we undertake on our own account will not avail. In coming to the word to learn how one can cleanse his way by means of the word, I would remark, he must first have a motive for cleansing his way. The motive is supplied by the word itself. And while the motives of all religionists are remotely referable to the word of God, very few indeed take pains to examine the word for themselves, to see what God offers them as an inducement to cleanse their way. After generations have taken certain things for granted they are content to do the same. For instance, it is universally supposed that God has offered to reward us with an everlasting home in heaven if we do what he bids us. And while there are millions who believe that, it is safe to say there's not one in ten thousand of them who search the divine record to see if any such offer has been made. And yet, if a five hundred dollar lot is to be purchased, that they can hold but a few summers and winters, you ought to see what trouble they go to to make sure there is no flaw in the title. And it should be the same in reference to the conditions imposed by God on us, before he bestows what he offers. One thinks he can do about what he pleases, and God will make it all right anyway if he is only sincere in what he does. And if one ventures to point out some conditions that he has not complied with, he will say, "O yes, he says so, but he is too merciful to condemn me for just that." But enough of generalities. What motives does God offer us in his word? That is the towering question now. Let it be known that we want no second-hand answer. We want an answer that has not been filtered through a human mind. We want it fresh, and pure, and sparkling from the fountain of living water. What does God tell us he has in store for them that love him and keep his commandments? Heb. i. 1, 2, says that God has spoken to us by his Son, "whom he has appointed heir of all things." Very well, then, what does the Son say that the Father offers? He said to his immediate followers, "Fear not, little flock, for it is the Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." God offers a kingdom then. In 1 Thess. ii. 12 glory is added to the offer of the kingdom. They are enjoined to walk worthy of God who hath called them to his kingdom and glory. Yes, called them, invited them, offered them his kingdom, and glory besides. Can we know how long God's kingdom will last? Yes, he has told us that, too. Employing Daniel the prophet, he tells us in the 14th verse of chap. vii., that it is kingdom in which all people, nations and languages shall serve him; in a word, an universal kingdom, and his dominion is an everlasting dominion which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed. It is everlasting, you see. But are we sure that this is the kingdom that Jesus said it is his Father's good pleasure to give? The kingdom the saints at Thessalonica were called to? O yes, this is the very kingdom, for the prophet continues in the 18th verse with the information called for, and makes the delightful announcement that "the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom and possess the kingdom forever, even forever and ever." O what a calling, a calling to God's kingdom and glory; and as the kingdom is everlasting the glory is sure to be.

But is there any certain way of learning where this everlasting kingdom of God is to be? O yes, the 27th verse settles that point too, for it says: "The kingdom and dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." That settles its location with every honest mind. It is not above the skies, it is under the whole heavens, right where their subjects will be, mentioned in vs. 14, "all people, nations and languages serve him;" that confirms what Jesus says in Matt. v. 5, "The meek shall inherit the earth." This is divine testimony, divine instruction. There is nothing human about it; there is no theory of man in it. It is God talking to us. I merely report the recorded word. I would be thankful if you would carry home with you the thought contained in the 130th verse of Psa. cxix., The entrance of thy word giveth light. Man often darkens counsel with his words; we are at the proper fountain now, and you need not be afraid to take copious draughts.

At this point some one may suggest that an everlasting kingdom on earth would be of no account to a mortal race like that of man. Very true, but the good God has anticipated that difficulty, and provided against it. He has promised eternal life to us so that we can be eligible to an everlasting kingdom. We find Paul rejoicing in hope of eternal life, in Titus i. 2, and he tells us, too, that God who cannot lie promised it before the time of the ages. Think of that, dear friends! There's an everlasting kingdom and glory, and everlasting life to enjoy it! Is there not motive enough in all this to induce you to cleanse your ways? The apostle calls upon those who had been called, to walk worthy of the God who had called them. And Jesus said, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." It is also called a holy calling, and it is easy to see from this the class of people who are to possess God's kingdom and glory. And I ask, in view of the richness, and vastness, and duration of the kingdom and attendant glory, is it any wonder that he exacts of us purity of life as an absolute condition? God was under no obligation to make this offer; man was once given dominion over all things, but he lost it by disobedience, and God might have abandoned him to utter extinction of being at death, but he did not. He tried him once more, and I have given the briefest outline of what he offers to induce us to mend our ways and become fit to be partakers with the saints in light. This second offer grew out of his love, and I am wondering if that love finds any response in your hearts, does it? Are you sorry to grieve such a God of love? Do you desire to cleanse your ways and become candidates for God's kingdom and glory? If you do, the text supplies the needed instruction. You must take heed to your ways according to God's word. For fear you should fail to see what a God of love we have, I would remind you that we were all sinners doomed to die, and that without the shedding of blood there was no remission of sin. It required blood untainted by sin. Four thousand years passed and not a soul was found who had not sinned. Where was a Savior to come from? In this emergency God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth into him might not perish but have everlasting life! If you still lack motive to cleanse your ways look at the Son of God's love, going about doing good, healing the sick, cleansing the lepers, and telling the people of the coming of the kingdom we have been reading about this morning. He is heir of all things, but he has no place to lay his head. He is the future world-ruler, but he is homeless. He was born to be king of the Jews, but his own received him not. They thrust him out of the vineyard. They killed him. He was led as a lamb to the slaughter. His soul was made an offering for sin. He died, the just for the unjust. He died that we might live. During his life God manifested himself to us in him. And what words of ineffable beauty and love flowed from his lips! Amid all the taunts and jeers, the scourgings and the mockery, not a complaint was uttered, and with his expiring breath he prayed, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do." O herein is love, not that we loved God, but that God loved us! Let me enquire again, does all this love awaken responsive love in your hearts? Do you want to cleanse your ways? If so you must take heed thereto according to God's word. If after hearing God's offer you desire to cleanse your ways, that is proof that you believe the offer, and believing, desire to inherit the promised blessing.

The next question is, What does the word prescribe after belief of God's offer? It prescribes repentance. What is repentance? It is a change of mind and conduct, a reformation of life, a turning away from sin. Let us suppose a person to do that; let us suppose that he takes the New Testament as the rule of his life and conduct in all his business and social relations. Mind you he has accepted the promises of eternal life in God's kingdom as the veritable gospel offer; and he wants to be one of the saintly inheritors, so he changes right about. That is, he is converted from the error of his way. And now, what is his status? Does God reckon him righteous or unrighteous? Has God forgiven him because he has reformed? I am trying to find out what has become of the long running account against him before he repented. Is it still charged against him? or is he free from sin? That is a serious [illegible]estion indeed! Has he complied wi[illegible] the conditions imposed by God? Has he been baptized for the remission of past sins, as commanded by the Spirit in Peter on the Pentecost? Acts ii. 38? If not, the past is not forgiven. They stand against him yet. He is not a child of God yet, for baptism is the naming and adopting ordinance. Jesus said the apostles were first to teach and then baptize believers into the name of the Father, Son and Spirit; God then becomes their Father, and they his children. Then what follows? Why, being children, they naturally become heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ, the only begotten Son that God has. But to what are they now heirs? They are heirs of eternal life in the kingdom of God, with all the glory and honor which this implies. These remarks are not intended for the instruction of the candidates for baptism, but to account to their many friends present for the step about to be taken, and to see if they, too, will not lay aside the traditions of men, and believe in, and hope for, exactly what God has promised. I trust they will remember that Peter in his second epistle, first chapter and fourth verse, says that God has made exceeding great and precious promises, that by these (promises) we might be made partakers of divine nature. Collectively these promises are the gospel. So, of the gospel, which Paul says is the power of God unto salvation, we may say, in it God offers something to those who will believe it and comply with the conditions. What is not offered is not attainable at any price, and what is offered must be believed, and the conditions must be complied with. This is the divine way for man to cleanse his way. This is taking heed to our way according to God's word,—doing what the word bids us. And while the way that seemeth right to a man ends in death, God's revealed way leads to life.

To the dear young men who have determined to forsake all and follow the Lord's anointed, I must say a few words. To the latest hour of mortal life it will be a source of joy to you to have remembered your Creator in the days of your youth, instead of presenting to him the dregs of a misspent life. What pits and snares it will save you from, none but God can know. We rejoice with you. We rejoice with your parents and friends who knew the adversary desired to have you. Ah, we mingle our rejoicings with those around the throne. You are about to take the most important step of your lives. You are about to sever your connection with the world and become members of the body of Christ, which is his church; and are about to present yourselves as living sacrifices unto God. God's invitation makes you witnesses for him and his truth before the world. You have to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints. This must be done by presenting the plain truth of God, and showing it in contrast with the theories of men. I trust you realize that you become candidates for crowns of life today. You realize how mortal you are, and that life is the boon you need. Paul said a crown of life was laid up for him, and for all who love the appearing of the Lord, the righteous Judge. This will soon be the star of your hope; crowns will be laid up for you today. O, think of it! candidates for crowns; heirs apparent to crowns of glory; and not merely crowns of glory, but of unfading glory. And let me say to you here, the brilliancy of those crowns will depend upon your conduct from this eventful day to the end of life's journey. This is the beginning of well doing. It is he who patiently continues, and holds fast the confidence had at the beginning, that will be made a partaker of Christ. Remember, it is the entrance of God's word that has begun to illumine your minds; or as the beloved Paul puts it, 2 Cor. iv. 6, "For God, who commandeth the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light,"—light of what? "to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." What a sublime Scripture! And now, the light having shined into your hearts, you must let it illumine others. The light of the moon is derived from the sun, not for her own benefit merely, but for our sake she reflects it upon us when the sun is below the horizon; and this is just what God expects you to do. Our Lord said to his disciples, "Ye are the light of the world; and God having shined into your hearts you must live in its light so as to irradiate all around you.

But let me suggest here that you discuss the truth of God only with those who reverence it. I mean here what our Lord meant when he spoke of not casting pearls before swine. At the same time you must "be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear." This is recorded in 1 Peter iii. 15. It is a powerful sermon. You must be ready; you must be ready always, so as not to put off a questioner. You must be ready to give a reason, not an opinion, nor a supposition, nor a guess so, nor a think so, nor an assertion, but a reason. It is the why the questioner wants to get at. And then it is the reason of the hope that is in you, not the fear. Then the question has to be answered not in a boastful way, nor in a passion, but with meekness and reverence. This will not be a hard matter for you after you look at it calmly. For instance, you tell somebody what your hope is, viz., Hope of eternal life in the kingdom of God. If a reason for this hope be demanded you can reply, God has promised it to those who believe it and comply with the conditions; as I have complied with the conditions I hope to obtain it because God cannot lie. Can a better hope than this be conceived of? You hope for exactly what God promises to give. Then you can turn to your questioner and say, "Will you please tell me what your hope is, and why you hope for it." And if he is hoping for something God has never promised, it is not a good hope.

Is there one before me who is hoping for what God has never promised? Now is the time to decide. Soon it will be too late.

Turning to the candidates again, I say, You are about to enter God's household, the household of faith, and will be expected to obey its rules. It is not a human society that you can enter today and withdraw from to-morrow, or whenever you think proper to change to other pastures. Christ is the head of the church; you become members of his body today, and nothing but disobedience can sever the connection. In some way or other you will have to suffer for Christ and his truth, but if you suffer with him you will also reign with him. But as children of God you will have many privileges others do not enjoy. You will have an advocate with the Father, even Jesus Christ the righteous. You are invited to cast your care upon the Lord, and he will sustain you. Watch and pray, lest ye enter into temptation. Assemble frequently with those of like precious faith and exhort one another, and so much the more as ye see the day approaching. And now may the God of all grace bless you and enable you to endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ—become moral athletes, as our brother puts it, and show to all that you have a hope of blooming with immortality and eternal life. And if the cloud of adversity should sometimes brood over you think of the sweet words Jesus whispered back to us from the court of heaven, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." And, "to him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne." And O, loved ones, when temptation and trial come in like a flood, think of the announcement of the great voice out of heaven, saying, Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them and be their God; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away." I tell you, that is good enough for me; but it is not all. For fear the influences around us should lead us to doubt the reality of all these [illegible] he adds: "And he that sat u[illegible] throne, said, Behold I make al[illegible] new. And he said unto me, Writ[illegible] it down in black and white—Writ[illegible] these things are true and faithf[illegible] and then adds, "I am Alpha a[illegible] Omega, the beginning and the end. [illegible] will give unto him that is athirst, o[illegible] the fountain of the waters of life freely. He that overcometh shall inherit all things,—I will be his God and he shall be my Son." Beloved, this is good enough for us, is it not?

If you are now ready to die with Christ I am ready to bury you. Be sure to bury the old man and put o[illegible] the new, and then when you come ou[illegible] of the grave of water, "shall be saved" will be stamped upon you.

ARE YOU HUNGRY AND THIRSTY?

When a person is real hungry and thirsty, the desire to obtain that which will satisfy their needs, becomes very vehement and oftentimes when difficult to obtain, becomes uncontrolable, and will resort to almost any procedure to obtain that which will satisfy their craving.

We may thus in some measure realize the force of the Savior's words when he said, "Blessed are they who do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled. As everyone has in some degree experienced natural hunger and thirst they are prepared to measure their desire after righteousness. Is your craving for righteousness as vehement? Let us take to heart the forcible and beautiful language of the Psalmist David. Listen to it: "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God. My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God: when shall I come and appear before God? My tears have been my meat day and night, while they continually say unto me, Where is thy God?

If one hunger and thirst after righteousness is as intense as this language indicates, we can rest assured we are prepared to hear the "midnight cry" whenever it may sound. If not, there is no time to delay, lest you be found without "oil" on that glad day. The invitation is gracious and free to all: "Ho, everyone that thirsteth, come ye to the water, and he that hath no money come ye, buy and eat; yea, come buy wine and milk without money and adjudged as having died with him in his death, and therefore justified from sin. If this is not the "thought" according to the translation, be so kind as to tell us what it is. Let us have the truth whatever may be the consequences; although it prove that those who died under Papal persecution were not "the saints," and that therefore the man of sin is yet to do his work of wearing out the saints of the Most High. I think Samuel Wilson's question concerning that persecution has not been fairly answered. In love,

DOVER, Del.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:

I take my pen once more after a long silence, to let you know that I am still "contending for the faith once delivered to the saints," and have been for more than forty years. If I live till tomorrow I shall have lived 63 years. Why my Heavenly Father has spared my poor unprofitable life while so many who seemed to be so much more useful in the world, have been taken away from the busy scenes of earth is a mystery to me. You have heard through THE RESTITUTION of the sudden and terrible death of our beloved brother, and faithful Pastor L. C. Thomas. It was a crushing blow to us all, especially to his dear wife and daughter, and others of his kindred here, who feel that we have met with an irreparable loss. We can be comforted only by the blessed hope of soon meeting him again beyond the scenes of sorrow, pain and death. Our little ecclesia are left as sheep without a shepherd; but we still keep up our meetings at our beloved Bro. Baker's house, where we have met for the past three years. No one felt his death outside of his own family, so much as Bro. and Sr. Baker. He used to stay with them and take tea after the meeting, and they miss him so much, that it is hard to be reconciled to his sudden death. It has been my earnest prayer that this great affliction may be sanctified to us all, and that we may be more faithful in the cause of God and truth. We have Bible-readings now each first day, and have chosen as our leader, a nephew of our late brother, (Stephen M. Thomas), who seems very earnest in the cause, and is a staunch believer in the gospel of the kingdom as taught by Prophets and Apostles, and the great Head of the Church while on earth; and our desire is that he may be like Stephen of old: "A man full of faith, and the Holy Spirit." May God grant it for his truth and mercies' sake. O, how much of the Spirit's influence we all need, to strengthen and to keep us in the "narrow-way," being by nature so inclined to step into the "broad-way" for pleasure and amusements; but whenever we do so, we dishonor him whom we profess to love and serve. God help us to find our pleasure in those things that are pleasing in his sight, and will not bring reproach upon his cause. We are living in sad, and ominous times, and yet in the times of the "Signs of the ends of this age," and may well, "Lift up our heads and rejoice," if we are the children of Light.

Why do we not hear from more of the brethren and sisters through THE RESTITUTION, exhorting one another to duty and faithfulness? Is it not time to "awake out of sleep, and to watch and be sober?" The Lord quicken us all to duty and to diligence is the prayer of your sister.

ABBIE A. HOWARD.

Editor Restitution:

I send you a piece for publication which I copy from an abridgment of Seneca's morals. R. HALSTEAD.

He that would know all things, let him read Seneca; the most lively describer of public vices and manners, and the smartest reprehender of them.—Lactantius.

Next to the gospel itself I do look upon Seneca's morals as the most sovereign remedy against the miseries of human nature.—L'Estrange.

1. An obstinate goodness overcomes an ill disposition, as a barren soil is made fruitful, by care and tillage. But let a man be never so ungrateful or inhuman, he shall never destroy the satisfaction of my having done a good office.

2. But what if others will be wicked? Does it follow that we must be so too? If others will be ungrateful must we therefore be inhuman? To give and to lose is nothing; but to lose and to give still is the part of a great mind. And the other's in effect, is the greater loss; for the one does but lose his benefit, and the other loses himself. The light shines upon the profane and sacrilegious as well as upon the righteous. The mariner puts to sea again after a wreck.

3. An illustrious mind does not propose the profit of a good office, but the duty. If the world be wicked, we should yet persevere in well-doing even among evil men. I had rather never receive a kindness than never bestow one: not to return a benefit is the greater sin, but not to confer it is the earlier.

4. We cannot propose to ourselves a more glorious example than that of the Almighty, who neither needs nor expects anything from us; and yet He is continually showering down and distributing His mercies and His grace among us, not only for our necessities, but also for our delights: as fruits and seasons, rain and sunshine, veins of water and of metal; and all this to the wicked as well as to the good, and without any other end than the common benefit of the receivers.

5. With what face then can we be mercenary one to another, that have received all things from Divine providence gratis? It is a common saying, "I gave such or such a man so much money, I would I had thrown it into the sea;" and yet the merchant trades again after a piracy, and the banker ventures afresh after a bad security.

6. He that will do no good offices after a disappointment must stand still, and do [illegible] at all. The plow goes on after a barren year; and while the ashes are yet warm, we raise a new house on the ruins of a former.

7. What obligations can be greater than those which children receive from their parents? and yet should we give them over in their infancy, it were all to no purpose. Benefits, like grain, must be followed from the seed to the harvest. I will not so much as leave any place for ingratitude. I will pursue, and I will encompass the receiver with benefits, so that let him look which way he will, his benefactor shall be still in his eye, even when he would avoid his own memory.

8. In a matter of money, it is a common thing out of course, and before it be due; but we account ourselves to owe nothing for a good office; whereas the benefit increases by delay. So insensible are we of the most important affair of human life.

9. That man were doubtless in a miserable condition, that could neither see, nor hear, nor taste, nor feel, nor smell. but much more unhappy is he than that, wanting a sense of benefits, loses the greatest comfort in nature in giving and receiving them. He that takes a benefit as it is meant is in the right; for the benefactor has then his end, when the receiver is grateful.

Our Time.

My employer said, we have got the new dispensation and it came on your time. Its wonderful how spiritism rose and spread in this Christian land. The most important events in modern history, the magnetic telegraph, instant transmission of intelligence among the nations, a new era in human history began in 1843. First class consulships at Jerusalem; the time, yea the set time to favor Zion came in 1843, and all the powers of darkness cannot stop that good work. A little Jew boy taken from his parents and brought up in the church, rising as high as Joseph rose in Egypt, placing the coronet on the head of Queen Victoria, Empress of all the Indies, taking the guardianship of the Turkish Empire and the Holy Land into the care and control of England. The military prestige of the Sultan's Government passing under the control of the Christian nations in 1840, foretold by Elder Josiah Litch on the year-day theory in periods given in the book of Revelation, etc., etc.

C. BOARDMAN.

"There are hundreds of Babylonian and Assyrian inscriptions published, which are as yet uninterpreted; thousands which have been unearthed, which are, as yet, unpublished; tens of thousands of such inscriptions which still lie buried in the ruins of antiquity's great cities, awaiting the explorer's pick and shovel. There are scores of Arabic inscriptions, dating from many centuries B. C., which have been published, but are not fully understood; hundreds which are today in the hands of explorers, awaiting the funds necessary to publish them; and, we are assured, thousands engraved on the rocks of Arabia, which have not yet been seen by the eye of civilized man, and containing secrets of the past history of that strange country, for the possession of which men are willing to risk their lives, if only the necessary means can be obtained for the prosecution of the work. There are great collections of inscriptions in a tongue not yet deciphered, relating, it is believed by all, to a mighty empire of the past, the Hittite, which had all but dropped from the knowledge of man,—inscriptions which are, to be sure, non-Semitic, but which must be read, if read at all, by Semitic scholars. There are Aramaic, Phœnician, and other inscriptions and remains without number and of unknown value, which are yet to be explained."—Old and New Testament Student.

The Three Judgments.

Holy Scripture foretells three great judgments. a judgment of the saints before Christ takes the kingdom, a judgment of the nations when he has taken the kingdom and sits on His throne of glory in the beginning of His Millennial reign, then, at the end of the Millennium, there will be the judgment before the Great White Throne.

Of the judgment of the saints Paul speaks in ii. Cor. 5:10 "For we must all be made manifest before the judgment seat of Christ, that each one may receive the things done in the body, according to what he hath done, whether it be good or bad." A question naturally arises, how can believers receive for the bad which they have done? Its guilt has all been cancelled here. They cannot, therefore, suffer positive punishment for it in eternity. They shall receive for it diminution of reward. Their works shall be burned up, but they themselves shall be saved, but so as though fire, like a man escaping from a burning house in which his property is consumed. "Look to yourselves," says John, "that ye lose not the things which ye have wrought, but that we receive a full reward." There is, therefore, a possibility that by unwatchfulness we may lose even the things which we have wrought, and fail to receive a full reward. The judgment of the believer will be a judgment in relation to his service. As to his personal acceptance, there can be no judgment: for "he that believeth on the Son of God hath everlastig life, and shall not come into judgment, but is passed from death unto life." We could not think that the spirits of "the just made perfect" when they receive the resurrection body shall be placed before the Divine tribunal to be tried whether they be acquitted or condemned.

We have said this judgment shall be when the Lord comes. Hence, says the apostle of the Corinthians, "Judge nothing before the time until the Lord come, who shall both bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and shall make manifest the counsels of the hearts. Then shall every man have his praise of God."

The second judgment we have foretold in Matt. 25; 31, sq. Notice, when it takes place the Son of Man has come in His glory. Again, notice, it is the nations which are gathered before Him. There is no account of any resurrection of the dead. The judgment is that of living nations. They are judged for the treatment accorded to the brethren of Christ. Messengers have been sent to them called the "brethren" of the Lord, and they are judged according to their treatment of them, and they go to eternal punishment or eternal life, according to the way in which they have treated them.

When the Gospel was first sent forth it went out from Jerusalem, and when the Lord returns and saves his earthly people, from Jerusalem it shall go forth again. Isaiah tells us, "Out of Zion shall go forth the Law, and the Word of God from Jerusalem." And the effect shall be that they will beat their swords into plough shares and their spears into pruning-hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." That this is not the judgment of the saints, of which we read in ii. Cor. 5, we see from the fact that the judgment of the saints is from the Bema; but this judgment is from the throne.

The third judgment we have in Rev. 20: 11–15, where we have the resurrection both of the just and the unjust. Between these two resurrections a thousand years intervene. The end of the thousand years bring the second resurrection and final judgment. John sees a great white throne; great, for it is in harmony with the august occasion; white, for He that sits upon it is about to judge on the principle of inexorable righteousness. He that sits on the throne is the Lord Jesus. "The Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment to the Son." When he came to destroy the Antichrist, and to judge and make war, He came on a white horse; now he comes to cast all the wicked, and their wickedness into the lake of fire, and sits on a great white throne.

From before His face the great Millennial earth and heaven fled away; for even in the Millennial state there will be imperfection. The Apostle Peter describes this unparalled scene; the heavens pass away with a great noise, and the elements melt with fervent heat; the earth also and the works that are therein are burned up. But they pass away to give place to a new heaven and a new earth which shall be the everlasting home of righteousness.

The sea, as well as the grave, now gives up the bodies which it retained; and Death and Hades deliver up the spirits; and the dead, small and great, appear before that throne.

The books are now opened, and the dead are judged according to what is written in the books. Scripture tells us of two books kept by God, "a book of Remembrance" of which we read in Mal. 3: 16, and "the Book of Life." From His book of Remembrance "every work shall be brought into judgment with every secret thing, whether it be good or bad." In His book of Life the names of all His people are written, all who have received life through His Son.

The Book of Life being present at this judgment, indicates that there will be those present whose names shall be found in it. This seems beyond question when we reflect that all who died in infancy, or looking to the mercy of the Lord, from the first resurrection up to that hour, will be found in a state of salvation.

The dead are judged according to their works. When, therefore, it is stated that all whose names were not found written in the Book of Life were cast into the lake of fire, it is clear that the names of all we have referred to who feared God and wrought righteousness shall be found in it.

The lake of fire is the second death. Into it, with all the wicked, Death and Hades, personified enemies, are cast. This is the fulfilment of the words of the apostle, "The last enemy that will be destroyed is death." And now, when all rule, authority, and power are put down, the mediatorial kingdom is given up to the Father. Christ Jesus was the ruler in the Millennial kingdom; in the eternal God shall be all in all.—Chas. Graham in Christian Herald.

Russia and the Armenians.

The announcement that the Armenians, in case of the failure of their appeal to Russia and England, will appeal for assistance to Russia alone is the sort of a thing to disturb England and excit all Europe. The situation is an interesting one for the reason that whereas England is in treaty with Turkey to protect the integrity of the Ottoman Empire of Asia Minor, she is also under obligation to see that stipulated reforms are carried out in the government of Armenia. But in order to an understanding of the possible consequences of the action indicated in the despatch, it is necessary to know the political status of Armenia. Owing to their religion (they are representatives of Christianity) the Armenians have been persecuted grievously by the Mohammedans, and though by the treaty of Paris, 1856, they were promised equality of treatment under international law, there has never been a time when they were secure from the depredations of the Kurds or the oppression of their Turkish rulers. These persecutions of Christians gave Russia a pretext for its last war with Turkey, and after the peace Russia, in the treaty of San Stefano, reserved to herself the exclusive protectorate of Armenia. England opposed this article, however, and in the treaty of Berlin the article was modified so as provide that Turkey should carry out stipulated reform. It was in that same year, June 4, 1878, that England signed with Turkey the treaty of Cyprus, undertaking to defend the integrity of the Ottoman Empire. England at that time guaranteed the proposed reforms to be carried out in Armenia.

Under the treaty of Berlin the Porte undertook to "carry out without delay the reforms and ameliorations which local requirements necessitate in the provinces inhabited by the Armenians, and guarantee the security of the latter against the inroads and persecutions of the Circassians and Kurds." But the Porte evinced no disposition to fulfill its promise, and England, importuned by the Armenians, in November, 1878, sent a squadron into Turkish waters with an intimation that wrongs to Christians in Asiatic Turkey were to be redressed. There was great excitement in Constantinople, and the Turkish Minister at London had a stormy interview with Lord Salisbury that resulted in the prompt and unexplained backing down of England and the withdrawal of the squadron.

Since that time England has done nothing to enforce the promised reforms, and the condition of Armenia is today worse than ever before it was. The people are abused as much by the government functionaries as they are by predatory bands, they are taxed and denied the benefits of taxation, they are disturbed in their property and outraged in their persons, and even the patience of that sturdy race is exhausted, and its confidence in the ability of England to carry out her pledge well nigh destroyed. The contiguity of Armenia to the domain of the Czar, coupled with the significant fact that Russia has ever held herself the protector of the oppressed in the Eastern country, naturally suggests to the Christian Armenians the wisdom of appealing to a powerful friend near at home. Russia would desire nothing better than to be asked to step in and insist upon Turkey carrying out the reforms long ago prescribed. This would give Russia the opportunity. But as it is not characteristic of Russia to enter campaigns for the mere redress of wrongs without attempting at the same time to benefit herself, England would have every reason to look on the interference of the Czar as an aggressive movement with a purpose to extend his territorial boundaries.

Jealous of Russia and under agreement to aid Turkey in the preservation of the Ottoman Empire in Asia Minor, England will be at some loss how to proceed to keep the Czar from making his duty his interest. By the treaty agreement Armenia has the right to appeal to either England or Russia in the failure of the two to [illegible] in her defense. If she elects to call upon Russia, it is not easy to determine what other thing England can do than bite her thumbs and submit. At the same time it is to be expected that Russia, if she dispose of the Armenian difficulties, will assume the privilege of settling the balance of the Eastern question. This will call not only England but the other European powers into the field of controversy, and the Armenians may succeed in making as much of a stir in 1890 as the Bulgarians did in 1876.—Inter Ocean.

DIED.

DREW.—At Chicago, Ill., July 9, 1890, Omer A. Drew, aged 28 years, 1 month, and 24 days.

Bro. Drew was born in Dixon, Ill., May 16, 1861. He was the second son of Brother and Sister Alvah and August A. Drew. His father died a few years ago and his funeral was preached in Dixon by Bro. G. O. Ramsay. Young Bro. Drew was immersed at East Plum River June 15, 1888, and united with the little band of believers in Dixon. He was married Feb. 16, 1890.

He was taken to Chicago for treatment, but lived only twelve hours afterward. He leaves a young wife, mother, three sisters, two brothers, and numerous friends to mourn his loss. May the word of God comfort the family in their sore trials and bereavements. Funeral discourse preached by the writer from Job xiv. 10–14. Also 1 Thess. iv. 13–18. There was a large turnout to hear the word preached.

J. S. HATCH.

FRINK.—July 15, 1890, Emily A. Frink, near Pitsford, Hillsdale Co. Michigan, of Dropsy, aged 54 years.

Sister Frink was a sister of brother L. C. Chase, of Adrian, this State. She embraced the Bible doctrine of the soon coming of the Lord to establish his kingdom on the earth and be with his saints to reign over the nations of the earth in her early life, and since that time has lived a faithful Christian life.

Although she has been called to pass through the many trials of life, having buried her husband some thirteen years ago, and has lived a widow ever since, she leaves one daughter and her family with a large number of relatives and friends to mourn her loss, as well as the Church a faithful member. But we mourn not as those that have no hope, for we know that all that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. Then all the righteous will come forth clothed with immortality. Services conducted by the writer.

VOL. 39. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, AUGUST 27, 1890. NO. 32.

THE RESTITUTION

The Restitution advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins and a holy life as essential to final salvation.

THE DIVINITY OF THE SCRIPTURES EVIDENCED BY THE PLAN THEY UNFOLD.

We live in an age of wide-spread and increasing unbelief in Divine Revelation. This skepticism arises from one or the other of two causes, and perhaps in the majority of cases from [illegible] the natural mind is disposed to welcome anything that will release it from the burden and restraint of divine obligations: and secondly, men discard revelation without making themselves thoroughly acquainted with its teaching.

The question should first be asked—For what purpose do the Scriptures profess to have been written? Every book has an object: if it be at all worth reading; what is the design of this book. This is briefly declared by the Apostle Paul to be that we "might have hope." Rom. xv. 4. Hope in what? Simply in the Divine purpose which the Bible unfolds. Theodore Parker said, "Here are the works of various writers, thrown capriciously together and united by no common tie but the lids of the book-binder." Henry Ward Beecher made a similar assertion. This is a cardinal blunder. There is a common tie of a much higher character than the one alleged, which binds these various records together. From Genesis to Revelation the contents of the volume agree with, and are in one way or another related to a definite purpose and plan. Of this plan we have the history from the beginning to the epoch of its realization. The reason this is not so generally perceived as it otherwise would be, is that the popular mind is trained in a set of theological ideas which entirely divert its attention from the revealed purpose of God. Once let that purpose be clearly apprehended, and much that is embarrassing to the reason will cease to give perplexity.

There are hosts of things in the Bible which, taken by themselves, seem to admit of no satisfactory explanation from either an intellectual or a moral point of view. Yet when they are considered in their relation to the divine plan which runs through the sacred volume, they become both reasonable and important.

And what is that Divine plan? It is one which is to culminate in the establishment of the Kingdom of God upon the earth by the hand of his Son the Lord Jesus Christ, as a Theocracy which shall take the place of all human governments, remove from society every form of imperfection and suffering and evil, and bestow inconceivable blessings upon all the families of the earth.

This was what was revealed to the prophets of Israel. If we can but be fully persuaded that future events have been foretold which by no possible sagacity could have been predicted or even conjectured, we shall need no further argument to convince us that the records have been supernaturally produced in which those events have been thus outlined beforehand. Writers of every school, when their attention has been directed to this great feature of Divine Revelation have willingly acknowledged that the prophecies of Scripture embody a magnificent conception, desirable for humanity in the highest degree if it could only be realised.

It has become fashionable in some quarters to treat the book of Daniel as though it were history written in the form of prophecy after the events, professedly predicted, had taken place. Christ seems to have anticipated this kind of shallow criticism and to have guarded us against it, by his special endorsement of this particular Prophet.

On such a subject he may be presumed to have been better informed than these modern critics. The prophets' veracity as a receiver of Divine truth, is well said to be "evidenced in Gentile rule, in the dispersion of his nation, in the history of the church, and in the postponement of the kingdom whose ultimate establishment he foretold." If people study him apart from the gospel of the kingdom of God, it is scarcely surprising they should arrive at conclusions unfavorable to his prophetical authority. Everything he wrote had some relation to this Divine purpose, and only thus can his prophecies be scientifically considered. When he uttered them the theocracy was overthrown, and the Jewish nation in bondage to an alien power. He foretold the long-continued ascendency of Gentile dominion, a prospect that would be peculiarly revolting to his patriotism as a natural man and a Jew. In fact he could have had no motive whatever for the invention of records of a character so disparaging to himself and his fellow captives. But the extraordinary things he wrote are accounted for by the fact that he was one of a number of men chosen as the media for the communication of the Divine purpose. These men were separated from each other both chronologically and otherwise; and they were men of various social conditions, from David and Solomon who were kings, to Amos who was a herdsman and a gatherer of summer fruit. There were both learned and ignorant men among them, and yet they managed to give to the world a direct series of proclamations "forming one connected design which they assert Divine Providence will ultimately carry out."

Everybody must admit that there is evil in the world, and plenty of it. Human society as hitherto constituted cannot be pronounced a very magnificent success.

"Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates and men decay."

Whether we live in a city of churches, or inhabit a savage island, we cannot get away from evil circumstances. Disappointment, sorrow, pain, and death are at present the portion of all the children of men. But God has mercifully determined that all these untoward conditions shall eventually be changed, and that endless and unspeakable good shall take their place. His plan, by the very nature of it, required a long period for its development. The nations of the earth were to be allowed to make the experiment of human rule in various forms: the future King and his associates in the government had to pass through a preliminary experience of evil; and the foundation of the kingdom had to be laid in the sacrificial death of God's well-beloved Son. There had to be a series of preparatory dispensations and arrangements, including selection, teaching, prophecy, promise, and invitation; all leading gradually to the glorious issue.

When we thus survey the Divine plan in its entirety, and see how completely adapted it is to accomplish what it proposes, our faith in those records which reveal it obtains a wonderfully strong support, and things in the Bible that previously gave distress to our reason, do so no more. We say again that God's purpose to establish his kingdom upon the earth, and to provide the nations with one infallible, omnipotent, and immortal government, will explain much in the Scriptures that cannot otherwise be explained at all. They require to be read in the light of that purpose, and many parts of them which have furnished unbelievers with material for cavil, will be found to agree with the one design which pervades the whole book. Taken separately and independently there are passages which seem to conflict with our ideas of truth and justice; but if these are viewed in their connection with the Divine plan and sublime result proposed, they will not be considered out of place in writings given by inspiration of God. Those who are intelligently acquainted with "the gospel of the kingdom" have a weapon of Biblical defense which "orthodox" apologists have never been able to wield. The question of miracles, for instance, creates no difficulty when studied in relation to the place miracles occupy in the history of the Divine purpose to "restore the kingdom to Israel" and give mankind supernatural government. The alleged miracles of Paganism made no pretence of having relation to a pre-conceived plan; whereas the Bible miracles—as it has been pointed out—"are all incidental and necessary indications of a certain design which includes the exercise of a renewing power over nature that will be fully illustrated in the future kingdom of God." Hence believers in the Apostolic age are spoken of as having "tasted of the powers of the world to come." In the supernatural endowments they possessed, they were given an earnest of the promised inheritance or a sample of what they might expect by and by. Away from the Divine plan with which they were associated, miracles would prove a perplexing feature in the sacred records, and as unbelievers invariably regard them in this detached aspect, it is not surprising they should carp at them. Indeed they would be inexplicable but for the relation they bear to the Divine purpose. To accomplish that purpose supernatural power will be required. The ultimate results predicted, cannot be brought about by natural means. It was therefore to be expected that miracles should appear in the course of the sacred history, to shadow forth that Almighty energy which will be displayed in the kingdom of God. This was the principal object for which they were wrought. They are not out of place in records purporting to exhibit the history and development of a purpose which will employ Divine power and wisdom in its accomplishment. In relation to such a purpose they are neither impossible nor improbable; indeed they are only what might have been expected in the career of a nation that had been under a Theocracy which was "a shadow of good things to come."

GLORY IN THE CROSS OF CHRIST.

But God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world." Gal. vi. 14.

Paul's glory was not in two crossed sticks, worshiped as an idol by the devotees of the Pope, but in the cross that alienated or crucified unto the world, produced a separation between himself and the sinful affairs of this life so sharp and distinct, that he became as it were entirely oblivious to their existence.

"And whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after me, cannot be my disciple." Luke xiv. 27.

To bear the cross signifies the crucifying or putting to death all fleshly desires crossing our pathway, found to be antagonistic to Christ and his teachings. Cross-carrying is always burdensome to the flesh, and just as long as the fleshly inclinations are in the ascendency, the burden will be sensibly felt, but crucify the fleshly desires and the burden will roll away. Jesus our great burden-bearer will make it "light," if we will only come unto him. "Come unto Me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." "But whosoever doth not bear his cross and come after me, cannot be my disciple."

Cross-bearing is requisite to discipleship, but dear struggling child of God, he does not wish you to carry it all alone, but "Come unto me," heavy laden ones, "and I will give you rest." Oh, what a precious sympathising and loving Savior we have, his great heart is so willing to carry us through unto the haven of eternal rest, if we will only faithfully shoulder the cross, follow after him, and lay the burden at his feet, put to death fleshly desires, and say Lord, I come unto thee, give me rest.

"Brother, art thou worn and weary,
Tempted, tried, and sore oppress'd?
Listen to the word of Jesus,
Come unto me and rest."

It would be well occasionally to test ourselves by the Word, and if we find cross-bearing burdensome, lose no time, but fly at once to the remedy. For example, let us test ourselves by Heb. x. 24, 25; "And let us consider one another to provoke unto love and good works; not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another; and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching." Is it a pleasure to meet with the brethren at their appointed time and place, and "consider one another to provoke unto love and good works?" If so we will not need the injunction: not to forsake "the assembling of ourselves together as the manner of some is," but will be found at our post whenever possible. But if the mind is prone to find an excuse for deserting the assembly then take heed. One brother recently inquired of another, "Why don't you come to meeting any more?" The reply was, "Oh, I am tired." "Too tired" on Sunday to meet with the church, but not "too tired" on Monday to engage again in the busy whirl of business. Accost another, and say "brother, I did not see you at church last Sunday," and he would answer, "No, it rained, and was afraid of taking cold," but on Monday if he is seen on his way to business going through rain, mud, snow or sleet, how would it impress you? It would suggest to me that heart was not in its right place, and that the cares of this world and the deceitfulness of riches were choking the Word. Second service will never be acceptable unto God. When he sends out his invitation and says: "Come, for all things are now ready," it will be of little avail to plead business engagements, and say Lord, "I have bought a piece of ground, and I must needs go and see it: I pray thee have me excused;" or another say: "I have bought five yoke of oxen, and I go to prove them," and see what sort of a bargain I have made. "I pray thee have me excused;" and also another comes and says: "I have married a wife, and therefore I cannot come." I couldn't leave my bride, in no way I could fix it, and so I shall have to be excused also. Yes, indeed, he will have them all excused, "for none of those men which were bidden shall taste of my supper." "Thou fool, this night thy soul (or life) shall be required of thee: then whose shall those things be, which thou hast provided? So is he that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God." "Thou fool," is the appellation Jesus applies to a person who has mis-spent his life in looking solely after temporal things when brought face to face with the inevitable summons "This night thy soul (or life) shall be required of thee." It is a dread message always at hand.

"Death traverses the world with unwearied steps; riches cannot bribe him.—science cannot evade him—power cannot resist him. He regards not the gravity of age, nor pities the tenderness of youth; his presence is universal, and his sway unlimited." None can avoid his appointment, from the King on his throne, to the beggar in his hut. "It is appointed unto men once to die." Men may disregard their appointments with each other, but the appointment to die none can avoid. "It is appointed unto men once to die," not twice. If any suffer the "Second death," they have only themselves to thank for it. Excuse-making Christians are the candidates for the "Second death."

Dear faithful pilgrim, does the way seem long and dreary? Does courage almost faint by the way? Take courage, Jesus has traveled it before you, he is willing to help, he has a tender sympathising heart. O, Yes,

"With joy we meditate the grace
Of our High-Priest above;
His heart is made of tenderness,
His bowels melt with love.

Touch'd with a sympathy within,
He knows our feeble frame;
He knows what sore temptation means,
For he has felt the same."

"Let the heavens rejoice, and let the earth be glad; let the sea roar and the fullness thereof. Let the field be joyful, and all that is therein: then shall all the trees of the wood rejoice before the Lord; for he cometh, for he cometh to judge the earth: he shall judge the world with righteousness, and the people with his truth." "Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

The mind wants steadying and setting right many times a day. It resembles a compass placed on a rickety table—the least stir of the table makes the needle swing around and point untrue. Let it settle, then, till it points aright. Be perfectly silent a few minutes, thinking of Jesus; there is almost divine force in silence. Drop the thing that worries, that excites, that interests, that thwarts you; let it fall like a sediment to the bottom, until the soul is no longer turbid, and say secretly, "Grant, I beseech thee, merciful Lord to thy faithful servant, pardon and peace, that I may be cleansed from all my sins, and serve thee with a quiet mind."—Bishop Huntington.

MISUNDERSTOOD AND MISAPPLIED TEXTS.—No. 5.

"These bones are the whole house of Israel." Ezek. xxxvii. 11.

A correspondent in RESTITUTION of August 6th thinks that I have made a wrong application of Ezekiel's vision of dry bones by applying it to the return of the house of Israel from their long captivity. And then asks, "Who are the house of Israel?" In his opinion this vision very clearly refers "to the general resurrection of all the saints of God from righteous Abel down to the coming of Christ, judging by the following Scriptures." (The italics are mine.) But as it happens no Scriptures are given to prove the position taken. Our brother has fallen into the common error with Adventists in general, believing that the Christian Church is now the house of Israel, and that the fleshly seed are for ever cut off on account of disobedience. Let us examine the word with reference to the question asked, "Who are the house of Israel?"

I answer that the prophet Ezekiel was sent to the children of Israel, a rebellious nation, the descendants of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. "Son of man, go, get thee unto the house of Israel, and speak with my words unto them." Ezek. iii. 4. This nation is called by this name, in this prophecy about eighty times, and in every place it refers to the posterity of Jacob, the tribes of Israel. In some passages the ten tribes are called the house of Israel, sometimes the house of Joseph, or Ephraim; but the whole house of Israel includes all the twelve tribes—Ephraim and Judah. See this illustrated by the union of the sticks in Ezekiel's hand, chap. xxxvii. 15–23. To apply this to the church is a perversion of plain Scripture. All throughout the Old Testament Scriptures, where the phrase "house of Israel" is found, the literal posterity of Jacob is meant. So also in the few places where it occurs in the New Testament. In Luke i. 33 we have the phrase "house of Jacob," "he (Jesus) shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

And who was Jesus? The son of David, and heir to the throne and kingdom of David, as Isaiah foretold, chap. ix. 6, 7. Literal or spiritual? Just as literal as his mission was, "I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel." Matt. xv. 24. He sent his apostles out on the same mission to the same people. Matt. x. 6. And "the word which God sent unto the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ," was the word of the kingdom. "And as ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand." "And he said unto them, I must preach the kingdom of God to other cities also: for therefore am I sent." Luke iv. 43; Matt. x. 7. The kingdom of which they proclaimed, the good news, was the one to which Jesus, the heir promised to David, was to reign over for ever. And not only he, but the apostles also, "Verily I say unto you, That ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Matt. xix. 28; Luke xxii. 28–30. Are not these twelve tribes the literal house of Jacob or Israel? Christ and his apostles are to rule over and judge this house, and so also are those who are Christ's—Abraham's spiritual seed—for they are joint-heirs, and will reign with him. When the apostles asked Jesus, saying, "Lord wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" surely the church was not the Israel meant. Acts i. 6. Peter, speaking to the Jews, on the day of Pentecost, calls them the house of Israel. Acts ii. 36. I do not know of one instance in the whole Bible where the terms, words and phrases—Jacob, Israel, children or people of Israel, house or tribes of Jacob, house or tribes of Israel, etc., are applied to the church. They belong to the fleshly seed of Jacob. If we would correctly understand we must rightly divide the word of truth.

In view of what the Scriptures teach regarding "the house of Israel," are we not correct when we say that in every instance where the phrase is found, the fleshly descendants of Jacob are meant? That the Lord who sent Ezekiel to prophesy to this people was referring to them when he said to the prophet, "Son of man, these bones are the whole house of Israel," is also undoubtedly true. This people are even now saying, "Our bones are dried, and our hope is lost; we are cut off for our parts." But the prophet is commanded to say to them, "Thus saith the Lord God: Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel." This opening and coming up out of graves, is their deliverance "from the land of the enemy," whither they had been scattered on account of their sins. For long ages have they been politically dead and buried among the nations; but they have a promise of restoration. "There is hope in thine end, saith the Lord, that thy children shall come again to their own border." "Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land; and I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel." But the rebels and transgressors will not be permitted to dwell in the land. "For in mine holy mountain, in the mountain of the height of Israel, saith the Lord God, there shall all the house of Israel, all of them in the land, serve me." And those who will thus enter the land, will repent and forsake their evil ways, will be cleansed, and have a new heart and a new spirit, and says Jehovah, "ye shall dwell in the land that I gave to your fathers: and ye shall be my people and I will be your God." "Thus saith the Lord God; I do not this for your sakes, O house of Israel, but for mine holy name's sake, which ye have profaned among the heathen, whither ye went."

Enough [illegible] has been quoted to prove that the house of Israel, represented by the valley of dry bones, is not the church, nor their revival a representation of "the general resurrection of all the saints of God." Ezekiel was sent to prophesy to the natural seed or house of Israel—to tell them of their sins, of the woes coming upon them, and of promises of forgiveness and blessing upon repentance. These promises are not yet fulfilled. Will they fail? "Hath God cast away his people? God forbid." "Have they stumbled that they should fall? God forbid." "If the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead?" "Blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in. And so all Israel shall be saved: as it is written, There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob: for this is my covenant unto them when I shall take away their sins." The house of Israel is beloved on account of the fathers, with whom God made the covenants of promise. And "the gifts and calling of God are without repentance," or change of purpose. Paul did not ignore or despise his brethren according to the flesh. He earnestly sought their welfare. "Brethren, my heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved." Rom. x. 1. But he knew that they were blinded through prejudice and tradition, and would not receive the gospel until their Messiah should appear in his glory. In this respect, Paul says, "I obtained mercy, that in me first Jesus Christ might show forth all long-suffering for a pattern to them which should hereafter believe on him to life everlasting." 1 Tim. i. 16. Let this suffice for the present. Submitted in love.

Immaterial.

Sectarians tell us that the soul of man is immaterial. Im is a prefix meaning not. Leave off the prefix, the not, and you have the word material, which is of importance. The serpent upon one occasion added the word not to one of God's commands, and the consequences of our first parents giving heed to the serpent rather than God have been painful indeed. Sorrow, misery and death hath reigned supreme since then over the race. And all because they, our first parents were so simple as to believe the serpent instead of obeying God. Friends, if that little negative has been the cause of all our sorrow and woe and even death itself, why should we not obey God in all things rather than men. Men say the soul is immaterial, immortal, deathless. Jehovah says, the soul that sinneth it shall die. Who tells the truth on this question? For myself I have resolved to believe God in all things though it should make all men out to be liars. Jehovah says by his prophet to put no trust in princes nor in the son of man; as a reason he says, because his breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish.

Brethren, cling to God's word; it is represented as a lamp, as a guide, and though we walk through the valley and the shadow of death, we need fear no evil, it is said, because thy rod and thy staff they comfort me. The word immaterial does not occur in the King James translation of the Bible; it is purely a heathenish, infidel word. Of the word Webster says: Of no consequence; without weight or significance; unimportant; and we may safely add that it is entirely worthless, although some people when they wish to appear grave and solemn, talk about the worth and weight of never-dying souls. One asked me not long since why it was that the soul was worth ten thousand worlds like this? He had the boldness to tell me that God said that one immaterial soul was worth more than ten thousand worlds like this.

Truly there are strong delusions in the world to believe a lie; certainly we should be careful what we receive as truth. We should try the spirits by the unerring word, for if they speak not according to this word it is because there is no light in them. There is nothing but condemnation awaiting those who love, believe and make a lie. [illegible] doctrine as authoritative to the masses who are ignorant of God's word. They traverse land and sea to make proselytes. These teachers of error are very industrious. What can a little handful of Christians do? They can be faithful to God and bide their time. Submitted in love.

HENDERSON MURPHY.

Light at the Tomb of Absalom.

Dr. Ermete Pierrotti, a French scientist, architect and engineer when an infidel, journeyed through Palestine with the avowed intention of disproving the truth of the Bible. Visiting the heaps of stones over Absalom's grave, he sat down to meditate with a heart full of unbelief, and while he tarried there an Arab woman came by with her little child, which she held by the hand. In passing she threw a stone upon the heap marking the tomb of Absalom, and bade her child do the same.

"What do you do that for?"

"Because it was the grave of a wicked son who disobeyed his father."

"And who was he?"

"The son of David," she replied. He started as if a blow had struck him. Here was an Arab woman, a Mohammedan, who probably had never seen a copy of the Scriptures, and could not read a word of them, yet she held those ancient facts and was teaching her child to fling a stone at the monument called by the name of a son who rebelled against his father.

Dr. Pierrotti, Bible in hand, turned to the story of Absalom, and as he read it a new light shone on him.

This was the first of many convictions which so wrought upon him, that at length he embraced the faith he once attempted to destroy, and devoted his life to the proof and illustration of the sacred Scriptures.—Jewish Herald.

Dr. Horatius Bonar, in the last sermon he is believed to have preached to his own congregation in Edinburgh, and when near seventy-nine years of age, said, "Men are willing enough to receive the conjectures, philosophies and sentiments of human device, but a message directly from the lips of him that made them, and who shall be their judge, they will not receive. This is the world's condemnation. The present is a lying age, the philosophy of this age is lying, the literature of this age is lying. This age will receive anything that professes to be truth except what comes from God." Strange language, and yet how true.

WE most sincerely hope that those friends whom we have trusted, at their solicitation, and whose promise to pay has been in our hands for some time, will at once redeem these pledges by renewing their subscriptions. It is quite an expense to make out statements of these accounts, and the postage is a big item. The price of our paper is lowered this year, and every little leak is felt. Please give us no more anxiety on this score, but renew at once.

YELLOW fever is reported to be on board a British vessel at Halifax, Nova Scotia. The vessel came from Jamaica.

LORD Salisbury, in his reply to the note from the Porte, asking England to withdraw from Egypt, says the time is not yet ripe for the evacuation of Egypt by England.

THE cholera is appearing in many places. Many foreign ports are infected, and as a matter of course the authorities endeavor to keep the true state of the disease secret. Several cases have been reported in New York.

THE two parties at work on the Grand Trunk Railroad's tunnel under the St. Clair river were able to converse with each other August 24th. An auger was bored through the remaining ten feet. The tunnel will soon be completed.

THE trouble between the labor organizations and the New York Central Railroad is likely to end in serious trouble. It is not yet known whether all the different branches of Railroad labor leagues will stand together. If they do it is more than likely that other roads will be brought into the affair.

NOTWITHSTANDING the friendly appearances that are kept up between Russia and Germany, Russia does not propose to leave it in the power of even a friend to harm her if possible to prevent it. This is shown in recent orders to push to completion as soon as possible naval arsenals and fortresses at Libau, on the Baltic about 65 miles north of Memel, and about twice that distance north of Konigsberg. The object is to keep open the Baltic to the Russian fleets. Heretofore it has been possible for Germany to close this by simply blockading the mouth of the gulf of Finland.

THE recent visit of the German Emperor to the Russian Czar has caused some uneasiness, no one being aware of the nature of the business that called them together. The Chicago Inter-Ocean, has the following regarding the interview:

It may be wise to wait for further and fuller knowledge before accepting the rumor that the German Emperor has led the Russian Czar to forego his friendship toward the French Republic.

The sentimental admiration of the French Government is likely to be at least as weak in the breast of Czar Alexander, who is as much of an absolutist as Czar Nicholas was, as in that of Emperor William, who is quite a liberal, as liberalism is found in the hearts of monarchs, but politics is influenced much more by necessity than by sentiment. The Russian necessity is quite at variance with the Austrian policy, and with the Italian policy, and Emperor William would gain nothing if he withdrew Russia from an informal alliance with France and forced Austria and Italy into close friendship with the one great republic of Europe.

France is the only power of Western Europe to which the Russian policy in Asia and in Eastern Europe conveys no menace. The Czar needs Southeastern Europe, his people are enthusiastic for its absorption into the Empire, its population is largely Slavic, and therefore inclined to accept Russian domination. Great Britain, in her own interest, and in that of Turkey, Austria, Italy, and Greece, are naturally hostile to any policy that strengthens Russia's pretensions in this direction.

The old triple alliance between Russia, Germany, and Austria was formed on the theory that these three great powers should act together on the questions vital to the peace of Eastern Europe. The tripple alliance between Germany, Austria and Italy was defensive as against Russia, and was meant to isolate France. The effect was to drive Russia and France into closer relations. This could not be satisfactory to the Emperors of Germany and Austria. The imperial policy was against strengthening the only great republic of Europe, and it is very natural that the Emperor of Germany should try to persuade the Czar that it was a mistake for imperial Russia to stand as the ally of republican France. But should Russia resume the old relations with Germany, is it not possible that France will drift into closer political fellowship with Great Britain and Italy?

JOHN'S APOCALYPSE.
Chapter II.

1. To the angel of the church at Ephesus mayest thou have written. Thus saith the one who controlleth the seven stars in the right hand, the one who walketh in the midst of the seven golden lamp-stands.

2. I know thy deeds and thy toil and thy patient endurance, and that thou art not able to carry evil-doers and that thou hast proved those who say that they are apostles and are not, and hast found them false;

3. And thou hast patient endurance and hast carried them for my name's sake, and hast not grown weary;

4. But I am holding it against thee that thou hast left thy first love.

5. Remember then whence thou hast fallen, and mayest thou have repented, and mayest thou have done the first deeds; and if thou dost not I am coming unto thee, and I shall remove thy lamp-stand out of its place, unless thou repent.

6. But this thou hast, thou hatest the deeds of the Nikolaitans which I also hate.

7. May the one who hath an ear have heard what the Spirit saith unto the churches. To the one who overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, that is in the paradise of God.

8. And to the angel of the church in Smyrna mayest thou have written, Thus saith the first and the last, the one who became dead and became alive.

9. I know thy tribulation and thy poverty: but thou art rich; and the blasphemy of those Jews who say they are Jews and are not; but are a synagogue of Satan.

10. Fear not what thou art destined to suffer. Lo the devil (ὁ διαβολος, the slanderer) is destined to cast some of you into prison that ye may be tried (tempted?); and ye will have tribulation for ten days. Become faithful unto death, and I will give unto thee the garland (crown) of the life.

11. May the one [illegible] an ear have heard what the Spirit saith unto the churches. The one who overcometh shall not be harmed of the second death.

12. And to the angel of the church in Pergamos, mayest thou have written, Thus saith the one who hath the sharp, two-edged sword,

13. I know where thou art dwelling, namely, where Satan's throne is, and that thou art holding on to my name and didst not deny my faith in the days when Antipas my faithful witness (martyr) was put to death alongside of you where Satan dwelleth.

14. But I have a few things against thee, because thou hast there those who hold to the teaching of Balaam who taught Balaak to put a stumbling-block in the way of the sons of Israel, to eat things offered to idols and to commit fornication.

15. In this wise hast thou and thou hast those who hold to the teaching of the Nikolaitans likewise.

16. Mayest thou have repented therefore. But if not, I am coming unto thee quickly and I shall war with them with the sword of my mouth.

17. May the one who hath an ear have heard what the Spirit saith unto the churches. To the one who overcometh will I give of the hidden manna, and I will give unto him a white pebble (a voting pebble probably meant, possibly a true-love token exchanged) and upon the pebble a new name written, which no one knoweth except the one who taketh it.

18. And to the angel of the church in Thyateira mayest thou have written; thus saith the Son of God who hath his eyes like a flame of fire as it were, and his feet like copper-colored frankincense.

19. I know thy deeds and love and faith and service (διακονια, service) and thy patient endurance and thy last deeds to be more than thy first.

20. But I have much against thee because thou allowest the woman Jezebel (send life O Bel) who calleth herself a prophetess and teacheth and causeth my bond-servants to err, namely to commit fornication and eat things offered to idols.

21. And I have given her time to repent and she doth not purpose to repent of her fornication.

22. Lo I am going to cast her into a bed and those who are committing adultery with her into great tribulation if they do not repent of her doings.

23. And her offspring I am going to kill with death; and all the churches will comprehend that I am the one who marcheth secret thoughts and hearts, and I shall give unto you each one according to your deeds.

24. And to the rest of you in Thyateira, I say, as many as have not this teaching, as many as have not known the depths of Satan as they say, I am not going to cast on you another burden.

25. Only hold on to that which ye have until I come.

26. And the one who overcometh and the one who watcheth to keep within him (the esoteric watch) my doings unto the end to, him will I give official power over the nations.

27. And he will shepherd them with an iron sceptre; as earthen vessels are broken, as I also have received from my Father.

28. And I will give unto him the morning star.

29. The one who hath an ear may he have heard what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

COMMENT.

The erudition of the King James translators and the prejudice of the revisers could not perhaps be better illustrated than in the original translation of the Greek word λυχνια, by our English word "candlestick" and its retention in the Revised Version. If such things are possible in the green wood just imagine what may be possible in the dry.

"Controlleth" instead of "holdeth" more significant of the fact intended to be stated here.

"Carry" instead of "bear," the idea intended to be conveyed here not endurance so much as help afforded to these people who were in error. At any rate βασταζω the word here means "to carry" as a burden is carried, not to "bear" in the sense of tolerate or endure, a very different thought.

"Ten days" the figurative way of stating according to the doctrine of numbers constantly used all through the Scriptures that this time referred to here was "a conjunctive period" simply, the length of time not intended here to be revealed, only so much stated, namely, that it was to be "a conjunctive period" that this would be a sufficient key for the student of prophecy to work out the rest if he desired to know it.

"The garland-crown" as distinguished from the "diadem" in Scripture symbolism is this, as I understand it. "The garland crown" is significant of the eternal life conferred, while the "diadem" is the additional honor of "rule" conferred upon the few who are found worthy of it. These two ideas are confounded frequently by translators making no distinction between these two words, διαδημα and στεφανος. It is very evident that immortality and "the prize of the high calling" are two different things.

"Balaam's sin" here defined to be "false teaching" when he knew better, and many a learned false teacher since his day has been rebuked by an ass. The lesson for us though here is that the false teaching of this early day is designated as idolatry and fornication. Spiritual adultery is faithlessness to one's covenant vows, while fornication is faithlessness to one's self outside of covenant vows, the figure used of course being the marriage relation according to the flesh in the first instance, and unbridled impulse of the sexual relation yielded to in the second instance without regard to self respect or law; this is true of the natural being used to illustrate the still more important truth in the spiritual.

There have been various explanations made by commentators of "the white stone." Such stones or "pebbles" more properly speaking were accustomed to be used in those days with names written upon them as "votes" to be cast or shaken out of a helmet or urn. There were various ways of determining the vote according as the participants were believers in chance, destiny, or God. But the material point to be determined here would seem to be simply whether a "vote" is meant, and if so what is its importance and significance. I think a "vote" as a citizen in the kingdom of God is what is referred to here and "the new name written upon it" is a part of "the new order of things" referred to later in this prophecy in this prophecy in this way, "Lo I make all things new." "The hidden manna" is clearly explained to us in John's gospel.

The name Jezebel probably used figuratively here, such a woman having in Old Covenant history figured as an aggravated example of zealous idolatry in some of its grosser forms. The name translated means, "send life O Bel" (or Baal) which would be an invocation to Baal, and what follows in the way of denunciation shows that the grosser forms of idolatry must have been in active operation in the midst of this church.

"The morning star" is Christ himself as explained in the 16th verse of chap. xxii. of this prophecy.

It is evident that all the churches or the whole "body" of Christ was intended to be addressed through these "seven" here designated as the one in Ephesus, the one in Smyrna, the one in Pergamos, the one in Tyateira, the one in Sardis, the one in Philadelphia and the one in Laodikeia.

And we would naturally expect, as in other prophetic names, a mine of symbolic meaning to be found in each of these seven names. Reasoning from analogy symbolic teaching we would expect the errors pointed out and reproved in each to be shadowed forth in each name respectively, and moreover that these errors would be the leading and constantly besetting errors of the Christian church for all time. This I think we will find to be true.

Now the weak yielding to natural or carnal [illegible] and appetites of all sorts would be the first and fundamental error of the church or the individual, would it not? Well this is the meaning of the word Ephesos when translated: an ephesos is a person who yields weakly to the demands of appetite or desire instead of firmly bracing himself and acting up to his enlightened convictions of right and utility. So we have as an appropriate promised reward to the one who overcometh (the inordinate desire) that he shall "eat of the tree of the life, etc.," a something which meets the wants of every desire.

The next weakness which the church and the individual would be most likely to yield to would be the natural dread of death, and false ideas of life and death were in fact one of the first manifestations of apostasy in the early Christian church. The embalming of the dead by the heathen before and after the Christian era grew out of false notions in regard to future life and the hereafter of the body. "Natural immortality" or "the immortality of the soul" was one of these fundamental errors still prevalent that crept into the church. Now Smyrna was so named because of its commercial prominence in the export of "Smyrna" or myhrr, a gum extract of a species of the accacia universally used in those days in embalming the dead. The false and idolatrous ideas in regard to death assailing this particular church therefore symbolised under the name Smyrna or myhrr, and the true thought emphasized and the reward for fidelity to it, spoken of and assured as "the garland of the life," and immunity from "the second death" which all heathendom and all apostasy has consistently ignored.

The next weakness and error which the church and individual would be most likely to yield to and which history shows the early Christian church did yield to, is false notions concerning marriage and the sexual relation. Now the word Pergamos when translated means "concerning marriage." Read what follows in the way of reproof upon spiritual and natural adultery and fornication, the false teaching of Balaam in other words and the false "perfection" teaching of the Nikolaitans. Some have even supposed "the white stone" spoken of here to have the significance of a true-love pledge exchange, each stone having the other's name written upon it and to be kept sacredly "unknown" to any one except the recipient.

The next weakness which history shows the church to have yielded to was a departure from the vigorous simplicity of the truth as it is in Christ and a wandering off into the mazes of verbal and other [illegible]alism, especially as to the public [illegible]ing of praise and thanksgiving." Now this offering under the Levitical order of things, as well as in the surrounding heathenism was symbolized by "the incense-offerings."

The city of Thyateira as a commercial mart attained special prominence in those days as a place where the incense drugs were prepared and sold. The word when translated means literally "a place of the bruisers of incense." For these drugs used in burning incense were prepared by bruising or braying them fine in a mortar; and the idolatrous perversion of "the true praise and thanksgiving offering" could not better be symbolized in one word it seems to me. The perversion moreover is still prevalent in the Christian church of today.

CHAS. GARDNER.

John Wesley once sent a five-pound note to a poor preacher, with the text, "Trust in the Lord and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed." The preacher replied that he had often admired the text, but never had seen before so useful an expository note upon it.

Out of Christ—What Does it Mean?

It means just this, that you have no life except that which you have inherited from Adam. Think of it. "What is your life? It is even a vapor, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away." James iv. 14. O, friends out of Christ, does not the outlook terrify you? Meditate over it and consider the results. No hope, no blessed inheritance with the redeemed of all ages in the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. A wilful neglect to comply with the simple requirements of Christ means death—eternal death. Adam cannot give you a better, or a more enduring life than that which he himself possessed. The fount of life is found only "in Christ." "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. And if ye are Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise." Gal. iii. 26, 27, 29. The plain teaching of the Scripture is, if you have been "baptized into Christ," you have "put on Christ," and if you have "put on Christ" you belong to Christ, and if you belong to Christ you are "Abraham's seed," and if "Abraham's seed" you are heirs "according to the promise" made unto "Abraham and his seed," "which is Christ." See Gal. iii. 16.

Now what is there in these promises which makes heirship valuable? Peter says: "Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises; that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust." And these promises are made to those only "that have obtained like precious faith with us, through the righteousness of God and our Savior Jesus Christ." See 1 Peter i. 1–4. The thought which makes these promises "exceeding great and precious" to (us) the "heirs according to the promise," is that ultimately through, or by them, we shall become "partakers of the divine nature," which is life eternal; yea a life that shall know no sorrow. "Know ye therefore that they which are of faith the same are the children of Abraham. And the Scripture foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed. So then they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham."

The gospel is found in these "precious promises" made to Abraham and his seed. And this "gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Now who are to be blessed with Abraham? "Then they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham." It is only those who are "in Christ" that are recognized as Abraham's seed. And none are Christ's except in the first place they "have put on Christ," and none "have put on Christ" except they "have been baptized into Christ." "Wherein God, willing more abundantly to show unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel confirmed it by an oath: that by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us." Only think of it: God has confirmed the truth of these "precious promises" "by an oath." Who will dare insult God by refusing to believe him on his "oath?" Do you desire a place of "refuge" from coming judgments? Then "flee for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us." Before you can enter this ark of safety you must first "flee," and then "lay hold upon the hope." O sinner, "flee" at once, remember that your life "is even a vapor that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away." Your opportunity may slip away from you before you are aware of it. If you are following after the follies and fascinating allurements of this life, remember they will all pass away. There is only one thing enduring, and that is the hope set before us in the gospel. The wise will secure it while the fools pass on and vanish away. Yours waiting for the coming one,

"A Discourse on Foundation Work," considered physically, morally and religiously, is the title of a 32 page tract, written by R. McLauchlan of Cleveland, Ohio. The Author has supplied us with a large quantity of these pamphlets, which we will be pleased to mail to all who desire them, at 5 cents each. The usual price of tracts this size is 10 cents. In this case the desire of the Author is to secure a wide circulation for these works and so do good, hence the price is put at the cost of the postage and handling them. No better opportunity can be given to secure good solid reading to hand to the uninstructed. Don't let these works remain long on our shelves, but send them out on their mission of love.

Youth's Column.

NEVER BREAK A PROMISE.

If you wish to be respected
And to gather many a friend,
There's a simple rule to follow,
That will bring the wished-for end.
It is this: Be very careful
How your promises you make:
And a promise, when once given,
Never, never, never, break!

Keep engagements to the letter;
Let this pride to you belong:
"Oh, his word is just as binding
As would be his legal bond."
Let this be your reputation,
Of you be this truly heard;
Thus your name will e'er be honored,
If you'll always keep your word.

KEEP A CLEAN MOUTH, BOYS.

A distinguished author says: "I resolved when I was a child never to use a word which I could not use before my mother." He kept his resolution and became a pure-minded, noble, honored gentleman. His rule and example are worthy of imitation.

Boys readily learn a class of low, vulgar expressions, which are never heard in respectable circles. The utmost care of the parents will scarcely prevent it. Of course, no one thinks of girls as being so much exposed to this peril. We can not imagine a decent girl using words she would not utter before her father or mother.

Such vulgarity is thought by some boys to be "smart," "the next thing to swearing," and "not so wicked;" but it is a habit which leads to profanity, and fills the mind with evil thoughts. It vulgarizes and degrades the soul, and prepares the way for many of the gross and fearful sins which now corrupt society.

VOLTS, OHMS, AMPERES.

We condense the following definitions of those oft-used, but little understood, electrical terms from a recent number of the Locomotive:

The volt is the unit used in estimating electrical pressures. An ordinary Daniell's cell is capable of giving an electrical pressure of almost exactly one volt. Edison Dynamos give about 110 volts, the Westinghouse about 1,000. The word volt is from the name of an early Italian experimenter, Volta.

Ohm.—This is the unit of electrical resistance. A wire of pure copper, .056 of an inch in diameter and 100 yards long, offers one ohm resistance to an electrical current. The word comes from the name of a German electrician, G. S. Ohm.

Ampere.—Some currents of electricity are stronger than others, and it is customary to compare them with a standard current called an ampere. This is a current of electricity of sufficient strength to decompose 5½ grains of water per hour. The word comes from Ampere, the name of a French electrician.—The Satchel.

JUST A HINT TO BOYS.

I stood in a store the other day when a boy came in and applied for a situation.

"Can you write a good hand?" was asked.

"Yaas."

"Good at figures?"

"Yaas."

"Know the city well?"

"Yaas."

"That will do—I don't want you," said the merchant.

"But," I said, when the boy had gone, "I know that lad to be an honest, industrious boy. Why don't you give him a chance?"

"Because he hasn't learned to say, 'Yes, sir,' and 'No, sir.' If he answers me as he did when applying for a situation, how will he answer customers after being here a month? He will be rude and drive them away and thus do me more harm than good."

What could I say to all that? He had fallen into a bad habit, young as he was, which turned him away from the first situation he ever applied for.

INDEX RERUM, a Ready Reference on Bible subjects, is the title of a pamphlet of 68 pages published by the author, R. C. Bingley. It takes up various important Bible subjects, and gives the most important texts on the topic, thus enabling one to call up desired testimonies, and refresh the memory as to the best texts to use to prove a point under discussion. About 60 different subjects are outlined, and we pronounce it the most "ready reference" book it has been our fortune to see. There is connected with it a chart showing the duration of the kingdom of men from the Babylonian dynasty till the end of the Gentile times. The author does not claim perfection in this little work, but any one at all interested in Scripture cannot fail to be benefitted by possessing a copy of "Index Rerum." Send twenty-five cents to R. C. Bingley, East Los Angeles, Cal. and get a copy.

DIED.

VICKERY.—At her home in Sumner Co., Kan., Aug. 12, 1890, Georgia A., wife of Ira M. Vickery, aged 43 years, 2 months, and 27 days.

She was born in Randolph Co., Ala., May 15, 1847; was met by Mr. Vickery during the late rebellion after which they were married at Centralia, Ill., Jan. 30, 1866. She was baptized with her husband in 1868, and has ever lived a devoted Christian life.

A funeral service was held at the home and remarks offered by Mr. J. H. Berkey, a recently converted infidel. His great and progressive mind converted him to God's love, and now his regret at having so long disobeyed his Master caused him to speak with great force and pathos on the ever absorbing questions of life and death.

Georgia was ever a most devoted wife, a fond mother and a benevolent friend to the one who needed aid. Gentle, quiet and unassuming, she ever appeared like a beautiful, white flower, seen and [illegible] by few, [illegible] dearly loved by all who knew her. Her life was one continual act of kindness, forgiveness and forbearance, ever ready to denounce wrong as she was to forgive, seeking every opportunity to give strength to the young Christian and advice to the wayward. Though we know she has passed away to a sweet rest to await the glorious resurrection of the blessed, we feel the bitter sting of parting so greatly that it seems impossible to realize that she has left us. Yours in the hope,

ALLEN CHAPLIN.

Hearing With the Eyes.

A girl who heard with her eyes, astonished a gentleman who recently paid a visit to the New York Asylum for Deaf Mutes. As he was approaching the building he met a bright young lady, of whom he asked: "Can you direct me to the asylum?" "Yes," she replied, "it is over yonder, and as I am going there I will show you the way. Have you any children there?" "No," he replied, "I am going to attend the annual exhibition." They had a pleasant walk through the grounds, and all the way the young lady and her companion had an interesting conversation. When nearing the main entrance he asked her how many children there were in the institution, and she replied that there were over three hundred deaf mutes, and a number of pupils who were deaf, but could talk as well as any body. "I am one of the latter," she added. "I can speak fairly well, as you perceive, but I never have heard a sound." "How on earth, then," asked her surprised companion, "have you been able to answer my questions if you did not hear them?" "Oh," said she, with a smile at the astonishment of the other, "we hear with our eyes." The man could scarcely believe it, but it proved to be true. It is so in spiritual matters. The poor and the ignorant, and those who have the least natural advantages, often astonish us by their quickness to hear and understand the things of God. Matt. xi. 25.—Christian Herald.

A million Jews are practically banished by the recent edict of the Czar of Russia. It is now believed by prominent Hebrews in New York that the bulk of this million of expatriated Hebrews will inevitably find its way to the United States as soon as possible. Thousands of them will doubtless arrive without means, and in this event the law for the exclusion of such immigrants will no doubt be strictly enforced. But a very large proportion of the Hebrews who come from Russia bring with them not only strong and willing bodies, but full purses as well, together with good business training. Many of them are skilled tradesmen. Should the Czar's ukase take effect in earnest, this country, far from suffering from the flood of new arrivals, is rather more likely to be benefited. An appeal is to be made to Secretary Blaine, asking him to intercede with the Russian Government against the threatened expatriation; but it is hardly likely that any serious interference would be tolerated in the matter. As a rule, the Hebrews who do come here, no matter how unfortunate, are never a charge upon the public. Pauperism is a reproach that does not lie at the door of the Jew. There is no race in the world that takes the same care of its poorer members, and in this respect the Jews may be said to be a shining example to many Christian communities.—Christian Herald.

TEMPERANCE.

"PAPA, BE TRUE TO ME."

State Senator Henry J. Coggeshall, when in the company of a very hilarious conference committee, which was riotously advancing the public business in the rooms of one of the most high-living lawmakers in the State of New York, was asked why he would not take anything but Apollinaris water. His poetic muse replied in the following verses:

What makes me refuse a social glass? Well I'll tell you the reason why—
Because a bonnie, blue-eyed lass is ever standing by;
And I hear her voice above the noise of the jest and merry glee,
As with baby grace she kisses my face, and says, "Papa, be true to me."

What then can I do to my lass to be true better than to let it pass by?
I know you'll not think my refusal to drink a breach of your courtesy.
For I hear her repeat in accents sweet, and her dear little form I see,
As with loving embrace she kisses my face, and says, "Papa, be true to me."

Let me offer a toast to the one I love most, whose dear little will I obey,
Whose influence sweet is guiding my feet over life's toilsome way;
May the sun ever shine on that lassie of mine, from sorrow may she be free.
For with baby grace she has kissed my face, and said, "Papa, be true to me."

"You cannot," exclaimed Rev. John McNeil, "whitewash the drink—you might as well pour eau de Cologne on a dung-hill."

O, why should the spirit of mortal be proud, when smokers and chewers are freely allowed to poison the air with the vilest of odors, and fire juice volleys like breech loaders? On the floors of our parlors, in cars and in halls that nasty black shower unceasingly falls.

Health and Home, on the adulteration of tobacco, startles us with the following: One factory sprinkles it with New England rum; another uses the Jamaica rum; another moistens it with the rankest corn whiskey he can find, and each brand has its own peculiar essential oil. Some use fennel, others use ginseng, while the sold sumach, abounding in tannin, cheap and plenty, gives that peculiar burning of the tongue, which characterizes much "fine cut." Astringent barks, wormwood, the refuse of the cinchona and others, give the bitter taste which some consumers like, and the twist or "nigger-head," which is largely exported to tropical climates, gets a special absorption.

Dr. C. F. Deems answers in the affirmative the question whether liquor making and selling should be made criminal: 'There exists, then, a business in this country which can be carried on only by men whose moral character at least is so low that they cannot be expected to obey the law; a business which injures the country more than the most stringent prohibition of imports, or the most unrestricted free trade could; a business which produces more distress, destroys more property, happiness, and life, than all other things known; a business which injures the country every year more than our civil war did in four years; a business that produces four-fifths of all the robberies, thefts, murders, and other crimes in the land; a business which does the nation and the world more harm than war, famine, and pestilence combined; a business which stands against all material, intellectual, and spiritual progress. I am asked whether the policy of making that business criminal is wise? Most assuredly, yes. If that be not true, where is the wisdom of prohibiting anything?'

THE INTOLERABLE BURDEN.

Among the chief burdens of society must be numbered the sins and vices and excesses of evil men; and a most fruitful source of such sins is the traffic in strong drink. This robs the right hand of its cunning, the arm of its strength, the mind of its clearness and intelligence, and leaves the victim of appetite a poor, helpless, defenceless, worthless wreck in this world, exposed to imposition, oppression, and disease, and to a vast array of ills which temperance might have avoided.

If a man will not work he should not eat. But here are men who deliberately unfit themselves for work, and who are then cast, in all their helplessness, with their wives and their children, as a burden upon society. And who bears these burdens? The sober, the temperate, the diligent, hard-working people bear them. They feed the hungry, they clothe the naked, they pay for the prisoners, and paupers, and beggars, that swarm throughout the land. The criminals are supported at their expense. The drunkard's children beg their bread at sober men's doors. They provide for the lunatics, whose minds have been wrecked by intemperance. They care for the orphans who have been made such by the use of strong drink. Crime, idiocy, lunacy, pauperism, taxation, all these are burdens which rest upon the sober, the honest, the temperate part of the community.

One man makes profit from the whole. The rumseller, spider like, hides himself in his den, weaves his web, and draws in his wretched victims, and drags them down to death. And still the patient, long-suffering public bear this awful load and groan beneath it. Rich men grow poor, and poor men grow poorer. Business is at a stand-still. Looms are idle, workshops are untenanted, because the money that should be paid for their fabrics goes into the till of the drunkard maker. He gains wealth while every one else is impoverished. He heaps up treasure, while others are robbed of pounds that he may plunder pence, and bereft of all the good of life, that he may fatten in luxury upon their wretchedness and tears.

It is written that 'every man shall bear his own burden.' Is it not time the drunkard-maker bear his burden, and that other people were set free from it?—Safeguard.

THE WHISKY DEVIL.

The ravages of the whisky devil in Africa are horrible beyond description. At the World's Missionary Conference in London, Rev. Horace Waller said that 'the degradation of the wretched tribes of West Africa has reached a depth that is appalling, and testified to having seen hundreds of native girls lying in a state of intoxication round the wagons of spirit sellers. Dr Clarke, speaking of South Africa, corroborated the statement, but used the word thousands instead of hundreds. Mr. Moir, of the Lakes Trading Company, wrote: 'I have seen boys and girls of fourteen and fifteen getting their wages in rum. In fact, there are parts of the country in which there is practically no other currency. It is enough to arouse the most placid spirit to read that the merchants of Mauritius send their refuse rum, worth less in any other market, to the recently converted Island of Madagascar, and despite the entreaties of rulers and people, force upon them a trade which has done much to nullify the work of the Christian missionaries.'

And rum for Africa is made in Massachusetts, and England, and in other countries which are professedly Christian, and in every case the governments license the production of the poison, and are partners in the guilt and infamy of the hellish work.

And Christian men talk about licensing and regulating this infernal manufacture and traffic. Such a business demands, not regulation, but annihilation, and if it is continued, the Almighty will find out who is to blame for it. 'When he maketh inquisition for blood he forgeteth not the cry of the humble.'—Bible Standard.

Selections.

A SAIL ON THE SEA OF GALILEE.

Our tent was pitched that night on the banks of the lake, about a mile beyond Tiberias. Our first care was to have a swim in the water, and then return to look at Tiberias. We learned that there are one or two excellent Christian missions here, amongst which is one of the Free Church of Scotland, but we had no time to visit any of them. A strong wall, with a fortress was built around the town in modern times, but the latter was shattered by an earthquake in 1837, and now lies in ruins. We observed many Jews here. They are distinguished by long locks of hair, hanging down each cheek, and a flap cap, surrounded by a fur band. It was on the whole, a sleepy place, and we were glad to leave it.

Tuesday, the 22nd April, was chiefly devoted to the Sea of Galilee and its vicinity. Our dragoman engaged a boat to sail to the northern shore of the sea, from which we were about eight miles distant. It was a lumbering concern, manned by six Arabs, and, as there was little wind to fill their lateen sail, they had to row the whole way. From the course which we steered we could observe both sides very distinctly. On the east the mountains, for the greater part, appeared to rise abruptly from the water. There were ravines, however, here and there, which might have been found on closer inspection, to be capable of cultivation. North of Tiberias, on the western side, the mountains recede from the shore, leaving a level space between their base and the water, and this, we were told, was the plain of Gennesareth. During our long sail we had ample time to reflect on the mighty works which were done on the bosom of the lake and in its near neighborhood. It was here that Jesus stilled the tempest when the boat in which he and his disciples were embarked, was ready to sink; it was on the waters of this lake he walked, and it was from a boat, thrust out a little from the land, that he taught the people. Some of our party beguiled the time by singing a spirited hymn, beginning with the words—and we tried to recite the well-known words of McCheyne which we could not banish from our minds—

"O Galilee, sweet Galilee,"

How pleasant to me thy deep blue wave
O Sea of Galilee!
For the glorious One who came to save
Hath often stood by thee.

Graceful around thee the mountains meet
Thou calm reposing sea;
But oh! far more, the beautiful feet
Of Jesus walked o'er thee.

Fair are the lakes in the land I love
Where the pine and the heather grow,
But thou art lovelier by far
Than nature can bestow.

O Savior! gone to God's right hand,
But the same Savior still;
Graved on Thy heart is this lovely strand
And every fragrant hill.

We landed at Tell Hum, about the centre of the northern shore, which is regarded by many as the site of Capernaum—Christ's own city. There are extensive ruins here, among which excavations have been made on behalf of the Palestine Exploration Fund. We saw undoubted portions of a synagogue, while broken columns and fragments of carved stone were strown around. These ruins are visited by thousands of travellers every year, and, if they all follow our example, the evidences of a building in which, it is believed, Christ worshiped, will soon disappear. Our dragoman broke part of a marble slab into nine pieces and furnished each of us with one as a memorial of the structure from which it was taken. From Tell Hum we sailed westwards and landed next at a small hotel, which is believed to occupy the site of Bethsaida. We had, and still have, our doubts as to the genuineness of both of the sites, but there could be no sordid motive at least for fixing on them, and we were glad to hear all that could be said in their favor. This hotel is kept by an enterprising Prussian, who not only accommodates travellers, but is making the desert around his habitation blossom as the rose. Some of our party tried fishing after the Arab fashion, but without success. It reminded us of those who toiled all the night and caught nothing, but letting down the net again at the command of Jesus, "enclosed a great multitude of fishes." When expanded, the net is like a circle. There are weights at the circumference which drag it to the bottom, and, if there are any fishes within reach, they are literally enclosed.

We landed the third time at Ain-et Tineh, which was said to be the same as Chorazin, but which the best authorities regard as the true site of Capernaum. A fountain gushes out from the base of a precipitous mountain, and in a stream of considerable size flows into the sea. Under more favorable circumstances it might irrigate the whole plain and make it productive of the richest produce, but at present no one tries to turn it to advantage. The immediate cause of the desolation which reigned around was apparent, but we could not help tracing the chain of antecedents back to him whom it was said—"Then began he to upbraid the cities wherein most of his mighty works were done because they repented not. Woe unto thee, Chorazin! Woe unto thee, Bethsaida! For if the mighty works which were done in you had been done in Tyre and Sidon they would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes.... And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted unto heaven, shalt be brought down to hell: For if the mighty works which have been done in thee had been done in Sodom, it would have remained unto this day."

At Ain-et-Tineh we met a company of Bedouins, and from necessity were compelled to mingle with them. Ever since leaving Jezreel their tents had become more frequent; but around the northern shores of the Galilean Lake they seemed to be in full possession of the country. Their tents are low and black, and are mere shelters from the elements. The women are coarse and the children unkempt. The men are known by their turbans. They are surrounded by camel's hair twisted into two rolls, and connected with them is a handkerchief, which covers the greater part of the face. Another handkerchief protects the neck and falls down on the shoulders. From underneath this headgear the eyes gleam with ferocity, frightening the stranger who chances to cross their path. The hotel keeper at Bethsaida has many tales to tell of their depredations. He has been stripped naked by them and compelled to sit down on a stone till they made ready to lay open his skull. How he escaped their hands he hardly knows, but attributes his preservation to divine interposition.—David Fotheringham, in Jewish Herald.

Hope in Evil Times.

In the opening sermon before the triennial session of the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church in New York, Bishop Whipple uttered these significant sentences:

"We are perplexed by the unbelief and sin of our time. The Christian faith is assailed not only with scoffs as old as Celsus and Julian, but also with the keenest intellectual criticism of divine revelation, the opposition of alleged scientific facts, and a Corinthian worldliness whose motto is, 'Eat and drink, for to-morrow we die.' In many places Christian homes are dying out. Crime and impurity are coming in as a flood, and anarchy raises its hated form in a land where all men are equal before the law. The lines between the church and the world are dim. Never did greater problems confront a council of the church. An apostolic church has graver work than discussion about its name or the amending of its canons and rubrics. I fear that some of this unbelief is a revolt from a caricature of God. These mechanical ideas about the universe are the outcome of a mechanical theology which has lost sight of the fatherhood of God. There is much honest unbelief. In these yearnings of humanity; in its clubs, brotherhoods, and orders; in their readiness to share all things with their brothers, I see unconscious prophecies of the brotherhood of all men as the children of one God and Father. Denunciation will not silence unbelief. The name of infidel has lost its terrors. There is only one remedy. It is in the spirit, the power, and the love of Jesus Christ. Philosophy cannot touch the want. It offers no hand to grasp, no Savior to trust, no God to save. When men see in us the hand, the heart, and the love of Christ, they will believe in the brotherhood of men and the fatherhood of God.

"We are living at the eventide of the world, when all things point toward the second coming of our King. God has placed the English-speaking people in the forefront of the nations. They numbered one-tenth of the human family, and I believe God calls them to do the work of the last time. The wealth of the world is largely in Christian hands. There never have been such opportunities for Christian work—never such a harvest as awaits the husbandman. You may tell me of difficulties and dangers. We have only one answer. Sin, sorrow and death are not the inventions of a Christian priest. 'There is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved.'"

What is it to be Religious?

It is not to pray all the time, although earnest, sincere prayer is one sign of piety. It is not to observe nine hundred and ninety-nine ceremonies, although the custom and ceremony have their religion. It is not to condense all thought of the Deity into one day and hour of the week, although the historic day of rest has profound significance for religion. It is not to attend service at a fashionable hour, dressed in our best, and listen to sermon and ritual, although public worship is evidence of fealty to the creed. We may pray, fast, kiss the scroll of the law, wear phylacteries as large as a cobel stone, and be regular at service, and yet the soul may be the reverse of religious. To be religious is to be, not to appear; to act, not to feel; to translate into life prayer and symbol that our susceptibilities and powers awaken to a fresher and a richer bloom. With humility in our hearts, with kindness in our thoughts, with consciousness of our dependence on a common father, we shall be approaching the religious ideal.

Fiction.

By the last annual report of the libraries of the public library of Cincinnati, says The Student, it appears that the number of books of fiction and juveniles taken out was very nearly 210,000, as against 178,248 of all other books. This is stated to be an improvement, as against fiction, over the return for the previous year. There is room, nevertheless, for a far greater reversal of the figures. There is clearly good reason why friends should keep bright their testimony against the untruthful and sensational in literature. Nevertheless, the demand for, and the supply of, works of fiction continue ever increasing. This is pointedly illustrated by the fact that during the year 1889 there were issued twenty-six serial "libraries," comprising 1,551 volumes, only sixty-nine of which were not novels.

What kind of growth can we expect in persons fed upon such trash as this? What will a person know whose early life is spent reading lies by the volume? How much nerve and strength and moral stamina can be looked for in persons who have been nourished on such food as this? No wonder that great writers like Ruskin, or reformers like Francis Willard are thankful that in early life they were not allowed to waste their time over this kind of sickly trash. Happy would it be for others if they could be brought back from a world of fancy to this world of facts, and prepared for the realities of life which await them.—Safeguard.

A Call.

Brethren in Harper, Sumner, Elk, and adjoining counties in the State of Kansas, what say you with regard to a conference this coming fall. Let us hear from you all through THE RESTITUTION when and where to be held. Yours in hope and love to all.

J. S. MILLER.
J. A. MOYER.

There will be a social meeting of the brethren of the Abrahamic faith during the Iowa State Fair, which will be held the last week in August and the first week in September, at Lovey Station, on the C., B. & Q. R. R. and the Winterset branch of the R. I. R. R., five miles southeast of DesMoines. Those coming on the C., B. & Q. get off at Lovey and enquire for P. Fisher. Those coming on the R. I. get off at Avon Junction. Come one and all and let us have a good meeting. You can get half rates to the State Fair and come to meeting Sunday if no more. Those having tents bring them. There will be provision made for all the brethren.

J. H. STEVENS.

In taking up the September Wide Awake, both the juveniles and the elders will turn at once to Mr. Ward's Andover serial; the chapters in this issue ought to be read in every college in the land. C. E. Garland has a capital story in this number, "The Last Baseball of the Season." Preston Lee Otis gives a strong story, too, of Southern life, entitled "Rijane." "My Friend, Ah Ging," a San Francisco story by G. Adams, will interest the boys. "The Quest of the Whipping-Boy" ends in this number. "Four Fire-Buckets," by Mary Bolles Branch, is a good lesson for officious little girls. An amusing "Tragedy in Three Scenes," entitled "She did not go to Cooking-School," by Miss Pollok, the teacher of cooking classes in Washington, will be sure to be in demand for entertainments. There are several unusually fine illustrated papers in the number: "Helen's Tower," describing Lord Dufferin's beautiful devotion to his mother; "Capturing a Sea-Cow," by Dr. Hard; and "An Obscure Hero," by Edith M. Degen, giving an account of Mr. Hadley's work for the Indians. Mrs. White's "Business" paper for young women, Mrs. Claflin's "Margaret-Patty Letter" on street-car behavior, Mrs. Humphrey's charming article about "The English Cowslip," Mrs. Leonowen's anecdote paper about "The Little Hohenzollerns," with its beautiful picture, Helen North's unique directions for "Summer Evening Diversions"—the "Cobweb Party" will be popular — Miss McLeod's dramatic Acadian tale, and the original anecdotes and short talks in "Men and Things" complete the prose miscellany. The poems are by Mrs. Thomas Sargent Perry, Mrs. Clara Doty Bates and Ellen V. Talbot; the number includes also a beautiful "Motion Song," words and music both by Mrs. Ormiston Chant, and an amusing Pak-Wodjie chapter, "The Cone Dance." Wide Awake is $2.40 a year. D. Lothrop Company, Publishers, Boston, Mass.

Conference Notice.

The Annual Conference of the Church of God for the Northwest will convene at Scholls' Ferry, Oregon, on Friday, Oct. 17, 1890, and will hold over the following Sunday.

If those attending wishing conveyance will notify us they will be met with teams at Portland.

When the nobleman returns from the far country, his servants are judged and rewarded according to the use they make of the talents that had been given them accord to their several ability. May it not be brethren, that in these meetings and the good work growing out from them that each and all of us may find opportunity to invest our "talent" so that our Lord when he returns may receive his own with usury?

Our evangelist, Bro. Skeels has been the means in the Lord's hands of doing much good and bringing joy to many hearts by preaching the glad tidings of the kingdom of God the past years; and if an additional evangelist can be kept in the field the coming years and many more made glad by hearing the truth as it is Christ Jesus, will not the effort to do as we would be done by be pleasing in the sight of our Heavenly Father?

WALTER W. JAQUITH, Sec.

Conference Notice.

The Annual Conference of the Church of God in Indiana will be held this year at Argos, Marshall Co. Commencing at 10 o'clock a. m. Friday, Aug. 29, 1890, and holding over Sunday following.

All lovers of the truth in Indiana are invited, and friends from other states are assured that a welcome awaits them at this meeting. Let the attendance be full. Much important business should be attended to at this meeting. Argos is easily reached by rail, and the wagon roads all lead to Argos. A letter from Bro. Wm. Railsback says "we hope to have a good attendance at this meeting." Do not disappoint the friends there, but all make an effort and be at this gathering.

A. R. UNDERWOOD, Sec.

Nebraska State Conference.

The Fifth Annual Conference of the Church of God for the State of Nebraska will be held in Judge Allen's grove, ten miles northwest of Cambridge, commencing on Friday, Sept. 19, 1890, and continue in session ten days.

This grove is situated on the Medicine Creek and is one of the finest in this part of the State. Two springs of pure water are adjacent to the grounds and hay will be provided for those coming from a distance.

Those coming by rail should stop off at Cambridge; notify Bro. J. W. Gamble, Bartley, Neb., at least two weeks before the meeting, who will provide means of conveyance to the grounds.

We urge every church in the State who possibly can, to send delegates to this meeting.

There is a great work to be done in this State and if we put our shoulders to the wheel and work together in love and unity, great good will be the result. We are aware that crops are very short in this as well as in other States on account of drought, but no one should stay at home on this account. What little we can do for the cause of truth if done in the right spirit will be just as acceptable to God in times of famine as in times of plenty. Therefore we say again, come. Come with hearts full of love to God and for one another and let the object of the meeting be to do good.

ALMUS ADAMS, Pres.
J. J. CADY, Sec.

The National Encampment Sons of Veterans will commence Aug. 24th at St. Joseph, Mo., and continue three days. Low rates via the Pennsylvania lines, good returning until Sept. 1st.

FAITH.

Amid the storm the sea-bird sings,
  No less assured than in the calm;
So faith in trial spreads her wings,
  And lifts to heaven her trusting psalm.

Her eye, more keen than reason's ken,
  Can penetrate the stormy clouds;
Her vision, sharpest, strongest, when
  The deepest darkness weaves its shrouds.

She learns the mind of God, and sees
  Beyond the fleeting, trying hour;
She leans upon divine decrees,
  Exultant in their sovereign power.

She bids opposing seas divide,
  And onward leads o'er desert sands;
She guides our feet through death's cold tide
  Dry-shod, to reach the promised land.

She sees the city walls above,
  The Zion where all glories wait,
And rises, on her wings of love,
  To pass, with songs, the pearly gate.

AIDS TO SPIRITUAL GROWTH.

We have all seen men and women who are crippled, some in their legs, some in their feet, and some in other parts. Physically they are deformed, and their walk or gait is unpleasant to look upon. We pity them, and ought to be thankful that our own limbs are all right. But are there no spiritual cripples? Are there none in the church who are deformed? Are there none who are unhealthy, and whose character is lacking symmetry and beauty? Are there none whose walk is inconsistent with truth and holiness? There are some who have a sour disposition, or a crooked temper; there are others who have an unbridled or a backbiting tongue; and there are others whose actions are not square and straight according to Scripture rule. Now of all cripples, spiritual cripples are the most to be pitied. Spiritual lameness is far worse than physical lameness. No matter how correct a man's belief may be, if he does not live up to his belief, his moral and spiritual condition is all the worse for his belief. Of what use is orthodoxy in a man's creed, if there is heresy in his life? Truth in the head, truth in the heart, and truth in the life are needed to make a man a thorough Christian.

But just as we do not believe that God has ordained one man to eternal life and another to eternal death, irrespective of their conduct, so among Christians, God has not ordained that one shall be hale and strong, and another sickly and weak, irrespective of their efforts in the divine life. God would like to have all his children, all his sons and daughters strong in truth and grace, and going on towards completeness or perfectness in the Christian life and character. But to attain this end, the means must be used. The use of means is not less necessary for growth in the Christian life, than for growth in the physical life. The mind and the spirit must be nourished as well as the body.

To secure this nourishment, a careful reading and study of the Scriptures is necessary. The word of truth is the soul's food, the soul's strength, the soul's guide, and the soul's consolation; but it requires to be diligently sought for. We do not obtain it by a formal or a careless reading. We get it only as a result of serious and unwearied study, which requires the improvement of our spare hours. How earnest and diligent students, especially persons who long to know the mind of the Holy Spirit in the word, prize their time, while to many, who have no special object in life, time is a burden and hangs heavily upon them. To us who love the Word, and desire to understand it, and use it in building up our character, it seems as if a long life would be insufficient to enable us to learn a tithe of what the Scriptures are able to teach us.

The hearing of the Word preached is a means not to be dispensed with, for in this way we frequently get new light and become more fully instructed in the things of God. The generality of hearers do not take pains enough to understand the gospel. When it is heard and not understood, the enemy comes and snatches away that which has been sown in the heart. Temporary emotion or excitement is not enough; there must be enlightenment. The darkness must be expelled from men's minds; the true light must be made to enter; a knowledge of Jesus, as our righteousness and sanctification, must be received.

Nor is prayer less needful. Indeed, the reading of the word, and the listening to expositions of it, can only aid spiritual growth as these exercises are accompanied with prayer. It is the neglect of this that makes so many weak and puny Christians. Strong Christians, specially gigantic Christians, have always been men and women of mighty prayer. Individual Christians are weak, preachers are weak, official men are weak, churches are weak because prayer is partially neglected. Closet exercises are hurried over, and this lack of fellowship with God is allowed to continue through months and years till many degenerate and backslide.

But the unrest, the sense of want, the aching void that follows this neglect of prayer, often leads to the adoption of various prescribed forms of worship, as if the multiplication of religious rites and observances would make up for the loss of spirituality. And how many there are in the churches today who are losing the little spirituality they have by so much attention to ritualism, grasping at the shadow and letting go the substance. The following of mere external observances, rudiments and human traditions, ecclesiasticism and orthodoxy, and losing sight of the new birth and true worship, will be found to be a great mistake.

But in attending to the duty of prayer, it will be found greatly to aid Christian growth, to take to Jesus all our daily trials, and sorrows, and disappointments. A Christian is often tested more by the little trials of every day life, than by great trials that occur occasionally; and where these cause fretting and petulance, there is evidence of some carnality, and spiritual growth is checked. But when some things go wrong with us; when our cherished and, as we think, well laid plans fail us; when some whom we regarded as our friends, forsake us; when our labors in the cause of truth seem unsuccessful, let us not brood over these things and get discouraged, but look at once to Jesus. He can hold us up, and by his word, bid us go forward, working and trusting in him, and doing all to glorify him. Oh, the sorrows and disappointments we should escape, if we took every trial to Jesus, and left it with him.

Faith is an essential condition of spiritual growth. This is so necessary that even prayer without faith will be ineffectual. The Word read and studied, or the preached word listened to, and approved, simply as a duty, or to gratify the intellect, will not save. Faith must be united both with reading and hearing the Gospel, but only when it is heard with a sincere desire to profit thereby. There must be the willing mind and the obedient heart.

The more frequent study of Scripture promises would tend to an increase of faith. We pray, we pray much, we multiply words, but how often are the things we ask withheld, because our faith is weak, and fails to claim them. Would not a careful study of the precious promises remedy this? Could we ponder them without receiving a fuller assurance that God would honor his word? Our prayers should measure up to the promises, and our faith should humbly claim what God has promised to give. All our misgivings should be set at rest in view of the word of him who cannot lie. Satan is ever watching his opportunity to insinuate doubts, but let us be as watchful always to repel them. The strength of our spiritual state, of our inner man, will depend upon our faith.

If we have great faith in ourselves, in our abilities or in our goodness, our faith in the Christ will be small in proportion. For the more our attention is centered upon ourselves, the less it is centered upon the Christ, and this will necessarily weaken our faith. Lowliness of heart, humility of spirit, is necessary to high thoughts of Jesus; and high thoughts of Jesus must precede great faith in him as our Savior.

We can only become great men—great men in the best sense of the word—by having great faith; such faith is the foundation of spiritual greatness. If our faith is little, we shall have little spirituality, and the things of the world will easily engross our attention, and lead away our minds from God.

SILAS HEMM.

Concluded in our next.

"Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God: because many false prophets are gone out into the world."

I believe this means that we should not believe every teacher who goes out to teach and boasts of the spirit, but we should try them by the word of God. If their teaching does not agree with the word then we are not to believe in them. Now Jesus tells us in his sermon on the mount, "that many will come in that day and say to me, Have we not prophesied in thy name, and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto you, I never knew you, depart from me ye that work iniquity." He never knew them as one of his disciples, but as false prophets gone out into the world.

Notwithstanding the beauty and harmony of God's word, and the plainness and simplicity of its teaching, there exists such a combination of views among men, that are contrary one to the other, that many are led almost to hate to hear a person talk on any Bible subject. How men do differ, yet the Bible is so plain. Take for instance the subject of baptism. Some say there are three modes of using the water. Others will say water baptism is not essential if we only have the baptism of the Holy Ghost. Now is this Bible? Where in the Bible do we find three different ways to administer this ordinance? Where in the Bible does it say that water baptism is not required of those that believe? If we should believe in infant baptism we would have to believe that belief should come after baptism, as we know that an infant is not capable or does not have the ability to believe or disbelieve. The Bible says "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Yet men ignore this and teach baptism before repentance. Peter says, Repent and be baptized every one of you. Acts ii. 38. Again he says, Repent ye therefore and be converted that your sins may be blotted out. This could not apply to children before they knew good from evil.

How are we to decide on such questions as are always coming up and not even the learned agree about them? "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life." We should not take the theology of men. One has said, "the Bible is God's book of theology." A true saying, and whatever does not correspond with the Bible is of man and not of God. If Jesus was our pattern why should we not do as he did. "And Jesus when he was baptized went up straightway out of the water." Man says that John baptized by the river Jordan; the Bible says John baptised in it. Matt. iii. 16. Philip and the eunuch both went down into the water. Acts viii. 38. Many such texts can be found. But where can you find texts for sprinkling, or one for baptizing infants?

This subject and others of great importance are difficult to talk on with some people, because of long standing religious opinion and practice. But when we talk with a person on questions that we differ on, we should not approach him or her with an air of importance and egotism. It is not Christian, it is not Christ-like. We would do more hurt than good; more likely to drive them off or make them hug their delusion closer. But we should talk with humility, manifesting the spirit of Christ, for if we have not his spirit we are none of his. May we as a people seek a closer walk with God that we may have more of the wisdom and meekness of the Master. O that more had the mind of Christ! Then there would not be so many mistakes made. We must not get discouraged if others are slow to receive the gospel. We should remember that we fought the ground over step by step ourselves because of our early religious training. May God forgive us because it was through ignorance that we did it. And so I say, "Try the spirits whether they be of God, because many false prophets are even now in the world." Yours in the blessed hope,

MRS. ALMIRA BROOKS.

The struggle for supremacy with the breeders of live stock, and manufacturers of agricultural machinery, and contests for prizes in all that pertains to agricultural pursuits, will be the event of the season. The Indiana State Fair has a national reputation, and is noted for its leading features, which will be amply sustained in the forthcoming exhibition, commencing September 22d, as set forth in the premium list, furnished on application to the Secretary at Indianapolis.

Several thousand dollars in increased premiums and improvements, including a new Floral Hall, and four new horse barns, improved water facilities and rapid transportation, gives indication of the efforts of the management to insure success.

TAKE NOTICE OF THIS.

REDUCED TO $1.50.

The price of THE RESTITUTION has been reduced to $1.50. This makes it necessary to do as nearly as possible a CASH business.

This reduction is made at the solicitation of many friends who have thought the price too high—not that they could not pay it—but in asking others to take the paper they were met with the objection of the high price. We confidently hope now the reduction is made that all our patrons will make an effort and try and increase our list to at least double what it is. Let each one now taking it get one more subscriber and this is accomplished. If you are interested in THE RESTITUTION, work for it a little now. If there is any family in your church that is not visited by it, urge them to try it for 1890.

The short margin, owing to the reduced price, will allow nothing to enable us to keep open accounts. If you pay promptly we can do the same, and live at peace with all men. Some will plead that they can pay better some months in the future than now. We do not wish to doubt your word, and do not, but you must remember we are totally unacquainted with you, and while we might if we personally knew you be willing to trust you, we are not ABLE FINANCIALLY to carry your account. We therefore suggest that you borrow the $1.50 from some friend at home, and that will shift the burden of your account to some one else. Thus the load will be distributed to many instead of put on one, and will be much easier borne.

The poor, those who from age or infirmities, are totally unable to pay for their paper, we will still do as we have always done, send it free. To enable us to do this we depend largely on the voluntary donations of our kind friends, those who are interested, and fully alive, working all the time and with their means in the Master's vineyard. Their reward is sure, and the blessings of the aged and infirm, to whom they have sent papers and tracts, will be no mean recommendation in the last day.

Chautauqua Lake.

Take the Nickel Plate to this popular and famous resort, a lake of crystal water, high up among the hills of south-western New York, whose sandy shores and wooded promontories present one continuous panoramic scene of unrivaled beauty and grandeur; where bathing is unexcelled and boating and fishing are an unbounded success.

The well known popularity of Chautauqua Lake, its acknowledged pre-eminence is sufficient to induce all who can arrange to do so, to spend some portion of this season along its shady retreats and enjoy the healthful atmosphere of this altitude of between 1,400 and 1,500 feet above sea level.

No other summer resort has enjoyed such distinction, and this season's programme promises to be the most successful ever arranged, and bids fair to eclipse all previous efforts.

The history of this famous resort is familiar to all and the influence of the Non-sectarian Religious and Educational Societies is being felt from ocean to ocean.

Elegant hotel accommodations at moderate rates as well as board in private families, can be procured at rates to suit every one. The special arrangements made by the Nickel Plate with its sure connections at Brocton Junction, going and returning, will enable Niagara Falls excursionists to also visit this world renowned place without additional expense. 24 t 7.

The L. E. & W. R. R. will run its annual patriotic excursion to the National Soldiers' Home, Dayton, Ohio, and to Cincinnati, on Wednesday, August 27th, 1890. Tickets good for six days. Fare for round the trip only $3.50. Remember that the Soldiers' Home at Dayton is the finest in the world and an excursion to this Home is especially gratifying to old soldiers and their friends, thousands of whom go each year to see its wonderful attractions. Parties wishing to visit friends and relatives at Rushville, Connersville, Liberty, College Corner, Oxford, Hamilton, Dayton, Xenia, Cincinnati and elsewhere, can do so cheaply by going on this excursion. Remember the date and tell everybody. Train leaves Plymouth 6:46 a. m.

SUCCESS IN LIFE.

And besides this giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity. For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall be neither barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ," 2 Pet. i. 5-8.

If a person's success extends no further than making an ample provision for the flesh he makes a miserable failure. See Rev. iii. 17, "Because thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked."

The above is our Savior's estimate of those who attain great riches in this life, but are not rich in faith. Yes, they may attain riches to the extent that they "have need of nothing," and yet at the same time are "wretched and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked."

A very rich man's life is not one of contentment, as his mind, both by day and night, is constantly harrassed with care, anxiety and fear. And again, if he is aware of the fact that he has sacrificed by his conduct the honor, riches and glory to be attained in the ages to come, is he not of a truth, in a most wretched and miserable condition of mind? and at the same time is "poor, and blind, and naked."

He is poor because he has not bought the pure gold Jesus has to dispose of. "I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire that thou mayest be rich." The "gold tried in the fire," which Jesus offers is the riches of faith; yes, the grand old "faith of the gospel," "the faith once delivered to the saints." In that divine message there is untold riches, with an eternity of existence in which to enjoy them. He who fails to secure these riches makes a wretched failure of life. Dear brethren, I pray "that the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ." 1 Pet. i. 7.

"I counsel thee to buy of me.... white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear." "He that overcometh the same shall be clothed in white raiment, and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before the holy angels." "Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him; for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready. And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints." Lord, where can we purchase this white raiment called "the righteousness of saints," that we may buy and be clothed? See Phil. iii. 8, 9: "I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ, and be found in him, not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith." See also Rom. x. 6, 7, 8; "But the righteousness which is of faith speaketh on this wise, say not in thine heart who shall ascend up into heaven? (that is to bring Christ down from above;) or, who shall descend into the deep? (that is to bring up Christ again from the dead.) But what saith it? the word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart; that is the word of faith which we preach." The white raiment or righteousness of saints, we find is attained through the faith of Christ, or "the word of faith which we preach," otherwise known as the oath-given promises made unto Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and David, or the gospel of the kingdom preached by Jesus and his disciples.

The Lord counseled to buy gold of him and be rich; to buy raiment, and be clothed; the next point was the remedy for blindness. "Anoint thine eyes with eyesalve, that thou mayst see." The only eyesalve that can open the eyes of the blind, is an implicit ever-abiding, childlike faith that can take God at his word, and follow wherever it directs.

The blind get lost, for the reason they cannot see. And there is no one so completely blind as the man who is so "increased with goods," that he does not know that he is miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked.

"But if our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost: in whom the God of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God should shine unto them." 2 Cor. iv. 3, 4. "The light of the glorious gospel of Christ," is as effectually hid from the ecclesiastically blind, as the worlling whose eyes are blinded by his riches. "For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine: (the gospel of the kingdom as preached by Christ and his followers) but after their own lusts shall heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, (the word of the truth of the gospel,) and shall be turned unto fables." "But in vain do they worship me teaching for doctrines the commandments of men.. Let them alone: they be blind leaders of the blind. And if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch." "Having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their heart."

Think of it, "alienated from the life of God" through "ignorance." Ignorance of what? Why simply the "Word of life." God's sons are instructed to "shine as lights in the world; holding forth the word of life." What is "the word of life?" See 1 Tim. i. 10. But is now made manifest by the appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ who hath abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature, he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." See also Eph. ii. 11. 12, "Remembering, that ye being in the time past Gentiles in the flesh,....that at that time being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world." The "word of life," then is the gospel. And Paul calls these "covenants of promise," the gospel. And truly, what a poor miserable destitute condition the "strangers from the covenants of promise" are in, "having no hope, and without God in the world."

What think you? Do these Scriptures sound like Advent Universalism? "having no hope, without God in the world," "alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them." Be not deceived by ear-tickling preachers. Truly we are living in times that try men's fidelity to "the word." Let us "henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about by every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness; but speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ."

Success in life is predicated entirely upon securing an interest in the covenants of promise, for all others have neither God or hope. Remove God and hope from the life of a person; pray tell me what is left upon which success may be built. And the sacred Scriptures solemnly affirm that none are heirs according to the promise unless they belong to Christ. See Gal. iii. 29.

"And if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." As to who have put on Christ, see Gal. iii. 27, "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." Mortals can also attain the Divine life by means of these blessed promises. See 1 Pet. i. 4, "Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises; that by these ye might be partakers of the Divine nature."

See Isa. lv. 3, "Incline your ear, and come unto me; hear, and your soul shall live; and I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David."

Thine oath and promise mighty God,
Recorded in thy word,
Become our hope's foundation broad,
And surety us afford.

Like Abraham the friend of God,
Thy faithfulness we prove;
We tread in paths the fathers trod,
Blest with thy light and love.

"Darkness is past, and the true light now shineth."

WM. H. WILSON.

Did the Writer of the Letter to the Hebrews Believe in the Pre-existence of Christ?

Who wrote the letter to the Hebrews? We do not know. It is supposed that Paul wrote it. But whether he wrote it or not it is a masterly work and was written in the apostolic age. Whoever reads it carefully must be impressed with the idea that the author understood his subject. One object he had in view was to prove the superiority of the New Covenant to the Old, and so lessen the veneration of his brethren for the law and strengthen their faith in the gospel.

In order to prove the superiority of the gospel to the law he proves the superiority of Christ through whom the gospel was spoken, to the angels through whose ministry the law was given, and then says, "Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip. For if the word spoken by angels was sure and steadfast and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward, how shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation which began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him." Chap. ii. 1-3. In the beginning of the letter he says, "God having anciently spoken to the fathers by the prophets in the last of these days spoke to us by a Son whom he appointed heir of all things, on account of whom also he constituted the ages." He calls the Messiah a Son of God. Now if he believed that this Son was "begotten before all worlds," he must have believed that God spoke through him in ancient times as well as in modern times; and that the law was given through him. But the words just quoted imply that in ancient times God did not speak through him. He spoke anciently through the prophets. If Christ existed anciently as a person distinct from the Father, his office is expressed by the title, "The Word;" and so he must have been the one through whom God communicated his will to his intelligent creatures. But if the law had been given through the Son of God as well as the gospel, the argument of this writer to prove the superiority of the Christ over the angels, and on that account the obligation of his brethren to give the gospel "the more earnest heed," because first preached by the Lord Jesus, would be a failure. The argument, then, supposes that the Christ had nothing to do with the giving of the law.

Keep in mind that this writer undertakes to prove the superiority of the Christ to the angels. Now suppose that it was generally understood and believed by the Christians of his time that the Son of God existed before all things and created all things; then of course it would be understood that he created the angels. And it would be superfluous to undertake to prove the superiority of the Son of God to beings whom he created. Or, had it been a fact not generally known that the Son of God was "begotten before all worlds" (Athanasian creed), and this writer had wished to make it known, he would have proceeded in a very different way from what he did. He would not have quoted from the second Psalm, "Thou art my Son, this day I have begotten thee," for that was said with reference to a begettal in time, not before time began. He would not have quoted from the covenant God made with David, "I will be to him a father, and he shall be to me a son," for that was a promise that the seed of David should be God's Son, and was no proof that the Son of God was begotten in eternity before all worlds, but rather proof against it. He would not have said, "When he bringeth again the first begotten into the inhabited earth, he saith, And let all the angels of God worship him," quoting from the 97th Psalm, for that is a prophecy yet unfulfilled, and comes far short of proving that the Messiah was begotten before the earth had an existence. He would not have quoted from the 45th Psalm, for according to that Psalm the "throne" is to be given to the "King" because [illegible] loved righteousness and hated lawlessness and the throne belongs to the future age. He would not have quoted from the 110th Psalm, "Sit thou on my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool," for that is a prophecy fulfilled after the resurrection from the dead. It may be said he could not be David's Lord unless he pre-existed. I answer, he is David's Lord because he is God's Son. He was raised from the dead that he might be Lord both of the dead and of the living. Rom. xiv. 9.

But why have I omitted the quotation from the 102nd Psalm? It may be considered as being of itself sufficient to prove the pre-existence and Deity of Christ. To which I answer yes, if it really applies to Christ. It may be said this writer applies it to Christ; and from the connection in which the quotation stands it would appear so. But for several reasons I think he could not have meant to apply it to Christ, but brought it in incidentally as showing the greatness of the Father of the Christ.

1. If we turn to the 102nd Psalm and read it, we find that the words quoted, "Thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth," etc., were addressed by the Psalmist to God. We will read the 23d, 24th and 25th verses in connection. "He weakened my strength in the way; he shortened my days. I said, O my God, take me not away in the midst of my days: thy years are throughout all generations. Of old hast thou laid the foundation of the earth: and the heavens are the work of thy hands." Clearly in the 24th verse the Psalmist addresses God, in the words, "O my God take me not away in the midst of my days: thy years are throughout all generations." The words immediately following are a continuation of the subject of the eternity of God's existence introduced by the words, "Thy years are throughout all generations." The main thought is that though the earth should grow old, and the heavens pass away, yet he who created them will continue to exist, and will exist forever. Can there be any doubt that this language was addressed to God? Observe: the Psalmist was the speaker, God was the person spoken to; now can the words, "Of old hast thou laid the foundation of the earth, etc.," be understood as addressed to the Christ? It may be said that it is a Messianic Psalm. Granted. Then the Psalmist represents the Messiah, and the Messiah must be understood as addressing God; for the Messiah is talking about his sufferings, if it is a Messianic Psalm, as it appears to be. And so the ellipsis in Heb. i. 10, may be thus supplied: "And (the Son responds) thou, Lord," etc. There is undoubtedly an ellipsis between the words "and" and "thou" in Heb. i. 10.

2. The words quoted from that Psalm if applied to Christ prove too much for the writer's purpose in quoting them, which was, if they were not brought in incidentally to show the greatness of the Father of Christ, to prove the superiority of the exalted Jesus as the Son of God over the angels. If the words were addressed to the Christ they prove him to be verily and truly God, the writer to the Hebrews himself being witness. He says further along in the letter, iii. 4, "He that built all things is God." He who laid the foundation of the earth and created the heavens undoubtedly built all things, and is therefore God. Now, did the writer believe that the Christ was God, the builder of all things, and yet the Son of God in human flesh begotten; that he died, was buried, was raised from the dead, taken up to heaven and seated at God's right hand? Let the Trinitarians think so if they will. I have a better opinion of this writer than to think that he believed any such absurdities. This writer believed that Christ died, really and truly, his very blood being shed on the cross. There is no doubt about that. How could he believe this of a being who existed in eternity before creation, and actually created all things? How can you believe it, my brethren? How can I. "This orthodoxy" is too "tremendous" for me.

3. The work of laying the foundation of the earth was, according to the uniform testimony of the Hebrew Scriptures, the work of Jehovah. See Psa. lxxxix. 11; xxiv. 1, 2; civ. 1-5. The writer to the Hebrews quotes the 4th verse of the 104th Psalm. See Heb. i. 7; Psa. cxxxvi. 6 9; Job xxxviii. 4; Prov. viii. 29; Neh. ix. 6. Isaiah is very emphatic on this subject. Isa. xlv. 18, "Thus saith the Lord (Jehovah) that created the heavens; God himself that formed the earth and made it; he hath established it, he created it not in vain, he made it to be inhabited: I am Jehovah and there is none else." Now according to this, Jehovah himself says that there is no God beside him, no other Jehovah; and that he himself created the heavens and earth. Probably the writer of the letter to the Hebrews had read this declaration of Jehovah. Now if he thought that "the Son of God" created the heavens and earth he must have thought that he was Jehovah absolutely, or else that Jehovah consisted of two persons. Which was it? We will examine this question in our next.

J. W. NILES.

Sowing and Reaping.

They that sow in tears shall reap in joy. He that goeth forth and weepeth bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him. Psa. cxxvi. 5, 6. For they that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh, but they that are after the Spirit, the things of the Spirit. For to be carnally minded is death, but to be spiritually minded is life and peace. Rom. viii. 5, 6. Be not deceived; God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting. And let us not be weary in well doing; for in due season we shall reap if we faint not. Galatians vi. 7-9.

Here is the statement of the apostle Paul, a man chosen by Christ to go and proclaim the gospel, he says be not deceived. We may deceive our selves, and we may deceive others, but God cannot be deceived.

Brother, Sister, how have you sown in the last year? Let us ask our own selves each day, and each week, how much have I sown to the Spirit? and count up and see if it has not been nearly all to the flesh. Let us count up and see how much good we have done for the cause of God in the last year? Have we spent any time or money for the good cause? Have not some spent more for tobacco in the last year than for the gospel of Christ? Have we not gone after the pleasures of the world more than we have gone to meeting? Let us weigh these things candidly, for God will weigh us in the great day of reckoning. Has not the flesh had the sway? Count it up for one day, one month, one year, and see how the account stands. We had better settle these things now, for they will be settled in the final judgment. How stands our account now? Let us awake from our sleep, as Paul says, Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ will give thee light.

If we have left our first love, let us repent and do our first works, or Christ will remove our candlestick, except we repent. Iniquity now abounds, and the love of many is waxing cold. These are perilous times. The prophet Isaiah says, Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread, and your labor for that which satisfieth not? How much money there is spent for things that are not only no benefit, but an injury to our health, and how much good there could be done with the money spent by professed Christians for things that are hurtful to them, if it could all be turned to a good account. How many more could be blessed with the gospel.

Paul says, Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy; that they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate. Laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life.

Good works, says Paul, and every good deed we do for our friends about us, having the glory of God in view, is laying up in store a good foundation against the time to come. We will be rewarded at the resurrection of the just.

Paul says, as ye have opportunity, do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith. There are so many places we can find to do good; let us hunt them up. We can help to cheer the dear ones on in their struggle in the Christian life. Our dear Lord and Master went about hunting up the poor, the maimed, the halt, and the blind.

Dear Lord, may we all try and pattern after thee in all things. My dear brethren, let us all strive to do good in the world. Dan. xii. 3, And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever. We want to strive to turn some at least to righteousness.

Dear brethren, let us be careful as to what kind of seed we sow in this life. I fear there are many of those who profess to be the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus, are not careful enough about the seed they are sowing. The harvest will come soon. I know of many among us who are in the habit of going to the polls and voting with one or other of the old political parties, and whose votes help to perpetuate the drink traffic. Take care, brother, hands off. keep thyself pure. Paul says, let no man put a stumbling block, or an occasion to fall in his brother's way.

Take care, brother, hands off. That is some of the sowing to the flesh—what is the harvest? Reap corruption. If you can't cast your vote for the good of humanity, stand clear. Let Cesar run his government, and let us work for God.

J. S. HATCH.

Jerusalem and Its People.

"If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning." Psa. cxxxvii. 5.

ITS SORROW.

O, Jerusalem! Jerusalem!! the beautiful city, the pride of thy people, the joy of their heart, the place where thy God delighteth to dwell. O, "how has the gold become dim; how is the most fine gold changed: the stones of the sanctuary are poured out on the top of every street. The precious sons of Zion, comparable to fine gold, how are they esteemed as earthen pitchers, the work of the hand of the potter?" "The crown has fallen from our head: Woe unto us, that we have sinned! for this our heart is faint; for these things our eyes are dim." "How hath the Lord covered the daughter of Zion with a cloud." "Thy holy cities are a wilderness, Zion is a wilderness, Jerusalem a desolation. Our holy and our beautiful house, where our fathers praised thee, is burned up with fire: and all our pleasant things are laid waste."

The sons of Zion are hushed, the melodious harp hangs mute upon the weeping willow's bough.

O, Jerusalem; hadst thou but known the day of thy visitation; "Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for me, but weep for yourselves and your children."

O city of God, thy sun didst set midst storm and cloud, the grandeur of thy magnificent temple and goodly buildings is departed, thine heritage is left unto thee desolate. "Her gates are sunk into the ground; he hath destroyed and broken her bars; her King and her princes are among the Gentiles; the law is no more; her prophets also find no vision from the Lord." Oh, holy city, thou hast become a derision to the scoffer, "All that pass by clap their hands at thee; they hiss and wag their hands at the daughter of Jerusalem, saying, is this the city that men call the perfection of beauty? the joy of the whole earth?" Thy sons also in exile have drunk the cup of sorrow to the very dregs. Their centuries of banishment in the land of the enemy has been so bitter, they find no ease, neither rest for the soles of their feet, and with trembling heart and sorrow of mind they wander to and fro as captives in a strange land.

SHALL SING FOR JOY.

Sing O heavens; and be joyful, O earth; and break forth into singing, O mountains; for the Lord hath comforted his people, and will have mercy upon his afflicted. But Zion said, the Lord hath forsaken me, and my Lord hath forgotten me. Can a woman forget her suckling child, that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb? Yea, she may forget, yet will I not forget thee. Behold, I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands; thy walls are continually before me."

"Awake, awake; put on thy strength, O Zion, put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem, the holy city."

"Break forth into joy, sing together, ye waste places of Jerusalem."

"Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee."

O, Jerusalem, who hast drunk the cup of fury, no more shall hostile armies invaded thy fair domain; no more shall the alien carry captive thy beloved sons; no more shall the Gentile dog polute thy sacred temple. But thou shalt arise from the dust, clothe thyself in beauteous garments, the voice of weeping and sad lamentation shall no more be heard in thee. Beloved City, thy God loves thee, he has graven thee upon the palms of his hands, he will create thee a rejoicing, and thy people a joy. Peace shall from henceforth be within thy walls, and prosperity within thy palaces. Oh, pray for the peace of Jerusalem, for they shall prosper that love thee, the city of solemnities, the holy city of God. O, children of Zion, take down thine harp from the weeping willow's bough, and with the voice of melody break forth into joy, for the Lord hath spoken comfortably to his people.

"Blest land of Judea, thrice hallowed by song,
When holiest memories pilgrim-like throng.
In the shade of thy palms, by the shores of thy sea,
On the hills of thy beauty, my heart is with thee."

"Make a joyful noise unto God, all ye lands; sing forth the honor of his name: make his praise glorious."

WM. H. WILSON.

Many years ago there died in the city of Hanover a young countess of pronounced infidel proclivities. She denied the doctrine of the resurrection in toto, and perhaps in a vain effort to defy any supernatural power that she thought might have a possible existence, she ordered that her body should be laid beneath a solid and, in her judgment, an impregnable structure. Her wishes were strictly carried out, and there seemed a reasonable expectation that the pile would remain intact for many generations at least, and the bones of the skeptical countess rest in the oblivion she desired. But it was strangely ordered otherwise. A tiny seed shared the woman's resting place, and in its resurrection might burst its shell, sent its roots into the ground, and slowly gathering strength and proportions with the years, wrenched open its prison doors, severed in twain the massive granite slabs, and, having reached the light, spread itself heavenward, until it has become a great tree.

There is somewhere on our coast a fountain within high water mark on the seashore. Twice a day the tide spreads over it and the pure, sweet water is defiled and spoiled by the salt, bitter wave. But the tide goes down and once more the fountain washes itself clear from defilement. As that troubled sea goes down once more the fountain gushes pure and sweet beneath pure, sweet heavens. This is the emblem of a life that is in daily conflict with the world and with adverse circumstances. Again and again it is overpowered by those perplexed circumstances and tumultuous voices, but then all subside, and the soul is left alone with God.—Frederick Arnold.

THE RESTITUTION

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

STOCKHOLDERS MEETING.

The Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Christian Publishing Association will be held at Plymouth, Ind., on Saturday, Nov. 8, 1890, (as per Articles of Association) for the purpose of electing a Board of Directors, and for the transaction of such business as may come before the meeting.

J. H. Willey, Pres.
A. R. Underwood, Sec.

THERE is a report that King Alexander of Servia, and his father were fired at Sunday while out riding.

RECENTLY Dr. Henry Schliemann wrote to Prince Bismark from Troy, telling of his excavations there. His progress is slow on account of the amount of earth on the ruins. He has seventy men and three engines at work. The doctor says the art treasures which he will give to the new museum of Trojan antiquities at Berlin, are of great value and beauty.

MORE trouble is again reported in Armenia. The Russian Government has 72,000 troops on the Armenian frontier, and Turkey is supplying the Kurds with arms, and assisting in the work of resistance. Russia has also largely increased her guards on the boundaries of Austria, Prussia and Turkey. The suppression of smugglers is the reason assigned for this activity.

BROTHER J. S. Hatch, writing under date of Sept. 29, says that during the two years he has been in northern Illinois that he has preached in Illinois, Iowa and Wisconsin almost the entire time, and has immersed forty persons. He is soon to leave Lenark for Paris, Ill., to visit a short time with his daughters, after which he will go to Memphis, Tenn. His address will be Paris, Ill., till Nov. 15, and after that [illegible]t Memphis, Tenn.

IN Turkey we see many signs indi[illegible]ting that soon other nations must [illegible]terfere with the affairs of the Sick [illegible]an. The Armenian Patriarch has [illegible]signed on a pretext of ill health, [illegible]d the president of his councils have [illegible]so resigned. There has been a bat[illegible]e in the Armenian center of Van, [illegible]d several scores of Turks and Ar[illegible]nians were killed. The outlook for [illegible]rkey is very serious, and a further [illegible]rtailment of Turkish authority is not far off.

BROTHER J. B. Craton gives in this paper his view of the time of the coming of the Lord. He seems to almost definitely state time, and yet not exactly. He says it is "more than possible, it is probable." We think he is a little wrong in his idea of why our Lord gave the command to "watch." He says "Why watch if we cannot discern anything new?" Now if we read correctly the reason is given very differently, and is, "Watch," why? "for" because or for this reason "ye know not what hour your Lord doth come." And "be ye also ready," because or for this reason, "in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh." This condition of waiting and watching can hardly be a searching for something new; but rather a careful noting of the signs that are described as marking the event near at hand, and a guarding of our own hearts, that we keep in a constant state of preparedness to receive with gladness the Master when he gives the summons at our door. Whether the banding together of men in different organizations as we see them now can be said to be a binding of the tares into bundles is a question we will not pass upon, each one may give that as much credence as they choose; but certain it is that the different classes of people throughout the world are banding together in companies, with the avowed purpose of self-protection, and they are ready at any cost to fight for their so-called rights. The consequence is the slightest "friction" may kindle the mass into flames, and the result is fearful to contemplate. "Except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved," is the Divine conclusion. It is possible that the Lord may call to his own before seven months of time. It is also possible for the trumpet to sound before seven days shall pass. A careful student of prophecy can see no good reason for delay longer. Surely the world is about as bad as it can get, and even the Church—the Bride—is weary with watching. Brother, Sister, if you are not fully prepared, hasten, O hasten! May be like the lightning's flash he will come—tonight.

THE Czar of Russia must indeed lead a queer and unpleasant life if all reports are true. From this distance it looks as every attempted train wrecking in the empire was magnified into an effort to kill the ruler. This time the conspirators planned to wreck a train on which it was supposed the Czar intended traveling from St. Petersburg to Warsaw. "An obstruction was placed upon the track in the shape of five sleepers, which were tightly wedged in between the rails. The train which was supposed to be carrying the Czar crashed into the barricade and was thrown from the track. No details of the outrage have been obtained, and it is not known whether any arrests have been made in connection with the affair."

A RECENT daily paper contains the following concerning another "triple alliance":

"The Paris Gaulois declares upon what it calls undoubted authority that an alliance is about to be concluded by England, France and Russia, for the purpose of counteracting the alliance of the central Powers of Europe, and achieving a means of maintaining the balance of power, which seems to be threatened by the renewal of the compact of Germany, Austria, and Italy, which has been boldly and somewhat aggressively agreed to by the Prime Ministers of those countries. If this be true it will dash the hope which Kaiser Wilhelm has entertained of drawing England into the triple alliance, and the rumored idea of making it worth while for France to withdraw from her understanding with the St. Petersburg government."

We do not place much stress upon rumors of alliances between England and Russia, and if this understanding really exists it is only that each nation sees in it a chance to get a little better ready for the struggle that will come soon between those two great powers. And right in connection with this preparation comes the following report of England tightening her hold on that important strategic point—the Suez Canal:

"The English Government has purchased a large building at Port Said, and is converting it into a barrack fortress, which will soon be occupied by British troops. This will give England possession of both ends of the Suez Canal."

WILL JESUS COME AGAIN?

Faith looks upward; hope looks onward. Whatever meaning we may put on the prophetic event introduced in the Scriptures as our Lord's second coming, we notice that it is frequently specified as a hope. And as hope implies expectation, the church should wear the onward look. The believer should be an expectant.

Hope is an antipode of despair. It has a definite object in view, and as that object is perceived at hand or remotely, the soul is swayed to deliverance or discouragement. The blessed hope and appearing in glory of our Lord Jesus Christ should not be relegated to the regions of mystery or mysticism. How can it be a hope of any value, if it be some uncertain, indefinite, mystic and far-away and nonessential theory which happened to drop into the Bible? In fifty-three places where hope is referred to in the divine word, it has special relation to future blessings which are to crown the Christian believer at the appearing of Jesus Christ. A few of these we might examine.

It is a blessed hope. Titus ii. 13. Looking for the blessed hope and appearing of the glory of our great God and Savior Jesus Christ. A blessed hope means a happy one. The word refers to inward enjoyment apart from external environment. The expectations implied in such a hope make all present circumstances of trial or depression "not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed to us. For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God." Rom. xviii. 18.

It is a purifying hope. "And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure." As linen bleaches under the sun, the light of this hope cleanses the life from world-stains. It loosens the grasp from things of earth. The man who has a magnificent home in some beautiful locality, and is only tarrying in a city hotel for a few days till he can journey home, will not care to spend time and money and thought in elaborately decorating that itinerant lodgings in the strange city. He may buy beautiful articles of ornament, but his intention will be to take them home. So the Christian, who reckons himself a "pilgrim and stranger" here, will have little heart to spend his energies on things pertaining to the merely earthly. His city and his home lie beyond. His great concern will be to "lay up treasures in heaven." Col. iii 1, 4. It is a pacifying hope. Therefore judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will "make manifest the counsels of the hearts; and then shall every man have praise of God." 1 Cor. iv. 5.

"Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord, Behold the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain. Be ye also patient; 'stablish your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." James v. 7, 8. In the power of this hope all questions of provocation can be patiently laid aside for the Lord to settle on his arrival. The child of God who is pervaded with this hope will be willing to waive all rights of self vindication; knowing that his "labor of love and patience of hope" will not go unrewarded. 1 Thess. i. 3. It is a comforting hope. "But I would not have you to be ignorant brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not even as others which have no hope." 1 Thess. iv. 13. The lustre of this hope shines most conspicuously in the consolation it brings to those who are called to part with their loved ones by death. The unbelieving bury their dead without any certain or definite expectation of reunion. For in no other so-called sacred book but the Bible is the truth of a resurrection even hinted at. But the Scriptures do definitely promise this. "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." 1 Thess. iv. 14. The apostle Paul, after explaining all this to the Thessalonian Christians, and showing them the immense advantage they had over the heathen who believed nothing about the return in majesty of Jesus Christ, adds finally, "Wherefore comfort one another with these words." It is a glorious hope. "For our conversation is in heaven: from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ: who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself." Phil. iv. 20, 21. "By faith Abraham, when he was tried, offered up Isaac: and he that received the promises offered up his only begotten son, of whom it was said, that in Isaac shall thy seed be called: accounting that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead; from whence also he received him in a figure....Women received their dead raised to life again: and others were tortured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection." Heb. xi. 17, 19, 35. This hope would be meaningless apart from the locality and the circumstances where it anchors itself. It leaps over time and space to the period when Jesus Christ shall himself be glorified as King of kings according to the eternal purpose of God. It embraces several promised facts.

We shall be with Christ. Not as at death when we are said to be "unclothed," and "waiting to be clothed upon with our house from heaven." 2 Cor. v. 1–3. In an actual sense we shall see him as he is," and be ourselves like him personally and morally. We shall be beyond sinning. Now we groan for deliverance. Pain and the curse encompasses us. The consummation of that hope will bring full redemption to the body. Rom. viii. 23, 28. We shall know as we are known. "Now we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face: Now I know in part; but then shall I know as I am known." 1 Cor. xiii. 12. What joy to have the hope of one day being masters of all knowledge; to understand the mysteries of science; the marvels of astronomy; the secrets of nature, and the profound depths of the soul.

THE CHRISTIAN ATTITUDE.

1. We are to be looking for it. Titus ii. 13. That is, expecting it with desire.

2. We are to be hastening it. 2 Peter iii. 12. That is urging on its consummation by our attitude of personal faithfulness toward all that it involves.

3. Loving it. If we love the seed of Abraham, if we love the burdened brute creatures, if we love the heathen Gentile nations, who know nothing of a Savior, we shall joyfully anticipate this hope. For it is the hope that shall bring to the Jew his Messiah; to the creature his emancipation from man's exacting dominion; to dumb creation her freedom from thorns and thistles; to the heathen idolater a knowledge of the true and living God; and to the waiting Bride the personal presence of the heavenly Bridegroom. —George O. Nelson, in Christian Herald.

Speak for God.

I have yet to speak on God's behalf. Job xxxvi. 2.

We ought not to court publicity for our virtue, or notoriety for our zeal, but at the same time it is a sin to be always seeking to hide that which God has bestowed upon us for the good of others. A Christian is not to be a village in a valley, but a city set on a hill. He is not to be a candle under a bushel, but a candle in a candlestick, giving light to all.

Retirement may be lovely in its season, and to hide one's self is doubtless modest, but the hiding of Christ in us can never be justified, and the keeping back of truth which is precious to ourselves is a sin against others and an offence against God. If you are of a nervous temperament and of retiring disposition, take care that you do not too much indulge this trembling propensity, lest you should be useless to the church. Seek in the name of him who was not ashamed of you, to do some little violence to your feelings, and tell to others what Christ has told to you. If thou canst not speak with the trumpet tongue, use the still small voice. If the pulpit must not be thy tribune, if the press may not carry on its wings thy words, yet say with Peter and John, "Silver and gold have I none, but such as I have give I unto thee." By Sychar's well talk to the Samaritan woman, if thou canst not on the mountain preach a sermon; utter the praises of Jesus in the house, if not in the temple; in the field if not in the exchange; in the midst of thine own household, if thou canst not in the midst of the great family of men.

From the hidden springs within let sweetly flowing rivulets of testimony flow forth, giving drink to every passer-by. Hide not thy talent; trade with it, and thou shalt bring in good interest to thy Lord and Master. To speak for God will be refreshing to ourselves, cheering to saints, useful to sinners, and honoring to the Savior. Dumb children are an affliction to their parents. Lord, unloose all thy children's tongues. "Open thou my lips, and my mouth shall show forth thy praise."—Spurgeon.

THE WONDERFUL WORK IN ITALY.

I have recently had an opportunity of witnessing the present deeply interesting condition of Italy. There is a great drama being enacted in that land under the eyes of the present generation, to which the German or English reformation, three centuries ago, alone can afford a parallel. Oppressed for many ages by the tyranny of the Roman church, maddened by her cruel exactions, demoralized by her superstitions, the Italian people at length rose against their oppressor. The temporal power of the Pope was overthrown, United Italy emerged from the troubled waters, and the wonderful spectacle of a great nation struggling out into civil and religious liberty was presented to the gaze of the world.

Long centuries of papal rule had produced its inevitable results. With the finest climate in the world and a fertile soil, Italy had sunk to the deepest poverty, and her working classes to the most degraded condition. Can we wonder the nation burst asunder the fetters in which they were bound, and revolted from the power enthroned at the Vatican, to which they rightly attributed their wretched condition? Of the thirty-three millions of the population of the country, twenty-two millions have cast off forever their allegiance to the church of Rome, and since the overthrow of the Pope's temporal power, they have made wonderful advances, on the right hand and on the left, towards true freedom, civil and religious.

As it was in England three centuries ago, so the land of Italy was devoured by innumerable confraternities as by a plague of locusts, and one of the first steps in Italy, as in England, was to suppress the monasteries, which in both lands were hot-beds of vice and corruption. This was a heavy blow at the Papacy, but it was followed by one still more severe in the passing of the Penal Code, which enacts that "if any minister of religion by preaching, or by writing, or by conversation, or in confession, speaks against the king or the unity of Italy, or disturbs the minds or consciences of the people, he shall be liable to fine, imprisonment, and dismissal from office."

As may readily be understood, there was much need for this stringent law, and it has not been allowed to lie idle; many priests, including two bishops, have been arraigned and punished for offenses against its provisions.

But perhaps the greatest blow to the influence of the church has been the bill now before the Senate. In the course of ages large sums had been left for charitable uses, amounting now to upwards of a hundred millions sterling. This was administered by the bishops and clergy, and various confraternities, and a large portion of the revenue was absorbed by them for their own benefit. A bill was introduced by the Italian Government to take the administration of this vast fund from clerical hands, to change some of the appropriations of the revenue, and to place it in the hands of a commission for each district, from which the parish priest was to be excluded. This bill passed the Lower House by an overwhelming majority, and will doubtless soon become the law of the land.

It is impossible to avoid mentioning these steps in the great work of Italian emancipation, although they appear to be as much of a political as of a religious character; but as it was in our own and in the German Reformation, politics and religion are inextricably bound up together, and we must consider the whole aspect of the events in order to see their real drift.

But we may ask what has religion gained by these successive steps? I reply that now at length we may truly say of Italy, "The word of God is not bound." Protestant ministers are now as free to preach the gospel in Italy as in England or Scotland. When I was in Rome sixteen years ago, I was obliged to go outside the Porta del Popolo on Sunday to a place of worship in a hired room; up to that time no "heretical" church had been permitted within the "sacred city." Now there are twelve Protestant churches within the walls, besides a large number of mission halls where the gospel is preached.

The work among the soldiers by Signor Capellini is very remarkable. From small beginnings it has grown to be a great and important movement; the enlightened king Humbert has encouraged the work by his sanction and approval (the many converts, who are constantly, after their short term of service, returning to their native villages, are gradually filling Italy with earnest and decided evangelists. I had the pleasure of being present at one of Signor Capellini's Sunday evening meetings in Rome; the hall was crowded with soldiers; Major Whittle and Rev. Dr. Pierson, of Philadelphia, who were in Rome at the time, addressed them, through an interpreter, and were listened to with profound attention; and the singing of Sankey's hymns in their own mellifluous language, to tunes so familiar to us in this country, seemed to be a link which united us all in a common bond of Christian brotherhood. — St. Louis Christian Advocate.

Influence of the Pulpit.

All the conditions of life in this country have changed greatly in the last thirty years. But they have only intensified the necessity of certain influences in the work of the ministry in order that it should be effective. These influences are as simple as they are powerful. They are connected with the fulfilment of certain obvious duties. Let all our clergymen, in the country as well as in the town, fully realise that faithful, regular, unwearied, intelligent devotion to their house-to-house work will make a personal relation that not only adds force to every word of preaching, but also gives them the foundation on which they build well for time and eternity.

The experience of generations, and of hundreds of leaders in the work of saving men, teaches us beyond question, that for the mass of those called to be ministers of the gospel, there is no other way of being spiritually useful. "Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest," said the Master.

Not mere sermon-makers, essay-writers, cultured gentlemen, but actual laborers, ten times more effective because they are acquainted with the learning of the schools, and know the thoughts of the wise of all ages. But above all else, let them be laborers, and God will bless their labor in making this land radiant with prosperous, powerful churches, as the night is glorious with countless stars.—Christian Herald.

Discussion.

The Lord willing, there will be a four days discussion, at or near Marathon, Ia. Oct. 8 to 16, on each of the following questions:

About Jonah and the Whale.

"Doctor," said a Tribune reporter yesterday to a city minister, "is there not a natural explanation of the whale's swallowing of Jonah?"

"Yes. In the first place there is nothing in the Hebrew to show that it was what we call a whale. The word translated into both the Septuagint and the New Testament by the Greek 'Katos' means simply a sea monster; and this word was the one used by our Lord in his reference to this account of Jonah. Matt. xii. 39-41. So far, therefore, as the Hebrew or Greek words are concerned the fish may have been a whale, a shark, a sea serpent, or any other large monster of the deep. Hence, there is nothing incredible in the statement that Jonah, upon being thrown into the sea, was quickly overtaken by a sea monster and swallowed without suffering any mutilation, providing the monster was large enough. It is well known that the waters through which a vessel in sailing from Joppa to any Spanish port must pass were frequented, in early times, by a species of shark called sea dog, having a throat large enough to swallow a man whole. The French naturalist, Lacepede, in his 'Histoire des Poissons,' states that sea-dogs have a lower jaw of nearly six feet in semicircular extent; which enables us to understand how they can swallow entire animals as large or larger than ourselves. Blumenbach, the German zoologist, in his 'Manual of Natural History,' is authority for the additional facts that sea-dogs have been taken weighing five tons, and that a horse has been found whole in the stomach of a sea dog. And Pliny, 50 A. D., gives an account of the skeleton of a sea monster forty feet long, whose ribs were higher than those of an Indian elephant. The skeleton, Pliny says, 'was brought from Joppa, a city of Judea, and exhibited in Rome by M. Scaurus.'"—Salt Lake Tribune.

The story of Jonah and the whale has become a frequent joke in the mouth of the infidel scoffer. Even a class of men who call themselves scientists say it is an impossible story of the Bible on account of it being a physical impossibility for a whale to swallow a man. The above explanation in Salt Lake Tribune I believe to be a very good answer to those men who profess to be so wise, and yet they are very ignorant in matters pertaining to the Scriptures.

Sometimes professed Christians when they hear something they discredit, call it a "big fish story," thoughtlessly perhaps joining the scoffer in throwing discredit upon this story of the Bible. No one can disbelieve this narrative without denying Jesus Christ because he endorsed it as being true. See Matt. xii. 39, 40, "An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign, and there shall no sign be given to it, but the sign of the prophet Jonas: for as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly (sea monster, R. V.) so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." Read Jonah i. 17, and everything will be made plain. "Now the Lord prepared a great fish to swallow up Jonah. And Jonah was in the belly of the fish three days and three nights." The fact that it was a fish "prepared" by the Lord himself to swallow up Jonah settles every difficulty.

Jews Going to Palestine.

A convention of the delegates representing the largest Jewish colonies in thirty-six different cities of Russia met ten months ago, and after a long discussion they gave a unanimous vote for Palestine as their future home.

The change that such an emigration would produce on the Holy Land cannot be overestimated. One million new workers would turn the barren hills of Judea into terraced vineyards. The olive trees of the past would again spring forth, and the whole land would blossom like the red poppies that cover the plains of Sharon. It would mean the adding of 150 per cent. to the population of the land occupied by ancient Palestine, and it would make Jerusalem a city of more than 100,000 people.

The Holy City has been growing with almost American rapidity within the past few years, and an exodus of the Jews from all parts of the world to it is slowly but surely going on.—Frank G. Carpenter, in National Tribune.

People Who are not Soul-Winners.

The husband who blows up his wife before the children because she happens to get too much saleratus in the biscuit.

The mother who can talk by the hour about the dresses and bonnets of her neighbors, but can't say a word to her little ones about the love of Christ.

The Sabbath-school teacher who doesn't know enough about the lesson to ask questions without reading them from the lesson paper.

The woman who talks about heaven in church, and about her neighbors on the street.

The young lady who hands wine to callers.

The sectarian who never has a good word for any other denomination.

The man who rings a bell every time he puts a dime in the contribution box.

The man who never goes near the church on lodge night.

The man who blows a tin horn and shouts himself hoarse during a campaign, but is down on anything like excitement in religion.

The woman who knows in her heart that she is wrong, but is too proud to own up to it.—The Ram's Horn.

In this lukewarm age, when there is cause for the gravest concern, too many Christians are at ease respecting their spiritual condition. Consecration to God—not mere profession—is what is needed. These are "perilous times." The dividing line between the church and the world is so imperceptibly drawn that it is hardly to be discerned, and in this lies the chief temptation to the Christian. He who keeps to the Bible standard of Christian piety will be "peculiar," indeed, not only to an unbelieving world, but to many who count themselves among Christ's followers. So imperceptible is the distinction between the world and a worldly church, that the two seem to have no difficulty in walking together; mingling in secular societies and worldly amusements, as well as participating in all the flippant conversations that consider only earthly things: the business of money getting and spending; fashion in dress and decoration; the lust of the eye and the pride of life. It is a great thing "to know Jesus Christ and him crucified;" it is the acme of Christian perfection "not to know anything save Jesus Christ and him crucified." Life, lips, hands, feet, voice, will, love—all consecrated to his service; living, speaking, moving, singing, willing and loving for the glory of the blessed Master; it is a great thing. Are we there? "Let us press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."—R. J. S., in Herald of Life.

The praise of men gratifies. When legitimately gained it is worth having. It is recorded of the first church that it "had favor with all the people," and Paul tells of "the brother whose praise is in the gospel throughout all the churches." Paul, however, indicates that the approbation of God is the grand desideratum. So he writes that "circumcision is that of the heart, in the spirit, and not in the letter; whose praise is not of men, but of God." God looks at the heart, and where faith is seen working out in love and hope and humility there his approving smile will be manifest. If the world does not appreciate the graces of the Spirit, they have the praise of God.—Christian Inquirer.

WE most sincerely hope that those friends whom we have trusted, at their solicitation, and whose promise to pay has been in our hands for some time, will at once redeem these pledges by renewing their subscriptions. It is quite an expense to make out statements of these accounts, and the postage is a big item. The price of our paper is lowered this year, and every little leak is felt. Please give us no more anxiety on this score, but renew at once.

IS LIFE WORTH LIVING?

Is life worth living? Yes, so long
As there is wrong to right,
Wail of the weak against the strong,
Or tyranny to fight;
Long as there lingers gloom to chase,
Or streaming tears to dry,
One kindred woe, one sorrowing face,
That smiles as we draw nigh;
Long as a tale of anguish swells
The heart and lids grow wet,
And at the sound of Christmas bells
We pardon and forget;
So long as Faith with Freedom reigns,
And loyal Hope survives,
And gracious Charity remains
To leaven lowly lives;
While there is one untrodden track
For intellect or Will,
And men are free to think and act,
Life is worth living still.

A little sin is worse for our peace than a great sorrow.

Many parents are very careful about the company their children keep, but know not what books they read. Bad literature is corrupting many a young heart, and sowing the seeds of crime. A bad book is as the pestilence that walketh in darkness.

DO NOT STAND AND DREAD IT.

A task will never grow smaller or lighter by sitting and lamenting that it must be done, and here is an old maxim that teaches that "a thing begun is half done." The following illustrates that "he doubles a task who dreads to do it."

A farmer friend of mine has a boy of fourteen years, named Billie, who is like a good many other boys of my acquaintance. His heart is heavy and a cloud immediately overspreads his mental horizon when he is asked to make himself useful.

"Billie," said Mr. H——— one day, when I was out to the farm, "why don't you go to work on that little patch of potatoes?"

"Aw," whined Billie, "there's so many of them taters I'll never get them hoed."

"You won't if you don't begin very soon."

"I hate to begin."

"How are you ever going to do the work if you don't begin?"

"Well, I'll begin pretty soon."

His father walked away, and then I heard Billie exclaim, in a tone indicating great distress:

"Plague take them old taters! It makes me just sick to think about them."

"Why think about them, then?" I said, laughingly.

"I've got to" he replied, dolefully, with a sorrowful shake of the head. "I've been thinking of them ever since I got up."

"How long will it really take to hoe them?"

"At least an hour."

"And you have been distressed about it ever since you got up?"

"Well, I hate to hoe taters."

"And you've been up a little over five hours?"

"Well, I—I—I," Bill began to grin, took up his hoe, "I never thought of that."

Those potatoes were hoed in forty minutes.

PRISMATIC FOUNTAIN.

There is in Lincoln Park, Chicago, an electrically illuminated fountain. Perhaps some of our boys and girls would like to know how it is constructed, and we will copy what the Stationary Engineer says about it.

Numerous jets of water are projected skyward to varying heights, and are kept continually changing, rising and falling irregularly, breaking and splashing, falling in sheets and breaking into spray while being illuminated with various colors that are continually changing, the effect produced suggesting the idea of shattered rainbows caught by a whirlwind. At times some of the jets leap fully 100 feet into the air, blowing for a time, while the falling drops sparkle in the vari-colored lights with the brilliancy of gems of the purest water.

At one instant the streams will be blended in a manner that suggests an iceberg, sparkling with its frosty crystals under the beams of white light, then instantly changing to a beautiful emerald or deep crimson. At other times the colors change so rapidly that the mind becomes weary in the effort to recall the names. For an hour the display continues ever-varying, never the same for longer than a few seconds, barely sufficient to allow the mind to obtain the impression, not long enough to permit one to realize the real beauty of the scene.

How is this all produced? Simply enough. Below the reservoir which receives the water from the fountains is a room about thirty feet square, having a cement floor, while the ceiling is but seven feet above. A long, narrow tunnel leads to this, and on one side are arranged numerous valves and pipes for supplying and controlling the water that forms the jets. Around the sides of the room and through the center are numerous arc lamps, placed in a horizontal position, and fitted with silvered reflectors. Above the lamps cylindrical tubes 18 inches or more in diameter that lead above the surface of the water in the reservoir. Near the bottom of the reservoir the pipes that furnish the water are laid, leading into the large tubes so that the jets and streams spout up from their mouths. A thick plate of glass in the tubes prevents the water from entering the room below.

Beneath each of the tubes is a lamp, the concentrated rays being projected through the glass plate. Between the lamps and tubes are frame works carrying slides which contain large panes of different colored glass. Men stationed in different parts of the room keep changing the slides that produce the colors in the water. The valves, which are of the lever type, are changed continually by men stationed there for that particular purpose. There are fifteen arc lamps in the room, each under a separate tube. These lamps use five-eighths inch carbons and are connected up in series. They are adjustable by hand, but require very little attention to keep them in operation.

JOHN'S APOCALYPSE.

Chapter v.

1. And I saw in the right hand of the one seated upon the throne a book (or scroll) written within and without, sealed with seven seals.

2. And I saw a strong angel heralding with a loud voice, Who is worthy to open the book and loose the seals thereof?

3. And no one could open the book in the heavens nor upon the earth nor beneath the earth; nor look at it.

4. And I lamented much because no one was found worthy to open the book nor to look at it.

5. And one of the elders saith unto me, Lament not, lo the lion of the tribe of Juda, the root of David, hath prevailed to open the book and loose the seven seals thereof.

6. And I saw in the midst of the throne and the four living creatures and in the midst of the elders a lamb standing, slain as it were, having seven horns and seven eyes which are the seven spirits of God sent forth into all the earth.

7. And he came and took from the right hand of the one seated upon the throne,

8. And when he had taken the book, the four living creatures and the twenty-four elders fell down before the Lamb, each one having a cithera and golden libation cups full of incense offerings which are the votive prayers of the saints.

9. And they sing a new ode saying, Worthy art thou to take the book and open the seals thereof, because thou wast slain and hast procured us for God with thy blood (that is in exchange) from every tribe and tongue and royal people and nation.

10. And hast made them a royalty and priests for our God; and they will reign as kings upon the earth.

11. And I saw and heard a voice of many angels round about the throne and the living creatures and the elders; and the number of them was myriads of myriads and thousands of thousands;

12) Saying with a loud (or great) voice, Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to take the ability and riches and wisdom and strength and honor and glory and blessing.

13. And every colony (or colonized place) in the heavens and upon the earth and the ones in the sea and all things in them heard I saying: To the one who sitteth upon the throne and unto the Lamb be the blessing and the honor and the glory and the controlling power for the ages of the ages.

14. And the four living creatures said, Amen. And the elders fell down and did homage.

COMMENT.

The "book" or parchment scroll here pictured as in the right hand of God, as I understand it, is "the sealed book of prophecy" referred to in various places in the Old Covenant Scriptures in this specific way, that is as being "sealed." For instance in Dan. viii. 26, "The seven seals" simply denotes that it is fully or completely sealed to merely mortal apprehension. "Written within and without" signifies that all prophecy has an exoteric and esoteric meaning. The exoteric meaning appeals to the ordinary sanctified common sense of right, while the esoteric meaning is only to be reached with profounder research and greater spiritual insight. The one par excellence who is found "worthy to open the book" and "loose the seals" becomes "the Revelator" and this is just what the Christ was and is through "the Sanctified (or Holy) Spirit." So we have him now introduced by the appellation which indicates to us how he became "worthy" to become this Revelator, namely, as "The Lamb of God" and as "slain" that is as "the sacrificial lamb." The merit of the sacrifice is that which makes him "worthy." "The seven horns and seven eyes" indicates the completeness of his offensive and defensive power to act and the completeness of his spiritual vision so far as all that pertains to this earth is concerned, being "sent forth into all the earth."

His coming and taking the book, etc., indicates that although slain, he "has been made alive again." The homage of the cherubim and the twenty-four elders is the homage of the whole intelligent creation and its authoritative subordination to him.

"The cithera" is the appropriate accompaniment to the oracular ode (see David's Psalms).

The "golden libation cups full of incense offerings which are the votive prayers of the saints" makes this thought still clearer as this is the appropriate symbolic offering to the "Head of the church." Then the subject matter of the Ode is the appropriate "Praise-offering" from the Church of which he has become the "Head." The whole closing with the appropriate "amen" or affirmation of all that has thus been made subject. Observe that the one known as "the Lamb" is pronounced "worthy to take the ability and riches and wisdom and strength and honor and glory and blessing." Observe also whom he takes it from and keep in mind the true relationship of the two persons here spoken of.

Again observe in the ascription of praise the force of the word "colony" (translated "created thing" in the C. V. and R. V.) as well as "all things in them." The first term as I understand it refers to intelligent beings or "the animate creation," while the latter refers to "the inanimate things," matter and the constitution of things according to law now so constituted and directed and controlled as to work out God's praise and glory, sin and its consequences as a disturbing factor having been eliminated. In other words, "He whose right it is to rule" has taken his great power and asserted it preliminary to a "new heavens and a new earth" which is a later scene in this dramatic picture.

Dear Restitution:

I want to tell you what good times we are having here in Nebraska. To begin at the first: We sent for Brother Almus Adams and he came about Dec. 18, and held a meeting of nearly three weeks, which resulted in taking several members from the Christian Church. Then he came again last May and baptized six, and organized a church of eight members.

At this time the Christian church began to see their craft going down, therefore they sent for their biggest gun, Marion Boles, of Lincoln, to meet Bro. Adams at this place commencing July 22, to discuss two of the points of difference, namely, The nature of man, and the kingdom. First question three nights of three hours each; 2d on Friday, three sessions of three hours each.

The sessions were long but the audience did not seem to tire. So successfully did Bro. Adams wield the sword, that although three other of their preachers were helping Mr. Boles by tipping notes to him, yet he dodged every way for life and got himself into innumerable traps and pits. He is a very intelligent man, said to be highly educated, but he could not stand before the word of God. Bro. Adams laid his foundations so broad and deep that they could not be shaken by them. His arguments were so strong and so pointed that they could not be met.

The Christian church claim Boles as their best debater in this state, boasting of his learning, but when he quoted his Greek he misconstrued it so as to mislead the people, but when Adams showed them what he had done, and proved his points so plain, it let him and his whole craft down.

Mr. Stark, one of his helps, could not stand it to see his colleague so crushed by such an overwhelming array of positive testimony. It made him sick, and he went home after the first session of the second proposition. Then Boles became much alarmed, and tried to get the U. B. preacher to take his place, but he rushed on telling him that he had got himself into it, and he must now get out the best way he could.

Brother Adams challenged their entire fraternity, but I think he has had his last fight with them. Thus ended the controversy, leaving a lasting impression upon the minds of the people, which will no doubt result in much good.

Editor Restitution:

It has been in my mind for some weeks to write a letter, in order that the brethren and sisters might know what we are doing for the cause of the Master in this far away place.

In the first place, I may say that we organized a little over a year ago with but six resident members and two visiting brethren, namely, Bro. George W. Young, of Brooklyn, and Bro. Robert Young, of Tuckahoe, N. Y.

We have met every first day at the houses of one or the other, and now number eighteen members, besides a number of friends who meet with us quite regularly, some of whom are becoming interested in the truth, and whom we hope will become obedient to it ere long.

The city has grown wonderfully, and as might be expected, most of our growth in numbers has been by reason of brethren coming from a distance, but on Friday, Sept. 19, it was the duty and pleasure of Elder L. C. Cattell to immerse one, a young man, on profession of his faith in the all-saving name of Jesus the Christ.

Our little band are trying to arrange matters so that we can have a church building for our meetings, as we find it difficult to get an attendance of outside friends at a private house. To this end we have taken steps to be incorporated under the State laws, in order to hold property, and have received a donation of a lot to build upon.

The name we have selected is "The Church of the Blessed Hope of West Seattle, Wash." for we cherish that same "blessed hope" which Paul was looking for—the glorious appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. These things we try to speak and exhort, and to live soberly and righteously in this present world.

We are having a good attendance and receive much benefit from our Wednesday evening Bible Class, at which we use the Bible Lesson Quarterly, which we consider a very useful help. With Christian love and greetings to all of like precious faith every where, we remain, Yours in the Blessed Hope.

CHAS. A. GOSS, Sec.

Report of Fairfield Sunday School, Arapahoe, Neb.

When we organized our Sunday School in May, it was decided by the school to close our social meetings and give all our attention to the Sunday School until September, when we would again resume our social meetings.

On account of our Conference coming on the two last Sundays of September, we closed on the 14th inst. with a concert, which was well attended. The music and speaking were both excellent, as well as being appropriate.

We close our school feeling that we all have been greatly benefitted; all was brotherly love and harmony during the whole time. The Secretary's report shows that the school was organized May 11, with J. J. Cady Superintendent, and A. F. Harlan Assistant, A. H. Mulford Treasurer, and the writer Secretary. Number of scholars in attendance 55; average attendance 39. Collection $7.63; expenses $5.45, amount in treasury $2.18, which it was decided to expend in tracts to distribute among the brethren who are unable to obtain them.

As a school we desire to thank Bro. Eychaner for the Bible Lesson Quarterly, which we feel has been a great help to us in studying the blessed truths of the Bible.

DORA HARLAN, Sec.

Paul's feelings were sorely hurt when beaten with many stripes, yet he suffered, patiently. Peter and John were sorely hurt when they were unjustly imprisoned for preaching the gospel, yet they rejoiced that they were counted worthy to suffer for his name's sake. Stephen's feelings were hurt when he was stoned, yet he prayed, "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge." And one greater than all was humiliated in mock trial and a crucifixion between two thieves, and he prayed, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do. Be Christ-like, and pray that the offenses against you may not be laid to their charge. Learn to suffer a little for Christ's sake. Under no circumstances allow your injured feelings to provoke you into saying hard things or bearing resentful feelings, or in neglecting a known duty to preacher, church or Sunday school.

TEMPERANCE.

JUST TAKE A DROP.

A drop? One drop of wine or beer?
It isn't much to take.
If it would only stay a drop,
It would no trouble make.

One drop! If that indeed were all
I'd ever wish to drink,
Surely it would not, could not cause
My heart in woe to sink.

But here's the trouble; one small drop
Quick to another leads;
Then to a third, and on and on
The appetite each feeds.

The first drop cries, "'Tis not enough;"
The second "Give me more;"
The third says "I must have a glass;
My thirst is sharp and sore."

Each one tastes better; each one makes Me thirstier than I was,
And so a drunkard I become—
That first wee drop the cause.

There's only one thing I can do
Before the first to stop,
And say "I'll not a drunkard be,
So I'll not touch a drop."
—Temp. Banner.

Intoxicants are Satan's kindling-wood.

Lord Brougham called drink-selling an "infernal traffic." Gladstone declared it to be productive of greater evils than the combined scourges of war, famine and pestilence. Wesley called the money received in exchange for drink "blood-money."

An ordinary keg of beer costs two dollars, and usually about one hundred and ten glasses can be drawn from it. At five cents each this would produce five dollars and fifty cents, which would seem to be quite a reasonable profit for the saloon-keeper— Temp. Banner.

RAILROADS FOR TEMPERANCE.

The People of Scranton, says, "All the officials in the various departments along the Jersey Central Railroad have been notified by the company that hereafter employes must abstain from the use of intoxicating liquors while on or off duty, and if seen entering saloons, either during or after working hours, they will be discharged. The order created a decided sensation among the employes and saloons along the road that have heretofore received the most patronage among railroad men. The Central in issuing the order has only followed the lead of the Philadelphia and Reading and other railroads. Working men are learning that it pays to be total abstainers in more ways than one."

THE SALOON POWER.

Government by rumsellers is well discussed in a late number of Forum, by Dr. Howard Crosby. There is no doubt that most of our cities are now ruled by the saloon, and that this baneful power has a strong hold upon legislatures. The freedom of our institutions, as well as the morality of our people is threatened by the saloon in politics. Dr. Crosby well says, "It is no slander to say that the saloon is the resort of idlers, loafers and roughs. Any one who has eyes may see who go in and out of the saloon, and who stand at its portals."

He draws a sad picture of the evil influence of the saloon upon the families, and says, "Were all the right-minded electors to vote according to conscience, and not according to party, the rum power would be suppressed at once." This, he claims, is the most important question now before the people. His article ought to have a wide reading.

BEER DRINKERS.

The use of beer is found to produce a species of degeneration of all the organs; profound and deceptive fatty deposits, diminished circulation, conditions of congestion and perversion of functional activities, local inflammation of both the liver and kidneys, are constantly present.

In appearance the beer drinker may be the picture of health, but in reality he is the least capable of resisting disease. A slight injury, a severe cold, or a shock to the body or mind, will provoke acute disease ending fatally. Compared with inebriates who use different kinds of alcohol, he is more incurable and more generally diseased. The constant use of beer every day gives the system no recuperation, but steadily lowers the vital forces.

There can be no distinction made in favor of beer as against other forms of rum. In point of fact, the diseased conditions of body and mind which are the self-imposed fate of the beer drunkards are worse, if that is possible, than those which make the penalty of the whisky drinker.

Certainly the effect upon the mind and moral nature are worse, for the mental faculties are blunted, while the moral side is hopelessly perverted.—Toledo Blade.

Poetry.

(Selected by M. J. Mansfield.)

ON THE HILLS OF JUDEA.

Where is the morning brighter,
 Where is the air more bland,
Where do the stars glow whiter,
 Than over this lonely land?
Slopes that are brown and barren,
 Scarce show a spear-green sod,
But wait for another Aaron,
 And the blow of his quickening rod.

Never a wild voice quavers,
 Never a song-bird trills;
Only the warm light wavers
 Over the desolate hills.
Plodding, the pilgrim passes,
 Patient, the shepherds go,
Seeking the tender grasses
 Far in the vales below.

Shade there is nowhere growing
 Wide as the eye can sweep;
Founts there are nowhere flowing
 Down from the rocky steeps.
Only the vulture veering
 High like a wind-blown weft,
Only the poppy peering
 Out from the ragged cleft.

Once there were orchards teeming,
 Once there were pastures fair,
Once there were vineyards gleaming
 Green in the golden air.
Now there is desolation;
 Then there was bounty; then
Flourished a haughty nation
 Strong with its million men.

How is its prowess shattered!
 Dust are its priests and kings;
The sons of its sons are scattered
 Like seeds on the swift wind's wings.
Their doom is a whole world's scorning,
 Yet where is the soul but thrills
Beholding the light of morning
 On the broad Judean hills!

Communications.

Behold, the Bridegroom Cometh, Go ye out to Meet Him.

"Come my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee; hide thyself, as it were, for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast. For behold, the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity; the earth also shall disclose her blood, and shall no more cover her slain. Isa. xxvi. 20, 21.

Where are the chambers? and when will the Lord's people enter into them?

To aid us in answering these questions, I will first call the readers' attention to Ex. xii. 1-23. Here we find that Israel was commanded to enter into and remain within their doors during the night that the destroying angel was to pass through the land of Egypt. And this passover then instituted was kept as a memorial by Israel on the fourteenth day of the first month of each year ever after this. Now if we turn and read Col. ii. 16, 17 we find that these holy days kept by Israel were a shadow of good things to come.

Israel entering in and remaining within their doors while the destroying angel passed through Egypt was a type of the time when the people of God shall enter into their chambers, while the Lord is punishing the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity. It appears that the several parts of the passover were types. The lamb slain was a type of Christ, for we read that Christ our passover is sacrificed for us. 1 Cor. v. 7. And this to was on the same day that the Jews kept the passover. Matt. xxvi. 17. Therefore the type met its antitype on the fourteenth day of the first month, Jewish time. Again the month being called the first month of the new year, of the new dispensation to Israel, was a type of the new dispensation brought in by Christ's death, and also a type of the beginning of a new dispensation to the engrafted Israel at Christ's second coming.

Now as we have found that the one type (the lamb) met its antitype on the fourteenth day of the first month, then if Israel be a type of the engrafted Israel, or the Lord's people, then they also will enter into their chambers and shut their doors about them on the fourteenth day of the first month.

But in what year? We are told to "Watch," Matt. xxiv. 42. But why watch if we cannot discover anything now? Reader, if you are expecting a friend to visit you, and you hear his footsteps coming up the walk, and you listen—next you hear the familiar rap, rap, rap, at your door. You then know that your friend is ready to come in. Now Christ has said "when ye see all these things (the signs given) know that he is near, even at the doors." Matt. xxiv. 33.

I will not have space in this short newspaper article to give a tithe of the evidence which might be given to show that we are now at that critical period of time in this world's history when the governmental affairs of the world are about to pass through a radical revolution. But I will call the reader's attention to one Scripture which I trust, with the explanation given, can be easily understood.

In Matt. xiii. we find that Christ spake a number of parables to the people. In one he said, "The kingdom of heaven is liken unto a man which sowed good seed in his field; but while men slept his enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat. But when the blade was sprung up, then appeared the tares also; so the servants of the householder came and told him of it. And he said, An enemy hath done this. The servants said unto him, Wilt thou then that we go and gather them up? But he said, Nay lest while ye gather up the tares ye root up also the wheat with them. Let both grow together until the harvest, and in the time of the harvest I will say to the reapers, Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them, but gather the wheat into my barn. When Jesus sent the multitude away and went into the house his disciples came unto him saying, Declare unto us the parable of the tares of the field? He answered and said unto them, He that soweth the good seed is the Son of man. The field is the world; the good seed are the children of the kingdom, but the tares are the children of the wicked one. The enemy that sowed them is the devil, the harvest is the end of the world, and the reapers are the angels.

The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom (the field is the world) all things that offend, and them which do iniquity.

Reader, stop and think and look about you over the field, the world. Do you not see the children of the wicked one are already bound in organized bundles all over the world. And have not the reapers shown supernatural wisdom in adapting the bindings to the varied conditions of the tares?

Reader, can you not see that these bundles of tares are already in a heated condition? Agitating and striking, so that a very little more friction will produce a fire of destruction which will spread all over the field or world. Then the slain of the Lord will be many, and the earth will no more cover her slain. Jer. xxv. 33.

I am not alone in expecting a bloody revolution from the heated condition of these organized bundles. All over the world men of thought are viewing the present strained condition of society with fear and gloomy forebodings. Already the muttering sounds of the revolution are heard from every quarter. In America it is said "The ballot if we can—the bullet if we must." Can society stand the present strain another twelve months without a revolution coming? If not, then the wheat will be gathered into the barn. The Lord's people will enter into their chambers of safety.

When the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, and the dead in Christ will rise first. Then we which are alive and remain shall all be caught up together with them, in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air and so shall we ever be with the Lord. 1 Thess. iv. 16, 17.

Reader is it possible that on the fourteenth day of the first month of the next Jewish year, within seven months from the time these lines are written, that God's people will be called to enter into their chambers to hide, as it were, for a little moment, while the Lord is punishing the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity? Yes, reader, it is more than possible: it is probable. In this time while the Lord is punishing the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity, the great battle of all nations will be fought at Jerusalem. See Ezek. xxxviii, xxxix. and Zech. xiv.

After this battle is fought at Jerusalem Christ with his saints will descend upon the Mount of Olives. See Zech. xiv. By reading Lev. xvi. xxiii and Heb. ix. 24, we can learn that Christ, our high priest, will come out of the holy place to bless the people on the tenth day of the seventh month, and then will commence the times of restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began. Acts iii. 21.

But says the objector, Are you not fixing the time definitely? and quotes "But of that day and hour knoweth no man." Neither did Daniel understand, but he said that at the time of the end the wise shall understand. Neither did the Jews understand at Christ's first coming, but the prophets had foretold it.

Paul the apostle says concerning this day of the Lord's coming as a thief at night, "But ye, brethren, are not in darkness that that day should overtake you as a thief." 2 Thess. v. 1-5. Again, "Surely the Lord God will do nothing but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets" Amos iii. 7. See Psa. xxv. 14; Prov. iii, 32.

"Therefore, be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh."

J. B. Craton.

Conference Notice.

The Annual Conference of the Church of God for the Northwest will convene at Scholls' Ferry, Oregon, on Friday, Oct. 17, 1890, and will hold over the following Sunday.

If those attending wishing conveyance will notify us they will be met with teams at Portland.

When the nobleman returns from the far county, his servants are judged and rewarded according to the use they make of the talents that had been given them accord to their several ability. May it not be brethren, that in these meetings and the good work growing out from them that each and all of us may find opportunity to invest our "talent" so that our Lord when he returns may receive his own with usury?

Our evangelist, Bro. Skeels has been the means in the Lord's hands of doing much good and bringing joy to many hearts by preaching the glad tidings of the kingdom of God the past years; and if an additional evangelist can be kept in the field the coming years and many more made glad by hearing the truth as it is Christ Jesus, will not the effort to do as we would be done by be pleasing in the sight of our Heavenly Father?

Walter W. Jaquith, Sec.

Announcement.

Preparatory to the General Conference the twenty-first Annual Assembly of the Church of God, will, if the Lord will, convene at the House of the Brethren, Mountain View, Va., on Saturday, Oct. 25th, to continue over Sunday and as long as the interest in the truth may require. One or more delegates are most earnestly and prayerfully requested to be sent from each and every church both in East and West Virginia, and all of the preaching and isolated brethren in and out of the States as many as can come will be made at home, regardless of differences of opinions, so they have by the laws of adoption changed their relationship from the old or first Adam, to the second, the Lord from heaven, our Life-giver. Now brethren, you who wish to come to this may be last meeting of the kind until the coming of the Just One, please let us hear from you all at once. Address Elder N. J. Morgan, Winchester Va. All that come either by the C. V. or B. & O. R. R. will be certain to come on Friday, get off at Winchester and enquire for Bro. A. J. Miller. He will care for them and conduct them to the place of meeting on Saturday. By order of the church at Mountain View, Va.

TAKE NOTICE OF THIS.

REDUCED TO $1.50.

The price of The Restitution has been reduced to $1.50. This makes it necessary to do as nearly as possible a CASH business.

This reduction is made at the solicitation of many friends who have thought the price too high—not that they could not pay it—but in asking others to take the paper they were met with the objection of the high price. We confidently hope now the reduction is made that all our patrons will make an effort and try and increase our list to at least double what it is. Let each one now taking it get one more subscriber and this is accomplished. If you are interested in The Restitution, work for it a little now. If there is any family in your church that is not visited by it, urge them to try it for 1890.

The short margin, owing to the reduced price, will allow nothing to enable us to keep open accounts. If you pay promptly we can do the same, and live at peace with all men. Some will plead that they can pay better some months in the future than now. We do not wish to doubt your word, and do not, but you must remember we are totally unacquainted with you, and while we might if we personally know you be willing to trust you, we are not ABLE FINANCIALLY to carry your account. We therefore suggest that you borrow the $1.50 from some friend at home, and that will shift the burden of your account to some one else. Thus the load will be distributed to many instead of put on one, and will be much easier borne.

The poor, those who from age or infirmities, are totally unable to pay for their paper, we will still do as we have always done, send it free. To enable us to do this we depend largely on the voluntary donations of our kind friends, those who are interested, and fully alive, working all the time and with their means in the Master's vineyard. Their reward is sure, and the blessings of the aged and infirm, to whom they have sent papers and tracts, will be no mean recommendation in the last day.

A Call.

Brethren in Harper, Sumner, Elk, and adjoining counties in the State of Kansas, what say you with regard to a conference this coming fall. Let us hear from you all through The Restitution when and where to be held. Yours in hope and love to all.

I. S. Miller,
J. A. Moyer.

"A Discourse on Foundation Work," considered physically, morally and religiously, is the title of a 32 page tract, written by R. McLauchlan of Cleveland, Ohio. The Author has supplied us with a large quantity of these pamphlets, which we will be pleased to mail to all who desire them, at 5 cents each. The usual price of tracts this size is 10 cents. In this case the desire of the Author is to secure a wide circulation for these works and so do good, hence the price is put at the cost of the postage and handling them. No better opportunity can be given to secure good solid reading to hand to the uninstructed. Don't let these works remain long on our shelves, but send them out on their mission of love.

Index Rerum, a Ready Reference on Bible subjects, is the title of a pamphlet of 68 pages published by the author, R. C. Bingley. It takes up various important Bible subjects, and gives the most important texts on the topic, thus enabling one to call up desired testimonies, and refresh the memory as to the best texts to use to prove a point under discussion. About 80 different subjects are outlined, and we pronounce it the most "ready reference" book it has been our fortune to see. There is connected with it a chart showing the duration of the kingdom of men from the Babylonian dynasty till the end of the Gentile times. The author does not claim perfection in this little work, but any one at all interested in Scripture cannot fail to be benefitted by possessing a copy of "Index Rerum." Send twenty-five cents to R. C. Bingley, East Los Angeles, Cal. and get a copy.

Owing to the special low rates via the Pennsylvania Lines, the Chicago Exposition will be visited by a large number of persons from this vicinity.

THE RESTITUTION

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

"ALMOST."

How many ruined hopes and blasted expectations the future will disclose that have their origin in "almost." When the overwhelming arguments of Paul silenced every doubt in the mind of Agrippa, the response comes like a wail of sorrow "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." And when in the presence of Felix Paul reasoned of righteousness, temperance and judgment to come" that ruler trembling on the almost even balance of conviction, signed his own death-warrant by saying "go thy way for this time, when I have a convenient season I will call for thee." And when "the scribes and chief priests heard it.... they feared him because the people were astonished at his doctrine," they were almost persuaded, but alas "almost is but to be lost." How mournful the thought that the doleful lamentation "the harvest is past, the summer is ended and we are not saved," will be uttered by thousands when it is too late! That a sad bitter disappointment awaits many of the human family, is a truth that however unpleasant cannot be denied. That thousands who are doomed to be lost while they vainly hope for salvation is a fact so plainly written that it cannot be doubted. Men often pursue a "way that seemeth right, but the end thereof is the way of death." But all doubts on this must vanish before the light that is thrown upon it by our blessed Master who has declared "that many shall say to me in that day.... we have done many wonderful works in thy name, then will I profess unto them I never knew ye, depart from me ye workers of iniquity." In view of this terrible disappointment that awaits not a few but "many" the sympathetic heart cries out "why cannot God save these sincere, honest people, they thought they were doing right, they lived in that belief, they died in it and are raised from the dead in this belief, why not save them? As an additional reason why these sincerely deluded and honestly mistaken ones should be saved it is said they have been completely at the mercy and control of their leaders! This false sympathy while seemingly plausible is misleading. In every dispensation God has required the people who were subjects of the divine law to become familiar with its requirements. In no age has this responsibility been removed from the people and entrusted to a few favored ones. On the contrary the people have been expressly warned against submitting to the leadership or guidance of even the most favored of men. "Put not your trust in princes, nor in the Son of man in whom there is no help, his breath goeth forth, he returneth to the earth, in that very day his thoughts perish." The divine guidance must be sought, and with that search a blessing is connected. "Happy is the man that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the Lord his God."

Neither living or dead men are safe guides to the people. Men are forbidden to appeal to those sources for information that God has furnished, yet in opposition to this men follow the actual guidance of the living and the supposed instructions from the dead. As no one can plead exemption from the requirements of a human law that is general in its application, why should any plead exemption from the consequences of breaking a divine law that is general in its application? Don't worry about the heathen who have never hear of the divine law and are in profound ignorance of even the existence of such a law. Reason, common sense and justice demand that neither condemnation nor approval could apply in this case! To be deceived and yet suffer the consequences of that deception is a sad misfortune, but a very common one to the race. The government issues a genuine currency for the people and takes it for granted that the people who are to be benefitted by this currency will acquaint themselves with it sufficiently to be able to detect a counterfeit representation of it.

Notwithstanding all the precaution that is taken counterfeit money will be offered and taken. Who would argue for a moment that the unfortunate individual who has been imposed upon by a dealer in spurious money should have his loss made good by the government? He could plead that he was led to believe honestly that the money was genuine, that the imitation was so nearly like the genuine that he was in this manner deceived, yet the difference between a genuine and a counterfeit article can be detected by even those who are not experts in the business. Skillful deceivers have executed some very clever imitations that are referred to as "dangerous counterfeits," but the attempts to counterfeit God's truth are all bungling affairs that can be exposed very readily. Acids test the genuineness of metals, the microscope tests the work executed upon paper, so too there is an infallible test by which to determine the truth or the falsity of statements pertaining to the divine rule of life.

The great touchstone by which to test human claims is this: "To the law and to the testimony, if they speak not according to this word there is no light in them." Note, it must be "according to this word" not resembling it in some respects, not even a clever intimation of it, but "according to it." "If any man speak let him speak as the oracles of God," not something that sounds like the oracles of God. Thunder sounds very much like a cannon, but the sounds are from two very different sources. If any one calls this a "Shibboleth" let him acknowledge that it is God's Shibboleth, and be not afraid to pronounce it. Then do you wish to test any claim to the divine favor? Just drop a very little acid of truth upon it and watch the result. In using this acid be as careful as the chemist would be in using some powerful acid, don't let it drop on your own person, nor on that of the advocate of the system that is being tested, use it carefully.

Do not glory in your ability to expose error, but thank God that he has so carefully guarded his truth that it cannot be successfully assailed. As error is not peculiar to any age but has persistently followed the truth in all ages, it becomes an imperative though sometimes an unpleasant duty to unsheathe the sword of truth and hew to pieces false doctrines that assail the harmony and simplicity of the truth. All the readers of THE RESTITUTION remember well that from time to time it becomes the duty of some brother of steady nerve and unfaltering courage to expose a false position, and doubtless some of you have watched with eager interest as the powerful "acid" of truth has burned unsightly holes in these erroneous views, until even the advocates no longer insisted upon their merits. Salvation will depend upon the unbelief or and hearty obedience to a "few things." Let us then earnestly insist upon these things Let us be sure that our credentials when presented will be accepted. "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life." Yours in the blessed hope.

A Good Foundation.

Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God: And are built upon the foundation of the Apostles and Prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone;

In whom all the building fitly framed together, groweth up to an holy temple in the Lord:

In whom ye also are builded together, for an habitation of God, through the Spirit. Eph. ii. 19-22

For the erection of a building, it is necessary to have a good foundation on which to rear it. The Apostle Paul, in 1 Cor. iii. 10-17, says, According to the grace of God which is given unto me, [not boastingly, but through grace or favor] as a wise master-builder, I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon. But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereon. For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ. Now if any man build upon this foundation, gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble. Every man's work shall be made manifest; for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work, of what sort it is. If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward.

If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss; but he himself shall be saved so as by fire.

What is termed in common parlance Chr[illegible] which is divided and sub[illegible] into parties, sects and clans, to almost Ad-infinitum, it is certain, that they cannot all be right as a whole. Not one of them perhaps, is composed wholly of gold, silver, and precious stones, without some alloy even, to say nothing in regard to the wood, hay and stubble which enters more or less into the structure of most, if not all of them. But we are interdicted from "judging any thing before the time, until the Lord comes." "The day shall declare it;" and as paradoxical as it may appear, the fire that shall try every man's work of what sort it is, and which is always associated with the idea, as exclusively of destruction, is brought to view in the text cited, as an element of salvation. Water is also used in this two-fold sense, sometimes....Wherein few, that is, eight souls, (persons) were saved by water. The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us, (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ. We often hear a great deal of cavilling, and sneering with regard to baptism, as not being a saving ordinance. But let us analize this verse. See 1 Pet. iii. 20-21. The like figure, of course one who puts on baptism is saved in figure, if not in fact. Again, we would ask the question, Can a person be saved without a good conscience to back him up? This conscience is toward God, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ. The resurrection of the dead, i. e., the doctrine of the resurrection, Paul says is the gospel, by which ye, (believers) are saved, if kept in memory. See 1 Cor. xv. 1-2.

The whole of this chapter is replete with assertions, that there can be no future life, no immortality or incorruptibility without a resurrection from the dead, or a change equivalent, at the sounding of the trumpet. This day (the resurrection day) is the day of salvation, and we cannot be saved before this auspicious day, only as we are saved by hope, by anticipation, for death and he who holds its power will not be relinquished until that time. Then, and not until then, will we be enabled to shout victory over death; at that auspicious day we will be enabled to say, "O! death where is now thy sting, O! grave where is now thy victory?....but thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ." The multiplicity of religious sects, shows conclusively a departure from Apostolic injunction, viz., "to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." Paul in his day, gave a scathing rebuke to those who called themselves by their different leaders, (himself included). "One says I am of Paul, another of Apollos, another of Cephas, and another of Christ." Then comes the pertinent question, is Christ divided? Are ye not carnal and walk as men? If Christ was divided in Paul's day, with so few sects comparatively, what must the division be now, when the division is increased to "a thousand and one," more or less? whether in matters pertain to religion or in politics, it always has the tendency to weakening, instead of strengthening. I know that many endeavor to justify the division into different sects or parties, and for illustration they say, an army of men are not weakened but strengthened by being divided into different companies as cavalry, artillery, etc., and each having their appropriate work assigned them. But the figure is not appropriate, from the fact, that the different religious sects do not act in unison or concert with each other; they act independently of each other, and many of them exalt their leaders and their man-made creeds, above Christ and the Bible. The Catholics call their church "The Church," by which they mean that no salvation exists out of its pale. The Pope exalts himself above all that is called God or is worshiped. The granting of indulgencies is proof of this, as God never assumed the prerogative of forgiving sins before they were committed. The Pope of Rome seems to fill the bill (so to speak) of the man of sin, of whom Paul speaks. See 2 Thess. ii., see also Dan. vii. 9-11.

New religious sects or clubs, are springing up almost daily, to supply what is supposed to be lacking "the word—the gospel." [illegible] the great inquiry was made, "what must I do to be saved? Now the great inquiry is, what amount of feeling must I have in order to be saved? Feeling in the abstract, or aside from what produced it, is hardly recognized by Bible writers; the reason for it is obvious, from the fact that feelings can, and are often produced by erroneous teaching as well as by true teaching. But it is the truth and only the truth, that will make one free indeed. The children of Israel at the base of Mount Sinai, had a great jollification meeting, when they worshiped the golden calf, and this was about as sensible as many of the things which are put forth at the present day. Faith, hope and belief, the exercise of which requires an intelligent study of, and searching of the Scriptures, Berean like, in order to see, even what the Apostle Paul had declared. The Bereans evinced their faith in the Scriptures, for which they were highly commended; they had genuine faith, not mere credulity, which is often mistaken for it. Faith, hope and belief, always require evidence, on which they can rely for a valid basis. The power to save men is vested in the gospel, if believed and obeyed. By invoking the anxious-seat, the drum and tamborine to reach those the gospel will not and cannot reach, (as is supposed) but a resort to all such extraneous means or devices, is virtually saying that the preaching of the gospel is inefficient for the purpose for which it was instituted, viz., to save men. The prominence which is given to any other agency or medium than the gospel, must detract to the same extent from the word, and the power which is vested in the gospel to save men.

M. I. LEWIS.

"Earth's Great Jubilee."

In the second volume of Millennial Dawn, a work issued by Brother C. T. Russell pp. 175-200 there is a time argument based upon Israel's Pentecost and Jubilee Cycles.

Time, when measured by days or years is an exact quantity, and when the method of computing time involves the coming of Jesus at a definite date (as in this case) its importance need only to be mentioned to be appreciated by us all, and an error of a single day involves many years, when we come to compute a period of year cycles. I wish in this paper simply to call attention to an error in the count of Bro. Russell which I think is fatal to his whole time argument. I do not do this in order that I may present another theory and set a different time, but show that the argument is faulty by which he sets the date for the coming of Jesus and the Restitution to begin.

To point out the error permit me to quote the paragraph where brother R makes the mistake. Page 180.

"We have already referred to the method of counting the Sabbaths, that the multiplying of the Sabbath or seventh day by seven (seven times seven equals forty-nine) pointed out Pentecost the Jubilee Day which followed; and the multiplying of the seventh year by seven (seven times seven equals forty-nine) made the cycle which pointed out and led to the fiftieth or Jubilee year. And the same system carried out would indicate that to reach the great antitype, which we seek, we should in like manner square it, i. e. multiply the fiftieth year by fifty. That is to say, the antitypical cycle, by the method of multipling here taught us, should be reckoned by multiplying the typical Jubilee or fiftieth year by fifty, just as in reaching it we multiplied the seventh year Sabbath by seven."

The error lies in the multiplication of fifty by fifty, instead of forty-nine by forty-nine, as the year cycle.

It is a fact that the Sabbath day was the seventh day and must always come on the seventh day. It therefore follows that the Sabbath of weeks or the cycle of days was measured by 49 and not by 50. If this cycle was measured by 50 instead of 49, it is easy to see that each cycle of 50 would move the Sabbath one day ahead, and thus destroy the seventh day system. Now it was not designed that the fiftieth day feast should regulate the seventh day Sabbath but just the opposite, viz., that the seventh day Sabbath should regulate the period which should bring Pentecost.

Just so too in regard to the year Sabbath of the land. Six years they were to till the soil and raise crops but the seventh was to be a year of rest. This seven years repeated seven times gives the year cycle as 49 years. The fiftieth year was to be a year of release and a jubilee yet it becomes the first year in the next count and was a year in which they might plow and sow the land. It will be seen at a glance that if the fiftieth year was also a rest year there would come two rest years together, viz., the forty-ninth and fiftieth, and the Sabbath of the land would be moved one year ahead after each jubilee, thus destroying the seventh system again as in the case of the weekly Sabbath. When we make the yearly cycle fifty years it regulates the seventh system of land rest and moves it along one year at each and every jubilee and in 350 years the land rest would be changed seven times, and make it a constantly changing rest instead of a stated rest every seventh year. In short, to make the jubilee cycle 50 years, is to destroy the seventh year rest system, but to make it 49 years preserves its individuality and perpetuity. The cycle was made by the Sabbath of sevens but the Sabbath of sevens was not made by the cycle of fifty. It would be a mathematical impossibility to make 50 a multiple of seven, or 2 500 years a cycle of the Sabbath System. The cycle, whatever its length, must be a multiple of that system whose measure is seven.

Counting 49 years as a cycle and applying the same reckoning as given in Millennial Dawn there is a difference of 19 years in the time and Christ should have come in A. D. 1856.

We call attention to this error in the above work, and desire if the cycle argument is worth anything that some one will give not only the correct measure of the cycle, but some proof as to how many shall be counted and above all where we shall begin to count. Submitted in all charity. Yours for truth.

The Priesthood of Jesus.

Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. 2 Tim. ii. 15.

In the investigation of this subject we choose this text as a guide that we may be found a workman in the sight of God that needeth not to be ashamed because we shall make it our aim to rightly divide the word and to harmonize the word. Under the Jewish law the children of Israel were commanded to have their priests, and their work among other things was to take their sacrifices and make offering first for the priest then for the people, sometimes for a whole week. Once a year for the whole nation he appeared in the holiest of holies, and the people could not be blessed until he came out. These sacrifices and offerings were done through the shedding of blood and called the Aaronic priesthood, which was a type of the Christ, and thus God selected the place and spot which he made holy which was at Jerusalem when he accepted all sacrifices and offerings that were made in obedience to the law.

Now we come down to the time of Jesus our Savior which was the anointed Messiah the Christ and in him were fulfilled all the sacrifices and offerings which were done through the shedding of blood because he was the body that the Lord had prepared. That his offering was complete in that his blood was shed, that he died and rose again, that he has now gone into heaven itself, there to appear in the presence of God for us and in that he has done this he has fulfilled the Aaronic priesthood until he returns again, at which time it will be in force again for a thousand years and a little season, or till restitution is completed at which time it will be done away and that too forever so that the Melchisedek may come in force.

THE MELCHISEDEK PRIESTHOOD.

We do find away back in the 14th chapter of Genesis that the Melchisedek priesthood is spoken of, and that too, if you will take particular notice, was all performed without the least shedding of blood, and that Abram was blessed first when he was returning from pursuing the different nations to obtain his brother whom they had taken away by force. After receiving the blessing he gave a tithe or tenth of all. Then says Melchisedek, give me the persons but take the goods to thyself, showing most conclusively that nothing was killed, no life was lost nor shedding of blood, and that this order was so far as is revealed a blessing. Now then let us carry this forward to the time when restitution will be completed. When Christ and the saints will reign in perfect order then will Christ be a priest forever after the order of Melchisedek, and that it will fit right up to the time when the Aaronic priesthood will close with all its sacrifices and shedding of blood and will be one continuous blessing throughout the endless years of eternity as onward they roll.

J. A. MOYER.

Trust in the living God! What promises, what assurances, what rewards, what blessings are pronounced for those who confide in the only living and true God! Who have right in these Gentile times to ask and receive? They who believe the gospel of the kingdom and obey the command to be baptized, and walk worthily of their high profession. Let not the lukewarm, the worldly-minded, the covetous, the prayerless, think to receive good things from God. They who please Yahweh are the ones to be enriched by him. Some of the most devout, an observer may say, are in harder circumstances than others. And what if they are? Is this proof of their being less favored of God? Far from it. Rather is it proof of their genuineness. Refining is necessary for preparation for the kingdom. "That ye may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless." Peter charges us, for his words were for all down to the Lord's coming. The heart must be on God, pure like Jesus'. The beloved ones are rebuked and chastened. Jewels with rust or alloy are not the ones for God's casket; they are refined and bright.

Again the observer may say, we scarcely find persons like this. Suppose you don't; there are a few such nevertheless. All the inconsistency, hypocrisy, heresies, faithlessness, discords, disagreements, differences, splits, etc., will not quench the fact of a few living persons being Christ's at his coming. Verily it is a hard conflict to wage against an ungodly world, a spurious Christianity, and so much that is wrong among those who profess to be of the one faith. Enduring disciple, be thou diligent to be found of Christ in peace when he calls. More and more does it seem to the writer, duty to impress believers with the fact that in such an hour as we think not he cometh. Let there be no more of day or hour setting of times; uninterrupted preparation is the safe state; then though he call in the field or the mill, the store or the market, the ship or the boat, the cars or the wagon, on horse or on foot, in the workshop or wood, at home, in meeting, or in closet, at midnight, cockcrowing, or morning, we shall not be taken unawares. Frequent the closet, be faithful with self, see that the heart is clean, and filled with the love of God. Paul would have the Ephesians (and what is for believers in one age and place is for all) know the love of Christ which passeth (surpasseth, Diag.) knowledge. Do we know this love of God in Christ Jesus our Lord? If not, let us earnestly strive to know it.

J. S. Hatch may now be addressed at Memphis, Tenn.

"CRY OUT!"

"And some of the Pharisees from among the multitude said unto him, Master rebuke thy disciples. And he answered and said unto them, I tell you that, if these should hold their peace, the stones would immediately cry out." Luke xix. 39, 40.

The Pharisees were not the only religious sect who would, if they possessed the power, stamp out the rejoicing heart of disciples, who "with a loud voice" "cry out," "Blessed be the King that cometh in the name of the Lord!" I know of no people who have a better cause to be enthusiastic, and happy even to shouting "with a loud voice" to express the joy of heart engendered by the "Blessed Hope." The stiff, frozen up professor would say: "Master, rebuke thy disciples." Oh, no, says he, "if these should hold their peace, the stones would immediately cry out."

Whatever may be the abundant treasure of a person's heart will govern the speech and actions of life. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. A good man out of the good treasure of the heart bringeth forth good things; and an evil man out of the evil treasure bringeth forth evil things." Beloved brethren, let us be so careful that nothing but "good treasure" enters our heart, and then by all means "Cry Out;" for the world is in sore need of the sound of your welcome voice. "A man after God's heart," was one day engaged in quiet solemn meditation, musing on the sacred things of God, and as a result he says: "My heart was hot within me, while I was musing the fire burned; then spake I with my tongue." The tongue cant help but "Cry out," if the "fire burns," and the "heart is hot within."

If any man aspires to the work of the ministry, his service will be of little avail unless he has in the first place an intelligent conception of the things "concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ," and in the second place the heart must be "hot within," the love of God must radiate from it like heat from a glowing furnace. If the gospel is thus proclaimed, the people will not only listen, but accept the glad tidings with great joy of heart. This truly is the key to a successful preaching of the gospel.

Dear brethren let us wake up and "Cry out!" the time for cold indifference is past, the day of glory is near at hand. Warm up the heart! "Cry out!" Your Brother,

WM. H. WILSON.

Our Cross.

"No man hath a velvet cross," was Flavel's assertion, years ago, and it is just as true now as then. Only he who gives it to us, and he who beareth the cross, knows its weight. God only knows the strength needful for every burden. When we have felt that we were sinking under the weight of a great sorrow, his hand hath been placed beneath us to lift us. Sickness, pecuniary losses, the loss of our loved ones weigh heavily upon us. Separation in this world, from those who are dear to us, saddens our hearts beyond endurance, had we no strength but our own. To be misrepresented by the many, and to be maligned, if only by the few, are all crosses which we are loth to bear; but when we remember that each cross borne adds lustre to the crown, we should welcome them, or, at least, be able to say, "Thy will be done."

Our friends are doing fairly well in the way of renewing and sending in new names, still, while we thank them for this kindness, there is room for much more such work. THE RESTITUTION, sent to a friend or neighbor for a year may do more good than you imagine. It is often hard to approach an unbeliever and talk to him, and many shink from such a course—a paper sent is read oftentimes, and a way opened that otherwise would remain closed. Why not try it? Many here and though they may not now see the result of the effort time will disclose the fact that nothing done in the cause of our blessed Redeemer will be in vain.

Plymouth, Indiana, Feb. 4, 1891.

WE have just received from Bro. M. Joblin, of Cleveland, O., an abstract of a discourse by him at the Church of the Blessed Hope. It will find a place in our next issue. Thanks, Bro. Joblin. Should like to hear from you oftener in this way.

FOR the information of some who seem to not be acquainted we will say that Mrs. Elizabeth A. Reed, author of the book on Hindu Literature, is the wife of H. V. Reed, and is sometimes addressed as Mrs. H. V. Reed. This will settle the doubt in some minds on this matter.

WILLIAM Windom, the Secretary of the Treasury for the United States, died at New York City, Jan. 29, 1891, of heart disease. He had just concluded a speech at a banquet of the New York Board of Trade when the grim monster death came, and he died in a few minutes.

BRO. Chas. Gardner gives the last chapter of John's Apocalypse this week. His translations and comments have been read with a great deal of interest, and we hope he will take up some other portion of the word in like manner, and give our readers the benefit of his ripe scholarship. Thank you for the past favors.

A SHORT note from Bro. J. F. Wagoner says he is very anxious to take the field again, and only waits until his health will permit. He is improving as fast as can be expected, and hopes with God's blessing to be able in the near future to respond to the many calls that are made. He goes to Tiosa, Ind., the second Sunday in February.

FOR some weeks past we have, in response to requests, given some part of our space to short letters from brethren and sisters all over the land. While some may think these dull reading, we find a majority prefer them to miscellaneous selections that are necessarily crowded out. Send on your short letters friends, and we will endeavor to give a better variety as circumstances will admit. We are very grateful for the kind words and substantial encouragement given from all quarters.

To Secure Palestine for the Jews.

THE following from the Chicago Tribune of Jan. 31, illustrates the interest that is awakening among all classes relative to the Hebrew race. Surely the Jews will be brought back to their own land, and the persecution in Russia and other countries, together with exertions similar to those of Mr. Blackstone, will be but instruments in the hands of Israel's God to further the work He has declared shall be accomplished.

"The Rev. W. E. Blackstone, who was Chairman of the conference between Christians and Jews recently held in Chicago, is at the head of a movement to hold an international conference to consider the condition of the Jews. Petitions will be circulated asking President Harrison and Secretary Blaine to use their influence in the conference, the object of which will be to obtain Palestine for the Jews. The petition has already been signed by hundreds of citizens, embracing Protestants, Catholics, and Jews. Mr. Blackstone will soon go East and agitate the question in New York and other cities.

MR. J. M. Buckley, editor of the Christian Advocate, evidently is not a believer in the restoration of Israel, for he says: "While in Jerusalem, as well as wherever any facilities for such inquiries were found, I tried to ascertain how much importance is to be attached to the supposed rapid return of Jews to Palestine. Those whose views of Scripture prophecy lead them to believe that the Holy Land will finally be occupied exclusively by Jews, which event they think is important because preceding others of great interest to the world, think they find much encouragement in this tendency. But my inquiries, made without regard to any theory, simply to ascertain the facts, led me to think, considering the character of the Jews migrating thither, that nothing of any significance is yet indicated."

On the other hand, Mr. A. Hastings Kelk, M. A., who is connected with Christ Church at Jerusalem, gives in his testimony before the London Society for the Promotion of Christianity among the Jews in the following words, spoken at the Anniversary of the Society. "You have been reminded of the large increase in the number of Jews in Palestine. When I went there, eleven years since, there were at the outside 8,000 Jews in Jerusalem. They have increased now up to 33,000, and these come, many of them, in great poverty; some of them, indeed, bring some means with them, but a very large number of these find their way to us, or come in contact with one or other of our Missionaries in one way or another. You have been told about the numbers returning to Palestine, you may call it what you will, a restoration or a return, or seeking a home, or anything you like, I care not what it is called, the fact remains, the Jews are coming together to their own land. And besides this, we have signs all around us that they will come back in still larger numbers."

WE accept the testimony of this last witness as far outbalancing the other, from the fact that the one was an incidental visitor to the Holy Land, while the other is located on the ground, and engaged in a work where he can have the best of opportunities to know the exact truth.

WHILE on this subject we wish to meet the statement made recently that the Jews who are to [illegible] exiled from Russia if the mandate of the Czar is not rescinded, are to be taken some to Australia, others to South America, and some brought to the United States, and homes provided for them. This is indeed true regarding a few hundreds, or even thousands. One of the large ships that sail the ocean will bring all who have any intention of coming to this country. But this is a mere handful compared with the four or five millions who are affected by the Czar's order. Where will the large mass go? No European nation wants them. They are not able to go to distant lands only as they are assisted to do so by the different charitable organizations who are interested, and these have not means sufficient to accomplish such a work even if they so wished. Thus compelled to seek a location near by, with almost one accord they look to the land covenanted to their fathers, and cry To Jerusalem, to Jerusalem. There they will be gathered, whether the so-called Christian people want it or not.

TO MY FRIENDS.

Dear brothers and sisters, I am thankful to our Heavenly Father that although I have had a narrow escape from death, that I am alive and as well as I am. I have realized that while we are in the midst of life we may be in death. I have experienced that we may pass from life into death without any knowledge of pain. I was unconscious for about four hours, and if it had not been for the assistance my physician and friends gave me, I would never have known that I was hurt. I now realize more than ever how important it is to have our lives clean and ready to meet the great change at a moment's warning. I have been trying to live the Christian life for over forty-one years and the thought comes to me now, if I had have been called away would I have gone empty handed, or have I by my life or teaching been instrumental in bringing some one or more to embrace the gospel in order that they might have everlasting life in the world to come, in the sweet by and by, where there will be no more pain nor death, neither sorrow nor crying, and where we will meet all our loved ones that are now sleeping in the enemy's land. Dear brothers and sisters I like to hear from you through THE RESTITUTION. I write this thinking that many of you whom I have been acquainted with might like to hear from me. I am getting along as well as might be expected. Yours in the hope of a future life.

W. D. THOMPSON.

Letter Drawer.

Dear Brethren and Friends:

I write a short note to let you know about my present condition. It is now nearly two years since a malignant growth first made its appearance on my right foot, which finally turned out to be a cancer. I had it cut out once in the fall of 1889, and on May 6, 1890, I was put under the influence of ether and chloroform, and had it cut out again, and the whole surface of the wound was then burned over with red-hot irons. When I came out from under the influence of the anæsthetics, I found that I had a severely wounded and painful foot. For awhile it bade fair to heal, but in August the cancerous growth began to develop itself again, and on Oct. 1st I employed a physician who uses chemical remedies; on Jan. 6, 1891, he extracted the cancerous growth in a dried and hardened mass, leaving a cavity in my foot of a roundish form measuring about three and a half inches across one way, and about three inches the other, involving three of the white tendons leading to the toes, which had to be severed on each side of the mass with the knife. I am now confined to my room, for as the wound was deep, reaching nearly to the bones of the foot, it heals but slowly. I now have reason to hope that the malignant cancerous growth is destroyed; but it will require two months or more for the wound to heal. I have suffered greatly both from the cancer, and the severe means employed to cure it; but I have tried to be patient and to prayerfully trust in God. The pains are gradually leaving now. May God bless you all for your sympathy and prayers in my behalf.

Editor Restitution:

As I like to hear from the brethren and sisters through the good articles and letters in the good old RESTITUTION, I thought perhaps some of them might like to hear from me. It is now eighteen years since we first commenced to take this paper, and I have been much instructed and comforted and strengthened in the faith once delivered to the saints. I believe Bro. Thomas Wilson and Henry Pierce were at the head of the paper when we commenced to take it. It first taught me the doctrine of the kingdom which is to be set up on this earth, with the Capital at Jerusalem. And I was immersed for the obedience of this faith, in Aug. 1876, by Bro. R. V. Lyon, who immersed my husband the same time. Since then Bro. Lyon has been over here several times, and immersed three of our daughters into the all-saving name. And I hope we may walk worthy of this high calling to the end and at last receive the prize. Bro. J. S. Hatch had a good article in THE RESTITUTION of Jan. 7. Also Sister Wines, and brethren B. and W. H. Wilson, and many others. It does me good to see the brethren stand firm and not be afraid to preach the whole truth. We have no other preaching only what we get through THE RESTITUTION and other Bible papers and works, which teach the same great truth. Your sister in the blessed hope of the near coming of our King to reign on his long promised throne in Mount Zion, Jerusalem.

L. B. CHAMBERLIN.

Dear Restitution:

One of the fundamental rules of all civilized governments is, that every person accused of crime shall have the right to be heard personally and by counsel in his own defence, and the right to meet his accusers face to face. He shall be presumed to be innocent until he be proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, by legal evidence. These rules, which the experience of centuries has approved, are good, and ought to be observed in all the relations of life.

Should we hear a rumor affecting the Christian character, honesty, or integrity of a brother, we should decline to believe it until he shall have an opportunity of meeting his accusers face to face and defending himself. We should still continue to believe him innocent, unless upon such hearing, the evidence (not rumors), shows him guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. The rule of reasonable doubt is founded in charity. Experience has approved it most fully.

It requires a life-time to build up and establish a good name, which may be overthrown in a few short days by false reports which are circulated at first without much thought and without any proof of their truth, but which, being repeated and gossiped about, finally become current and pass as truth. Ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, persons who circulate such rumors do not realize that they are doing any wrong. They would not intentionally wrong a brother or a neighbor, but without realizing it, they blast the reputation and ruin the prospects of one who is probably making a hard fight, under adverse circumstances, to maintain a good standing in the church in which he worships, and in the community in which he lives. He perhaps has a wife and children dependent upon him, whose lives are so interwoven with his, that whatever affects him affects them. They are innocent but they must suffer.

O, my dear brethren how careful ought we to be!

Editor Restitution:

Enclosed I send you one dollar and fifty cents which place to my credit for THE RESTITUTION. I have not been as prompt in my renewal as I should have been for reasons unnecessary to mention and you will please excuse the delay. I do not feel now that I should like to be without it, as it has been nearly a regular weekly visitor to me now for at least fifteen years. And though I have not accepted everything that has been presented through it as truth and in harmony with the word of God, yet I must say that I have been greatly benefited by the reading of it, as it called my attention to many things of great importance which I carefully investigated, the result being very beneficial to me. At the time when I first ordered THE RESTITUTION I was in bondage to sectarianism and its teaching, but thank God, today I stand a free man in Christ Jesus. And I am determined by the grace and help of God to stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made me free, and not be entangled again with the yoke of bondage, but endeavor as best I can to build upon that foundation, Jesus Christ, with gold and silver and precious stone, as that is the only true, legal and acceptable currency of high heaven, and upon which only is offered a premium as a reward for the accepting and using of it by us in our building upon that foundation. Therefore we cannot be too careful in the selection of the material to be used, in order that we sustain no loss; for every man's work shall be tried of what sort it is [illegible]. If any man's work abide which [illegible] thereupon he shall receive a reward. The great reward that is offered under the special call of the gospel, is a crown of immortality. May we then, one and all that desire this great reward make a full and complete consecration to God, and make our calling and election sure before the good Master shall rise up and shut to this door of favor. May we be wise, watching and waiting for the manifestation of Christ's glorious presence and enter in with him to the marriage supper of the Lamb.

JOSIAH SEAL.

To the Household of Faith, Greeting:

It is not often I write so my brethren can bear with me if I acquaint them with my present situation and prospects.

I am living with my dear ones in a new home which the dear Lord has kindly provided for me. It originated by an offer made by one of the Lord's stewards at the time of our Annual Conference in June, 1889.

When I came to this part of the vineyard I occupied a rented home, worked hard to sustain my family, and as the way opened have proclaimed the gospel. Since March 26, have had all I could do and part of the time could not fill the calls personal and by mail, and cannot now. Have three appointments with an excellent and continued interest at two. One is about three miles northwest of Marshalltown, where I am at present writing. I greatly desire to have a series of meetings soon, here and the other points. The good home I am enjoying I have occupied since Jan. first. Have been engaged in building it since Nov. first, since which I have had the assistance of thirty or more of my neighbors and brethren. It is located in a desirable place with land to cultivate, and an abundance of fuel. The Lord will reward my generous friends, and I hope to ever prove worthy of their confidence and assistance. Pray for me that my faith fail not.

E. A. MARSH.

Dear Restitution:

I am very much pleased to see so many letters from the dear brothers and sisters scattered abroad.

Brothers and sisters should we not be thankful that we have opportunity to thus exhort and cheer one another?

This is not a chance world. The Lord is over all his works and all things will work together for good to those that love him.

And while the sea and the waves are roaring (nations and peoples) those that have taken refuge in the Rock have strong consolation. For beyond the mighty tempest that is soon to sweep over the earth, there is a bright future for the faithful in Christ Jesus, who are willing to endure persecution and meet the frowns and scoffs of this sinful and deluded generation. Then brothers and sisters let us take fresh courage, and diligently strive to gain eternal life that we may meet each other in the everlasting kingdom.

I also wish to say that Bro. J. W. Niles has left his home and come among us to preach the good news of the coming kingdom without the promise of one cent outside his travelling expenses. The most of us are poor, and some are very poor in this world's goods. And I thought perhaps if our brethren knew how our and Bro. Niles's circumstances were they might help our Brother with their means.

Brother Niles is not very able to do hard labor, and is poor, and it seems very hard that he should have to go to his family without any means to support them except hard labor. Remember that he is worthy.

Now if you will allow me to suggest a plan I would say when you meet let the one who presides or leads in the meeting make this known, then let each give as he or she may see proper. In this way each could give a little and would help our worthy Bro. This plan can be continued till the middle of March next when it may be sent to THE RESTITUTION Office, as suggested by Bro. Niles himself. List of names and amount sent will be published if desired. Yours in the faith.

W. H. STEWART.

Dear Restitution:

Would like to say through THE RESTITUTION that nothing could have been more interesting than Bro. B. Wilson's writing on the reign of David and Solomon. It was rich and glorious as all Bible truth is when rightly divided. I must say that I am longing at times for the judgment to come. The writings of others are especially interesting. I am seeking for more faith and love for these momentous times in which it has fallen to our lot to live. Yet love is the greater. "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you." It is very evident to my mind that people are blinded, or they would not venture to teach such [illegible] gospel, as they force on [illegible]. Of course many have rejected the light, and preaching now to please the people, praying not "for the peace of Jerusalem." The Lord have mercy. Yours in love of the truth.

MRS. M. J. MANSFIELD.

Dear Restitution:

Enclosed please find two dollars, for which you will continue to send me your valuable paper. The extra 50 cts. please let it go to help some of our poor worthy brothers or sisters that are anxious to hear the truth as it is presented from time to time in your paper. Although I am here, as it were, alone in the faith as it is presented in THE RESTITUTION, how glad I would be to hear the truth advocated here. I do wish, and am anxious, that the people here should know what the Bible teaches. I try to instruct them as well as I can one by one. Some will hear and some will not. But as our Savior says, none are so blind as those that will not see, nor none so deaf as those that will not hear. Oh the blessed hope of that which St. Paul speaks of in I Cor. xv. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But as he says every man in his own order, Christ the first fruits, afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming. Praise the Lord, brethren. Pray for me that I may continue in the faith, steadfast to the end. Brethren do the best you can to promote the great and glorious cause of Christ and his kingdom. Yours in hope of eternal life when the Life Giver shall come the second time without sin unto salvation.

LEWIS BENJAMIN.

Dear Restitution:

I would like to give a few words of cheer through your columns, I see so many good letters from the dear ones scattered abroad through the land. Some names are familiar to me, others are not, some I have met in my travels with my dear father J. S. Hatch, who has so long labored in the cause of Christ, almost constantly ever since I was but two or three years old, and as soon as I was old enough to aid him in singing I was permitted to travel with him, and O! the good meetings I have attended, the good, kind, zealous people I have met, it seems so much easier to live a devoted Christian life with such encouragement. Now we scarcely ever hear any preaching, our little band that were so zealous in years gone by is almost broken up, the interest that once was displayed has almost died out, but we still strive to keep our lamps burning, we ask the prayers of the dear ones of like precious faith, there is a reward if only we prove faithful, a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous judge, shall [illegible] me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them that love his appearing. 2 Tim. iv. 8.

The little flock as God's people are called, are so widely scattered but we will be one unbroken family in the kingdom if only we prove faithful. I am striving to be one of that family. Your sister in Christ.

AZORAH M. SNOGGS.

Dear Restitution:

Please find enclosed P. O. Money Order for three dollars, to renew my subscription on THE RESTITUTION for the present year, and to pay for it for those two aged brethren you mentioned a few weeks ago. Or some one else whom you regard worthy—that is the Lord's poor. This is our duty to divide the bounties and blessings of our heavenly Father with his children. We are living in a selfish age, in which the masses are rushing on in their blind zeal, to meet the final conflict. There never has been a time since Noah's flood of such universal unrest, socially and politically. All this deep scheming, murmuring and complaining, the plotting, and uniting of the great masses of mankind in bands or bundles, are but the harbingers of the great day of God. Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them: but gather the wheat into my barn. Jesus. This binding first the tares, is not confined to outsiders, to the nonreligious ones, but like leaven it has got into the churches, and today the mighty masses of men and women both high and low are being moved by it. Some agent or middle man comes along with his bait, by telling the advantages of "united efforts." He sets forth a plausible and pleasing story as at the beginning and to make a success, we must keep our plots and plans from some others. Hence the necessity of secret orders. This to my mind is enough to brand the hydra-headed monster with suspicion and condemnation. This mode of operation is very unlike Jesus of Nazareth. Please listen and learn of him.

Jesus answered him, I spake openly to the world; I ever taught in the synagogue and in the temple, whither the Jews always resort; and in secret have I said nothing." Could his adversaries say as much and tell the truth? If this Spirit that is so pleasing and successful in moulding the great masses of humanity, is of God, why not like Jesus of Nazareth openly send the good message to the world? Jesus says, He that is not for me, is against me, He that gathers not with me scattereth abroad. My brother, my sister, have you heard those pleasing stories? Have you drank of that spirit? Have you gone in the dark and secretly bound yourself to this motly colored monster? Do you strive harder and make greater efforts to be there, and pay up your quarterage and have a good time than you do to meet God's children openly in religious worship.

If so MENE MENE TEKEL, UPHARSIN, certainly is written on your wall.

My brother, my sister, can you do all that you do, and say all that you say, there with the doors locked, and the windows blinded, to the honor and glory of God? Do you really believe that the good angels would come and knock on the door for admittance when sent out to gather God's Jewels? If you are doubtful about it, it would be prudent to act wisely by being found on guard, at your post, watching and praying, lest that day come on you unawares, and find you unprepared, eating, and drinking, and chewing, and smoking with the world. I regard the expelling of the millions of God's ancient people, and their return and seeking a home in their fatherland, the budding of the fig-tree, while all other trees, or nations are also budding and bearing unmistakable signs that summer is near.

Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame.

The Reunion.

In the Sunday School lessons for 1891, the revolt of the ten tribes and the setting up a new kingdom under Jeroboam, leaving Rehoboam with but two tribes to reign over, very little is said by Christian teachers about the future reunion of the two kingdoms, Judah and Israel. Ezekiel's vision of the dry bones, so clear and impressive, teaches the restoration of the union once existing between the twelve tribes, never again to be broken. The two sticks in the hand of the prophet became one. Then the wonderful results that are to follow are given in the most clear and distinct manner possible. The signs indicating the beginning and progress of this work, the instant transmission of intelligence among the nations, first-class consulships at Jerusalem, both taking place in 1848. And now the arrival of the three engines at Jaffa for the Jerusalem railroad, indicate the time, yea the set time to favor Zion has come. Arise, put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem the Holy City. Amen.

Russia Has More Trouble with Bulgaria.

ST. PETERSBURG, Feb. 2.—The Russian Government intends to take further diplomatic action against the Bulgarian Government. Since the diplomatic agents of Germany and Austria protested against Nihilists being protected and employed in Bulgaria the Bulgarian Government instead of expelling persons designated by Russia took advantage of the opportunity to expel 200 other persons, chiefly ex-officers of the Bulgarian army and Russophiles hostile to M. Stambuloff.

Present Day Judaism.

Recent movements among the Jews point to a revolutionizing and disintegrating process going on in modern Judaism. Rationalism seems to be undermining the whole fabric. In many instances this has gone to such an extent, that Judaism has become little more than what one writer has termed a "rational monotheism." A belief in a personal Messiah, in the Old Testament miracles, in a literal resurrection, and in future retribution, has been by multitudes discarded. The old landmarks are being swept away, and mere negations are being substituted for the once virile and positive faith of Israel.

This decadence of the old historic Judaism, the crumbling of the ancient fortress, so far as a large section of the Jews is concerned, no doubt gives to the church an unparalleled opportunity to "go up and possess the land." In the Providence of God the way seems opening for missionary effort among the children of Israel. Thus, the picture has its brighter side, and many instances are reported of Jews gladly [illegible] Christian instruction, reading the New Testament, and receiving the truth as it is in Jesus. Judaism has presented a front as impregnable apparently as that of Jericho to the armies of Joshua. But the indications are that if the church of Christ will only follow its Leader, "the Captain of the Lord's host," and each man endeavor to "ascend up straight before him," the walls will fall, and the city will be taken. What is needed is an outpouring of the Spirit upon the disciples of Christ, that will impart an enthusiasm akin to that of the old Crusaders in their mistaken enterprise for the recovery of the Cross and Sepulchre.

One very remarkable and significant result of the Anti-Semitic feeling in southern and eastern Europe, will doubtless be to lead many Jews to turn their eyes in weariness and sorrow to the land of their fathers. Already meetings are being held, and money subscribed to a large amount, to promote the colonizing of Palestine by persecuted Jews. What relation this movement may have to the fulfilment of prophecy, is an interesting subject of inquiry. Whatever may be the final outcome, it is certain that the present reawakened enmity to Israel will serve to work out the divine purposes and to give fresh interest to the word of Isaiah, standing in the midst of evidently unfulfilled prophecy (ch. xi. 9–12), that "the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people....and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah, from the four corners of the earth."—*D. England's Great Guns.

The British warship Thunderer has received the first four specimens of a gun from which great things are expected. The original armament of the Thunderer consisted of two 38-ton and two 35-ton muzzle-loading guns, and it may be remembered that one of these burst, in the course of practice, inside the turret, with fatal results. It was pretty generally believed that the cause of the accident was that the gun had been twice loaded before firing. The new guns, two of which are mounted on each turret, are of 10 inch caliber and 29 tons weight. The total length is 26 feet 10 inches, the projectile weighs 500 pounds, and the full charge of powder is, as is now usual, just half that weight. At a range of 1,000 yards it is calculated to pierce 21 inches of wrought-iron plate.

"They that sow in tears shall reap in joy." The sowing-time may be a time of sorrow, but the reaping-time will be one of rejoicing. Be patient; the end is drawing near. After a little while your tears will be wiped away, and everlasting joy shall be upon your head.

JOHN'S APOCALYPSE. Chapter xxii.

1. And he showed me a river of water of life clear as crystal going its way out from the throne of God and the Lamb.

2. In the midst of the public-square thereof and on this side and that of the river a tree of life bearing twelve fruit-products yielding its fruit month after month, each month; and the leaves of the tree for the healing of the nations.

3. And there will be no curse (lit., putting down) any more; and the throne of God and the Lamb will be in it, and his bond-servants will serve him for hire;

4. And they will see his face, and his name upon their foreheads.

5. And night will be no more, and they have no use for the lamp-light and sun-light, because the Lord God will shine over them and will reign as King for the ages of the ages.

6. And he said unto me, These words are reliable and truthful, and the Lord God of the spirits of the prophets hath sent his angel to show unto his bond-servants the things that must swiftly come to pass.

7. And lo I am coming swiftly. Blessed-happy the one who watcheth to keep [esoteric watch, i. e., to keep within one] the words of the prophecy of this book.

8. And I John was the seer [lit., looker] at and hearer of these things; and when I heard and saw [lit., looked to see] I fell down to do homage before the feet of the angel who was showing me these things.

9. And he saith unto me, See, no; thy fellow-bond-servant am I and the fellow-bond-servant of thy brethren the prophets and of those who watch to keep [esoteric watch] the words of this book. Do homage to God.

10. And he saith unto me, Seal not the words of the prophecy of this book. For the appointed time is nigh.

11. Let the one who doeth unjustly, do unjustly still, and the filthy one be filthy still; and the just one do justice still and the saint be saintly still.

12. Lo I am coming swiftly and my wages with me to pay to each one as the work is his.

13. I am the Alpha and the Omega, the first and the last, the beginning and the completion.

14. Blessed happy are those who are washing their kingly [or priestly] robes, that their official-power may be over the tree of the life and that they may have entered in through the gates into the city.

15. Outside are the dogs and the sorcerers and the harlots and the murderers and the idolators and every one who is the author of and who are friendly to a lie.

16. I Jesous have sent my angel to testify unto you [plural] these things for the churches. I am the root and stock of David, the bright, the morning star.

17. And the Spirit and the Bride say, come; and may the one who heareth have said, come; and let the one who thirsteth come; the one who will may he have taken of the water of life without price.

18. I myself am testifying to every one who heareth the words of the prophecy of this book. If any one shall have added to them, God will add to him the plagues that have been written in this book:

19. And if any shall have taken from the words of the book of this prophecy God will take away from the tree of the life and from out the sacred city his portion of the things that have been written in this book.

20. The one who testifieth these things saith, Yes, I am coming swiftly. Amen, come Lord Jesous.

21. The grace of the Lord Jesous be with all.

COMMENT.

For further information as to this river of life, whether it is a literal river or not, see Jezekiel and the other prophets. Likewise the city. The Catholic and Protestant commentators as a rule take this description here to be all figurative and merely illustrative of some sort of a spiritual organization of the church here or hereafter. I think the Scriptures teach that there will be a literal river and a literal city and a literal kingdom here on this earth.

"Twelve fruit-products" not "twelve manner of fruits," as in the C. V and R. V. In other words there is to be a crop every month. The word for "curse" here is katathema, meaning literally "a putting down." The other word for a curse is anathema, "a putting up." This I have explained and commented on elsewhere. See for example the nailing up of the bodies of Saul and his sons to the walls of the heathen temple in "Bethshan" as a token, that they were accursed.

"His bond-servants serve him for hire." Appropriately too. For they had been manumitted as "slaves" and they choose to serve their old master for love and wages, but for life moreover.

The absence of "night" here indicates a special illumination of which the old "pillar of fire by night" was a type. This too I think will be literal. Not that the sun and moon and stars will be obliterated, but as here stated, there will be "no use for" nor need of the moon, because of the greater glory of God and his Christ in "immediate presence" with shekinal light. "The Lord God of the spirits of the prophets" here is very suggestive to the thoughtful reader.

"Swiftly come to pass" is by no means the same thought as "quickly come to pass." One has reference to motion and the other to time. For instance to illustrate, light moves with almost inconceivable rapidity and has been on its way from remote fixed stars since the creation and has not yet reached this earth. Again one starts quickly or promptly to take a train and when aboard goes swiftly on his journey. In another part of this chapter God says, "I am coming swiftly" not "quickly." This he has been saying since the first revelation through Mouses to the old prophetic formula, "The one who is and was and is coming." The light as given above is a good illustration of God as "the coming one." We have added to it here the idea of how, not when. How is God coming? Swiftly is the answer. When? "No one knoweth, not even the Son." The when is one of the unrevealed counsels of God. Therefore the necessity of being watchful and wakeful. The same is true in revelation of the first and second coming of the Christ. "The day and the hour" is not revealed.

The esoteric watch is one spoken of all through this chapter and constantly emphasized—the watch to keep "the words of the prophecy of this book" in the mind and heart of the reader and hearer. This is just what the church has neglected to do in its apostasy as I am trying to show, of which this word or expression meaning "swiftly" is a sample.

"John the looker." In this expression again we have the old word used invariably of the prophet or "seer" in the Old Covenant Scriptures. The reproof of the angel here illustrates how the "looker" did not always see aright as in this case. "See, no." The word for "see" in this case is not the same as the one translated "look." The word to look is blepo. The one to see is orao. John although looking did not see the impropriety of "doing homage" to an angel.

"Thy fellow-bond-servant and the fellow-bond-servant of thy brethren the prophets" makes the fellowship have to do with the service and emphasizes this. They were all working for "wages." In the C. V. this passage reads in such a way as to imply that this angel was one of the old prophets who had somehow come to life and was serving here as an angel, a perfectly heathenish idea and corrected in the R. V. We should also gather from the context that these angel bond-servants of God watch to keep the words of this prophecy as well as human bond-servants.

A great deal of discussion has occurred in the past among educated thinking Christian people as to whether it is possible to understand this book of Revelation, and the average theologian or minister now-a-days skips it as something impracticable and intangible, or in one word passes it as "a mystery." The question then is whether it is a mystery or in other Scriptural phraseology meaning the same thing, "a sealed book." We have the answer to this question right here, "Seal not the words of the prophecy of this book." Some of Daniel's visions were sealed. But this we are specifically told is not sealed. Then it must be possible for Christians to understand it if they go at it in the right way.

"The appointed time [kairos] is nigh." is not a point of time, but a period of time. This is the Greek word for our English word season, an autumn season or a winter season for instance. The period referred to is the period of time at the ushering in of which the long-predicted separation of the just from the unjust will take place and a new order of things will be inaugurated as here stated in the language, "Lo, I make all things new." The "today" of grace is ended and the "ingathering" takes place. But there are people here on the earth besides the saints. They are said to be "outside" however, and after enumerating five classes of them the rest are designated under the comprehensive phraseology of "every one who is the author of friendly to a lie." If this change and separation should suddenly take place now methinks the "little flock" would be small indeed.

"The washing of the kingly or priestly robes" here spoken of is not a baptismal washing but "the washing of regeneration through the word" as I understand. At any rate it is here spoken of as an act performed by the wearer of the robe himself and implies an act or course of action for which the wearer of the robe is himself responsible and which he can do or neglect to do and take the consequences, namely, remain "outside" where the other allotment is.

"These things for the churches" was "in the churches," C. V., but corrected in the R. V., a very misleading blunder.

"Root and stock of David" instead of "root and offspring" as in the O. V. The word translated stock is genos which we have anglicised into genus through the Latin. "The bright, the morning star" goes back to the prophecy of Balaam in the book of Numbers. There is just as much reason to personify the Bride literally in the passage "The Spirit and the Bride say come," as to personify the Spirit.

"I am coming swiftly" instead of "I am coming quickly" agrees with Paul's warning against any immediate expectation of the Christ's return and the establishment of the kingdom "before the apostasy should first have come."

The importance of the literal record of this book emphasized in the penalty pronounced upon adding to or taking from the words of it.

EVIL WORKERS.

Truly the wise man hath said, Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the sons of men are fully set in them to do evil. Eccl. viii. 11.

We find this to be the case wherever we go. We find if he is not suddenly checked after his first evil deed, that man will rush on to crimes of greater magnitude, and thus endeavor to bury remorse of conscience. He will even try to drown his conscience in the fumes of strong drink. For sin and intemperance go hand in hand.

Hence the importance of training up a child in the way he should go. But alas, in these days of degeneracy we find parents, treating their pigs, with more care and attention than they do their own offspring. No wonder inspiration records of the last days thus: This know also that in the last days perilous times shall come, such treatment will surely hasten this same period spoken of by inspiration if it is not already upon us. Good and evil is or confronts every human being that comes into the world. Each life is shaped by its surroundings, and is destined for weal or woe. The responsibility resting upon parents is great indeed.

In the state of society in the last days, the inspired penman proceeds to tell us like this, For men shall be lovers of their own selves. A selfish condition, boaster. Webster says a boaster is one who boasts, glories. We might say he is one puffed up with vanity, self-conceit, self-praise. It is written, Let another praise thee, or something to that effect.

Again, the Preacher says as if to make the matter more clear, Though a sinner do evil a hundred times and his days (years) be prolonged, yet surely I know it shall be well with them that fear God, (or hate evil). But it shall not be well with the wicked, neither shall he prolong his days. The Preacher sums up the whole matter in about this language, he says, Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter. Fear God and keep his commandments, for says he this is the whole duty of man. For God shall bring every work into judgment with every secret thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil. How the novice in evil work tries to hide his faults from others, and them he cannot hide he tries to lie out of, and if he cannot lie out of these he will try to justify himself in them.

It is written to those who have ears to hear, Fret not thyself because of evil doers. The reason is like this, because evil doers shall be cut off, but those that wait upon the Lord they shall inherit the earth.

Malachi says, Behold the day of the Lord comes that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud and all that do wickedly shall be stubble, (or like dry stubble). The day cometh that shall burn them up. As the fat of lambs they shall consume, into smoke shall they consume away. And thus the wicked shall be no more, certainly the evil doer despises his own soul. Thus we see him the wicked despising his own life.

Dear friends, as true as God is true, the time will come when Jesus our Great High Priest will leave the mediatorial throne and come again to earth and bless his waiting people. O say, will he find you and me still watching and waiting when the Lord shall come. Have we been true to the trust he has given? Do we seek to do our best? Brethren I dont think when the summoning angel comes to call those who have made a covenant with God by sacrifice, that he will visit any worldly organization, any rotten political parties, any of Satan's grog shops, ball room, or any other Satanic institution. Because all his people will be found outside of such places; keep yourselves unspotted from the world.

We should see to it that we give heed to the admonition, keep yourselves unspotted from the world, far more than when we first believed. In such a day as ye think not the Son of Man comes. Hence, the importance of watching as well as waiting.

Watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation. O the tempter is lurking round, he comes in all kinds of garb to influence the unwary, the unwatchful. He says you are peculiar. He says, this thing I want you to engage with me in is harmless. Beware of him. It is written for those who have ears to hear. Come out of her, meaning, Babylon confusion. This confused state of society both religious and political. Jesus says to his disciples or to the Father, I have chosen them out of the world, and adds, Thine they are. If we are the Lord's then what fellowship can we have with unbelievers, infidels? What concord has God with Baal. Is there any difference brethren between the worship of the true and idols. Beware brethren. Remember that idolators shall have their part in the lake of fire.

If we would associate in the age to come with the pure and the good, here we must keep ourselves unspotted from the world. Our chart says that I Jesus will send in the time of Harvest and of the world the reapers, and they shall gather the tares and bind them in bundles to burn. But the wheat he will gather into his garner. We should have a care lest we be bound also among the tares. Watch and pray always. Yours in hope.

AN EXTRACT.

For the encouragement of those who wish to "search the Scriptures," perhaps it would be well to give to your readers the following from the "Approaching End of the Age." Fifth edition.

"We have seen that God has been pleased to reveal the future to men only by degrees; that both in the number of subjects on which the light of prophecy has been permitted to fall, and in the clearness and fulness of the light granted on each, there has been constant and steady increase, from the pale and solitary ray of Eden, to the clear widespread beams of Daniel, and to the rich glow of the Apocalypse."

"We now proceed to show that human comprehension of Divine prophecy has also been by degrees; and that in certain cases it was evidently intended by God to be so.

Light to understand the prophetic word, is as much a Divine gift as that word itself. The sovereignty of God was exercised in the selection of the matters to be revealed by prophecy, the time of revelation, and the individuals to whom, and through whom it should be revealed. And it is equally exercised in the determination of the degree to which, and the time at which the true meaning of certain prophecies shall be unveiled as well as the selection of the individuals to whom the interpretation shall be given.

"The Lord hath not only spoken by dreams and visions of old, but he speaketh also every day, even as often as he enlighteneth the minds of his servants, and that they may be able to search out the hidden truth of his word, and bring it forth unto the world."

Prophecy, being essentially a revelation of the future, is of course designed to be understood; but it does not follow that it is designed to be understood immediately on its being given, nor by all who become acquainted with its announcements. The Most High has various ends to answer in predicting the future; and though we may not always be able to discern his reasons for making revelations before he intends them to be comprehended, yet in some cases they are sufficiently clear.

In foretelling, for instance, the first advent of his Son, God might have been pleased to predict its results, in as clear and unmistakable a manner as he predicted the event itself. But plainly to have foretold the rejection and crucifixion of the Lord Jesus by Israel, would have been to interfere with the free agency of man; it must either have had the effect of preventing the crucifixion of Christ, or else have given the Jews a valid excuse for killing the Prince of life.

Not to have foretold the actual results at all, on the other hand, would have been to deprive Christianity of one of its main pillars of evidence, the fact that the events of the life and death of Jesus of Nazareth were predicted centuries before they took place; it would have been to give some ground for present Jewish unbelief.

The alternative was to reveal the suffering and death of Christ, but to reveal them in such a manner that "both Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles and the people of Israel," when banded together to carry out their own wicked wills, were quite unconscious that they were therein doing what his hand and his counsel had "determined before to be done."

This secured the good, and avoided the evil; the predictions were full and definite, and yet capable of being misunderstood: as a fact, they were not understood even by the disciples at first, nor are they understood to this day by the Jewish nation. They ought to have known him but because they knew him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets which are read every Sabbath day they fulfilled them in condemning him. Thus it is possible to possess prophecies of certain events, to read them diligently all our lives, and yet not to understand their fulfilment, even when it takes place before our own eyes. This is sinful unbelief; but there is a temporary inability to understand Divine predictions, which is entirely free from sin, which is inevitable and indeed ordained of God."

The End of the Age.

The New York Sunday World contained a number of letters from clergymen, on the theme, "The second coming of Christ." The Rev. A. B. Simpson, of New York, is firmly of the belief that the second appearance of Christ is near at hand, and names the year 1934 as the probable time. The Rev. A. C. Dixon, of Brooklyn, expresses in effect the same views as his co-believers in the millennial doctrine, but he does not interpret "imminent," as indicating a certain period near at hand, but as "always impending" "It may be in 3,000 years, or 300 years, or three years, or three minutes," says Dr. Dixon, "but the day and the hour of the coming no man knoweth."

Several other opinions are given, including the following by the Rev. Dr. George M. Stone, of this city, who does not altogether agree with the ideas of the Rev. Mr. Simpson:

"Two facts have conspired to prevent modern believers from giving hospitality to the New Testament teaching concerning the second appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ," says Dr. Stone "First, the vagaries and excesses of Second Adventists, who have fixed definitely upon the time of the advent; and, second, the failure to discriminate between the end of the age, or dispensation in which we live, and the consummation of all things, properly designated the end of the world. Much confusion of thought has been introduced into the general subject, by the translation of the Greek word 'aion,' meaning indefinite time, or dispensation, as 'world.' Hence the end of the age and the dissolution of the 'cosmos' have been confounded. The end of the age will precede by at least 1,000 years the end of the world. Those who intelligently apprehend this subject have no sympathy with extravagant notions of the nearness of the end of the world. The end of the world is certainly remote; the end of the age, I think, may be very near.

"A glance at Biblical history is enough to convince any reader that God has dealt with the race by time-periods, or dispensations, having sharply defined beginnings and endings. Such dispensations, characterized by special modes of Divine admonition, are the periods from the creation to the fall; from the fall to the flood; from the flood to the calling of Abraham; from the calling of Abraham to the institution of the law under Moses. We who are alive today have our allotment in another of these dispensational periods, to close with the 'parousia,' or personal and glorious appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ.

"My reasons for believing this latter event to be imminent, i. e., always impending, are: First: It is the uniform teaching of the New Testament. Much of the admonitory element in the personal teaching of our Lord himself refers directly to his appearing again. He is constantly urging to vigilance with respect to it, and warning against forgetfulness of it.

"The truth has a very unique and conspicuous place in apostolic teaching. It is sufficient proof of the prominence which it holds in the structure of the New Testament revelation, to recall the fact that in the entire book it is mentioned either directly or by implication several hundred times. The Apostle Paul connects it with nearly every phase of Christian life, practice and hope. It gives rounded fulness and symmetry to Christian character. The Apostle uses these words in his Corinthian epistle: 'So that ye come behind in no gift, waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall also confirm you unto the end, that ye may be blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ.' Writing to Thessalonian Christians, the same Apostle says: "Ye turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God: and to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus, which delivered us from the wrath to come.' With a stringent and masterful logic he binds together, in his epistle to the Colossians, the duty of practical purity of life with the hope of the coming of Christ. 'When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory. Mortify, therefore, your members which are upon the earth.' It furnished its leverage for comfort in trial, encouragement in service and hope in the shadows of a laborious career.

"My second reason for regarding the Second Advent of Christ as constantly impending, though indefinite, is that it was so regarded by Christians of the New Testament period. Their posture was one of waiting for the appearing as something certain to occur at some time, and possibly within their own lifetime. No New Testament writer asserts that it would positively take place during his day. Their posture was like that of a family whose head had gone upon a journey, the time of whose return might depend upon several contingencies. Suppose his message upon leaving them had been, 'I may be absent a year. I may return to-morrow.' The family would be looking for his return as possible any day until he did actual come.

"Hence the early Christians were not mistaken, since they did not assert more concerning the time relations of this event than that it was possible in their day. Manifestly the design of the Lord was that all generations of Christians between his ascension and Second Revelation should live under the prevalent sway of this hope. It was designed to give soberness and poise to the believer's life, and as a matter of fact did sustain it in fidelity and buoyancy under the onset of persecution. The attitude of the early church thus outlined forecloses the idea that the Second Advent must be postponed until after the millennium, or thousand years' reign of righteousness and peace on earth. The New Testament certainly does not interpose an interval of one thousand years between the early Christians and the Second Advent, since they were allowed to cherish the hope of it as imminent in their day.

"In the third place, I give hospitality to the teaching of the possibility of the appearing of the Lord in our time, for the reason that it is a powerful and perpetual stimulus to Christian activity. The best waiting is a waiting in service. 'Blessed is that servant whom his Lord when he cometh shall find so doing.' It is an event of illustrious and ineffable prestige and hope. The groaning and heartache of humanity look on the golden day it shall usher in. Men bear the travail-pains of sorrow the better for the reason that they may anticipate it."—Hartford Times.

A CONSIDERABLE number of the subscriptions to our paper have expired during September, October and November. We do not wish to cut these names off our list, believing that all will renew. Please examine your accounts and if you find you are some months back, hasten at once to send your renewal. We shall spare no pains to make THE RESTITUTION as acceptable as possible, and hope for a satisfactory return in the shape of your renewals. Cannot you also get a friend or neighbor to take it? or have you not a friend who would be benefited by reading it for a year? It would be a means of good to him if you would just subscribe for a copy for him. Perhaps you are fearful of speaking to him about our belief, and sending him the paper may open up the very avenue you wish. Use the paper as your missionary then, and pray the Father that good may result. Brethren and sisters, give us a good generous list of renewals and new names, right away. We will give you the best possible return for it that lays in our power.

DIED.

SWEET.—At Chetopa, Kan., Jan. 18, 1891, J. M. Sweet, aged 57 years and nine months.

Our brother was born in Erie Co., N. Y., April 12, 1833. There in that State he married his first wife, since dead. Unto them were born two children, both girls. From there he moved to Peoria Co., Ill., where he again was married to Margaret Hutchinson, April 8, 1860. He afterwards enlisted in the Union army to put down our rebellion. Three years he served his country in the cavalry, in which time he was thrown off a horse and received an injury which followed him during life, till he fell by the enemy death. After the war the moved to Neosho Co., Kan., where they resided till death laid him low. Unto them were born two children. In 1878 Bro. and Sr. Sweet were both baptized by the writer into the all-saving name of Jesus, in which faith he lived up to his death. Our brother selected his own text and wanted the writer to preach his funeral. He did not want a man to preach that believed that one man was two men, and the one was only the house that the other man lived in, and the one that did not die went to heaven if good and the bad one to hell. Well, brethren, I don't blame him at all, for I say the same, and I hope all the brethren will see the folly of such things. On these things I endorse Bros. J. F. Wagoner and J. S. Hatch. Talk about a funeral sermon; better say a farewell address, and that is not given until the real man has left his house and is safely dwelling in his new house, about one or two days after he is gone. Well to return to the text, Job xiv. 14. Funeral service was conducted by the writer, burial by the G. A. R. to which he belonged. Had a good attendance and good interest. Hope the result may be good and many may see their folly and yet learn that Christ, the life giver, not heathenism, brought life and immortality to light. Our brother left a dear wife, four children, many brothers and sisters, and a host of friends to mourn his death. But we need not mourn as those that have no hope. His suffering was almost too severe to endure, but he bore up under its pains till death relieved him from his suffering. Dear brethren and sisters, one more vacant seat in our ranks and church at Big Creek, and the family circle is broken and the church has one less. But we hope to meet him again in the sweet by and by. O, dear ones, one by one we go. Who will be the next one to follow? I do not know that that makes any difference, just so we are ready to get up in the resurrection morning. All are under the sentence of death. All must go sooner or later unless the Master will come. Brethren let us all take warning from these dying witnesses and live more for the Master's cause and do more in the future than we have done in the past, and less for self and the gratification of our appetites. Finally farewell brethren and sisters, one and all.

JOHN FOORE.

LENT.—At his home in Salamanca, N. Y., Dec. 30, 1890, Albert W. Lent, aged 30 years and 11 months.

His death resulted from a fall while working on the Erie round house in this place. The iron rafters fell and took the men with them, one of them falling on Mr. Lent, crushing his right leg above the knee, and otherwise injuring him. He lingered between hope and doubt, life and death, for eight days, then calmly fell asleep. He lived but six hours after his leg was amputated, and had his senses all the time. Like Hezekiah of old, he set his house in order. Prayers could not save him from the tyrant death. He was a son of Bro. John B. Lent, who lives about three miles from this place. He leaves a wife, and a son five years old. He was an affectionate husband and kind father. His parents, two brothers and sister survive him, who all feel the loss deeply. He was honored and respected by all. His father, Bro. Lent, had always endeavored to interest his children in all things concerning the kingdom of God and the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. He lived an exemplary life, and died, we trust, believing in God.

To the Brethren in Nebraska and Iowa.

I expect if the Lord will, to make a tour this winter into Nebraska and Iowa and if any of the readers of THE RESTITUTION in Northern Kan., Neb., or Iowa would like to have me call their way and talk about the signs of the soon coming of the Lord and his kingdom, if they will write to me soon I will try and arrange to visit them. Address me at Council Grove, Kan., and if I am on the way it will be forwarded to me.

SUBMISSION.

Since thy Father's arm sustain's thee,
Peaceful be;
When a chastening hand restrains thee,
It is he.
Know his love in full completeness,
Feel the measure of thy weakness!
If he wound thy spirit sore,
Trust him more.

Without murmur, uncomplaining,
In his hand
Leave whatever things thou canst not Understand.
Though the world thy folly spurneth,
From thy faith in pity turneth,
Peace thy inmost soul shall fill,
Lying still.

Like an infant, if thou thinkest
Thou canst stand—
Child-like, proudly pushing back
The proffered hand—
Courage soon is changed to fear,
Strength doth feebleness appear;
In his love if thou abide,
He will guide.

Fearest sometimes that thy Father
Hath forgot?
Though the clouds around thee gather,
Doubt him not.
Always hath the daylight broken,
Always hath he comfort spoken,
Better hath he been for years
Than thy fears.

Therefore, whatsoe'er betideth,
Night or day,
Know his love for thee provideth
Good alway.
Crown of sorrows gladly take,
Grateful wear it for his sake,
Sweetly bending to his will,
Saying still,—

To his own the Savior giveth
Daily strength;
To each troubled soul that boweth,
Peace at length.
Weakest lambs have largest share
Of the tender Shepherd's care—
Ask him not then, "When?" or "How?"
Only bow.

The Immortality of Man Brought to Light by Human Reason.

Death has been at work in this place of late rather more than usual, and the clergy on one side in their funeral discourses have preached the immortality of the soul for consolation; on the other side the Adventist preacher has stoutly denied the doctrine, and preached that immortality is God's gift through Jesus Christ to be bestowed upon the righteous in the resurrection at the coming of Jesus. Before the minds of the people become settled a great lecturer comes into the place and delivers a philosophical discourse upon the great question. The writer had a curiosity to hear the wonderful man upon the interesting subject. The following are the main points in the argument.

Man is a dual being, consisting of body and spirit. Matter has the properties of weight, extension, attraction and repulsion.

Spirit, which is the "ego" or person, has the power to think, to feel, and to will. "I think, and I know that I think; I feel, and I know that I feel; I will, and I know that I will. I am conscious of my existence." "I know that I am one. The matter of the body changes but the "ego" remains the same. It is a spiritual atom, indivisible, and therefore indestructible.

The mind can put itself so strongly in the line of thought as to be unconscious of feeling; it can put itself so strongly in the line of willing as to be unconscious of feeling. A blow on the head may cause a person to be unconscious, but does not prove that the operations of the mind are suspended, or that there is no mind. In old age the mind is so much taken up with the aches and pains of the decaying body that it does not think vigorously, yet it has the same power as ever to think.

Man's desire for immortality proves that immortality was designed for him, just as the instinct of the bee for honey proves that there is honey for him in the flowers.

Man has not time in this life to develop into a perfect man; so there must be another life in which to complete the work of development. The invisibility of the soul is no proof against its existence. Thought is invisible; "all force is invisible."

When the spirit is separated from the body it can see the spiritual world, which is far more grand than the material world. The resurrection is necessary to bring the soul into connection with the material world again. The body will be spiritualized, and then we can see both worlds at the same time.

I have given the main arguments of this wonderful thinker, but not his exact words, nor the order in which his thoughts were expressed. The order was:

1. A statement of the subject, and the properties of matter and spirit.

2. A statement of the three objections to the immortality of the soul; (a) A blow on the head may cause unconsciousness; (b) The mind loses its power with the decay of the body in old age; (c) The invisibility of the soul.

3. An attempt to answer the objections.

4. Three proofs of immortality; (a) The indivisibility of the soul; (b) Man's desire for immortality; (c) Full development not reached in this short life.

These thoughts and arguments were expanded and illustrated in the lecturer's own peculiar style. In the concluding part of his speech he gave his belief concerning the state of the soul when separated from the body, and the reason why the soul is after awhile to have a body again.

We are now prepared to examine this doctrine and the reasons presented to prove it. And first I wish to say, if we had no revelation from our Creator, we might listen to such discourses with some satisfaction, and perhaps exclaim, as one did concerning Plato: "It must be so." Prather, (the lecturer is J. H. Prather) "thou reasonest well, else why this shrinking back from death, this dread of falling into nought; this longing after immortality." But having the Scriptures of truth such speculations appear foolish and vain—"the wisdom of the world which is foolishness with God." Life and incorruptibility are brought to light in the gospel, not in human philosophy. How long before the "Rev'ds." will learn this?

The arguments if they prove anything prove too much. They prove the immortality of the "beasts that perish."

The properties of matter are weight, extension, attraction and repulsion. The properties of spirit are thought, feeling and volition. The lower animals feel and have will power; therefore have each of them a spirit. Spirit is indivisible and indestructible. They have an instinctive desire to live: therefore they will live. Millions of them lose their bodies before they are fully developed; therefore there must be a future life for them. Many of them can think to a certain extent, and thought being a property of spirit all of them ought to be able to think, as according to the argument they all have spirits. If spirit is indivisible, each soul, a "spiritual atom," spirit cannot generate spirit. And as matter cannot generate spirit, souls are not brought into existence by generation, whether human souls or beast souls. Then either they have existed from eternity, or God created them all by a direct exertion of power. If the latter, he either created them all at once and has them ready for bodies, or else he creates them for bodies whenever bodies are to be produced.

But how are bodies produced? Let it be distinctly understood that, according to this philosophy there can be no life without spirit, no life in matter without the presence of spirit, and spirit is indivisible. "Like produces like." The body therefore should produce the body. But the body cannot act without the spirit. The spirit cannot produce another spirit. A new body cannot be produced without a new spirit to be its life. Therefore God must bring forward a new spirit by creation, or a spirit that was created in the beginning, in order to produce a new body. From these premises it follows that there can be no generation without the direct interference of the Almighty. Now we are persuaded that the Creator when he created man and the lower animals, gave them the power of procreation or reproduction, and therefore it is not necessary for him to create a soul or spirit-atom in order that a new body may be produced and have a soul to dwell in it and operate through it, or to bring forward a soul already created. So then, if spirit has the properties of thinking, feeling, and willing, it must be divisible, so that spirit can beget spirit.

All the evidence that this philosopher produced to prove the indivisibility of spirit, was the evidence from consciousness. Each person is conscious that he is one person, not two. This is not very strong. I am conscious that I am one, but I am not conscious that my substance is indivisible. I am not conscious of being an atom nor of being an assemblage of atoms. I am conscious of the operations of my mind, my thoughts, my sensations, my volitions, and voluntary actions. As the mind has several distinct powers and faculties, it would certainly be as logical to conclude that it is a compound substance as to conclude that it is simple and indivisible.

Man's desire for immortality is no proof that he is immortal now, but rather proof to the contrary. What we have we do not desire to obtain. We may desire to continue in possession of it, if there is any danger of losing it; but we do not desire to come into possession of it. I have my eyesight, I do not desire it, I desire to have it continued. I do not desire to live in this present moment. I desire to continue to live. I do not desire to continue to live without a body, but to live as a whole being, mind and body. This desire does not prove that I am an immortal soul, but when God, my Creator, offers me immortality through his Son, Jesus the Christ, this desire for eternal life induces me to accept Jesus as my Savior from death and corruptibility. This is the reason why the desire for eternal life is implanted in the human mind. The gospel makes the matter plain.

The fact that man does not attain to perfection in this life may be taken as an evidence that another life is intended for him, but is no proof that the soul is immortal by virtue of its original creation. The proofs being disposed of the imaginations built upon them are also set aside. There is no evidence of a "spiritual universe" as distinct from the material universe. Reasoning from the speaker's premises, every spirit is a "spiritual atom" that thinks, and feels, and wills. Then there can be no spiritual sun and moon and stars, unless living, conscious, spiritual atoms are such. And here we will take our leave of this modern Platonic philosopher.

WE most sincerely hope that those friends whom we have trusted, at their solicitation, and whose promise to pay has been in our hands for some time, will at once redeem these pledges by renewing their subscriptions. It is quite an expense to make out statements of these accounts, and the postage is a big item. The price of our paper is lowered this year, and every little leak is felt. Please give us no more anxiety on this score, but renew at once.

A popular work on the sacred literature of India, entitled "Hindu Literature, or the Ancient Books of India," by Mrs. Elisabeth A. Reed, has been issued by S. C. Griggs & Co., Chicago. This volume treats of Hindu literature, from the earliest songs of the Aryan race to the writings of mediæval days. With admirable simplicity and directness the author reviews the labors of Sanskrit scholars in this vast field of literature, and then gives a clear, concise survey of the great Indian epics, whose character and scope are illustrated by copious extracts.

Her work has elicited the cordial interest of such authorities as Prof. Max Muller and Sir Monier Williams, and the latter has done her the high honor of revising the chapter on "Krishna." On the important topics which it discusses the book maintains a distinctly Christian attitude, and effectually disposes of the claims of equality with our sacred Scriptures, so often urged for the sacred books of India.

It will be a book of over 400 pages, printed in the best style, on fine paper, price $2.00. Friends desiring this work will send orders direct to Mrs. Reed at 41 Seeley Ave., Chicago, Ill. Orders may be sent at once as above.

All persons addressing us should give their name, Post Office, County and State plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution," Plymouth, Marshall Co. Ind.

Remittances should be sent by Bank Draft, Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, or Registered Letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk; money loose in letters is at the risk of the sender.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "The Restitution."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have, and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring your address changed, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above, you will save us much annoyance, and your orders will be much more promptly attended to.

TAKE NOTICE OF THIS.

REDUCED TO $1.50.

The price of THE RESTITUTION has been reduced to $1.50. This makes it necessary to do as nearly as possible a CASH business.

This reduction is made at the solicitation of many friends who have thought the price too high—not that they could not pay it—but in asking others to take the paper they were met with the objection of the high price. We confidently hope now the reduction is made that all our patrons will make an effort and try and increase our list to at least double what it is. Let each one now taking it get one more subscriber and this is accomplished. If you are interested in THE RESTITUTION, work for it a little now. If there is any family in your church that is not visited by it, urge them to try it [illegible].

The short margin, owing to the reduced price, will allow nothing to enable us to keep open accounts. If you pay promptly we can do the same, and live at peace with all men. Some will plead that they can pay better some months in the future than now. We do not wish to doubt your word, and do not, but you must remember we are totally unacquainted with you, and while we might if we personally knew you be willing to trust you, we are not ABLE FINANCIALLY to carry your account. We therefore suggest that you borrow the $1.50 from some friend at home, and that will shift the burden of your account to some one else. Thus the load will be distributed to many instead of put on one, and will be much easier borne.

The poor, those who from age or infirmities, are totally unable to pay for their paper, we will still do as we have always done, send it free. To enable us to do this we depend largely on the voluntary donations of our kind friends, those who are interested, and fully alive, working all the time and with their means in the Master's vineyard. Their reward is sure, and the blessings of the aged and infirm, to whom they have sent papers and tracts, will be no mean recommendation in the last day.

"A Discourse on Foundation Work," considered physically, morally and religiously, is the title of a 32 page tract, written by R. McLauchlan of Cleveland, Ohio. The Author has supplied us with a large quantity of these pamphlets, which we will be pleased to mail to all who desire them, at 5 cents each. The usual price of tracts this size is 10 cents. In this case the desire of the Author is to secure a wide circulation for these works and so do good, hence the price is put at the cost of the postage and handling them. No better opportunity can be given to secure good solid reading to hand to the uninstructed. Don't let these works remain long on our shelves, but send them out on their mission of love.

PINE WOODS BIBLE CLASS, NO. 20.

Leader. Under the blessing of God we are all on hand for duty once more.

We will open our exercises by singing hymn No. 369.

"Once more we come, God's Word to hear,
The Word so pure and holy;
Now grant us Lord, a list'ning ear,
A spirit meek and lowly;
For if we hear and heed it not,
We hear for condemnation;
For doers of the Word we're taught,
Are heirs of Christ's Salvation."

Leader. Of late many anxious inquiries have been made as to "what constitutes the mark of the beast" mentioned in Rev. xiii. 16?

I will ask Elias to tell us why these inquirers are so anxious to learn what the "mark of the beast" will be?

Elias. It is because it is an exceedingly important topic.

Leader. Tell us why it is important?

Elias. Because the issue of life and death attach to it.

Leader. That of a truth is an important reason. Please cite Bible proof.

Elias. Rev. xx. 4, shows that by refusing to worship the "beast" or "his image," or to receive either his "mark" or his "number" they will lay themselves liable to be beheaded. I will read it to the class: "And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years." I will read also Rev. xiii. 15: "And he had power to give life unto the image of the beast, that the image of the beast should both speak, and cause that as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed."

Leader. The death spoken of in these texts is temporal death received on account of refusing to obey the orders of "the beast." I will ask Arlos to tell us what God's judgment will be in the case of those who do receive "his mark?"

Arlos. I will read to the Class Rev. xiv. 9–12: "And the third angel followed them, saying with a loud voice, If any man worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand, the same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb. And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever: and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the beast and his image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name. Here is the patience of the saints: here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus."

The above testimony shows that those who do receive "the mark of the beast," are to be "tormented," "drink of the wine of the wrath of God," and finally be cast into "the lake of fire"—"which is the second death."

In either case terrible indeed will be the trial when "the beast" issues through the "false prophet," his dreadful proclamation. It will be one of the events of "the great tribulation."

The Class by this time will readily comprehend the importance of knowing what "the mark of the beast" will be.

Leader. It is very simple and easy to understand. Confusion has been wrought in the minds of the people by neglecting to discern between symbols which differ.

I will ask Albert to tell us what power commands the "mark" to be received?

Albert. "The beast."

Leader. Whose mark is it?

Albert. "The mark of the beast."

Leader. Have we any Scripture warrant for calling the sign of the cross used by the "woman"—Popery the "mark of the beast?"

Albert. I used to think the sign of the cross the mark of the beast, but am somewhat doubtful now.

Leader. As we have found from the Scriptures that "the mark" belongs to "the beast," and it is "the beast" itself which commands the people to receive it. What right has anyone to transfer all this to "the woman" which rides "the beast?"

Albert. Certainly no one has a right to misapply Scripture in that manner, but I must say this gives me new light. I really thought the sign of the cross used by "the woman," was the "mark of the beast." I did not really notice that the language is only applicable to the "beast," and not to "the woman" which rides "the beast." There is truly a great difference between the beast and its rider.

Lucy. I certainly thought as Albert did.

Lud. And so did I.

Carrie. This teaches me to read Scripture with more care.

Agnes. And me too. Looking for prophecy to be fulfilled by characters to which it does not apply must result in error and confusion.

Leader. Rev. xvii. 7, 8, shows a difference between "the woman" and "the beast that carrieth her." It also reveals three changes with regard to "the beast" before it finishes its career. I will read it: "And the angel said unto me, Wherefore didst thou marvel? I will tell thee the mystery of the woman, and of the beast that carrieth her, which hath the seven heads and ten horns. The beast that thou sawest was, and is not; and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition: and they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is."

The last phase of the beast is signified by the words: "yet is." He will also blaspheme God, and terribly persecute the saints and command worship to be given him. See Rev. xiii. 3–8. Speaking of the rise of the ten horned beast it says: "And I saw one of his heads as it were wounded to death; and his deadly wound was healed: and all the world wondered after the beast. And they worshipped the dragon which gave power unto the beast: and they worshipped the beast, saying, Who is like unto the beast? who is able to make war with him? And there was given unto him a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies; and power was given unto him to continue forty and two months, (three years and a half.) And he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme his name, and his tabernacle, and them that dwell in heaven. And it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them: and power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations. And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain, from the foundation of the world."

The sixteenth verse of this same chapter shows that the "false prophet" symbolized by "the two-horned beast," will issue the command "to worship the first beast whose deadly wound was healed (ver. 11, 12) and command the reception of the "mark" of the ten horned beast. "And he causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads: And that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark (the word "or" is not in the original Greek) or the name of the beast, or the number of his name."

The time relates to a period when the seventh head of the ten horned beast shall revive, and not now.

His power will be over "all kindreds, and tongues, and nations," (Ver. 7) "and he causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark." History furnishes no literal fulfilment of this prophecy.

To brand with a mark has been the custom of those who worshipped heathen gods. Daniel, Thessalonians, and Revelation, show that he will claim to be more than a god. He will even blaspheme the God of heaven and claim to be his superior. He will demand worship. His brand will simply be a mark acknowledging him as god.

It was a custom of the ancient Romans to stamp the name, or the hieroglyphic mark of their deity or emperor upon their hands or foreheads. Romulus. Julius Cæsar, and Augustus Cæsar were worshipped as gods.

Sometimes a brand was used as a sign of citizenship, as in the case of "Ptolemy Philopater who ordered all Jews applying to be enrolled as citizens of Alexandria, to have the form of an ivy leaf, the badge of Bacchus, to be impressed upon them with a hot iron, under pain of death."

Greek scholars inform us that the word "mark" in Rev. xiii. 16, means literally: "a Sculpture—a mark cut in or impressed."

The mark the "beast" will require the people to receive is his own "name." See Rev. xiii. 16, 17: "And he causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads; and that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name."

In the original Greek the word "or" between the words "mark" and "the name," does not appear in verse 17. Hence it would read: "That no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark,—the name of the beast." Thus "the mark" is "the name of the beast." Rev. xiv. 11, calls it "The mark of his name."

As to the "number of the name" I quote you an extract: "The number of a man's name denoted among the Hebrews, Greek and Romans, the sum total of the numerical values of the letters composing his name. In the languages of those ancient nations the letters of the alphabet were used as numerals just as if in the English language denoted respectively

a	b	c	d	e	f	g	h	i	j	k	l	m	n	o
1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10	20	30	40	50	60	etc

So that on this principle the English name John would represent j 10, o 60, h 8, n 50, and the sum total of these figures added together, amounting to 128, would be the number of the name John. Thus the name of the coming Antichrist, the seventh-eighth head of the revived beast when counted up will amount to 666. Before we can "count his name," we must wait until he appears, and learn what his name is.

Numbers of people can be found whose names, when counted up amount to 666, so every one can have an Antichrist to suit himself. Antichrist will be known not only by this, but by his claim to be God. A remarkable passage appears in an ancient book called the "Ascension of Isaiah," as follows: "Then shall the whole world believe in him (Antichrist;) they shall serve him saying, he is God, and besides him there is no other God, and the power of his prodigies shall be displayed in every city and country. In every city also shall his image be erected."

Leader. I have occupied a large portion of your time to-day, but I trust the matter presented will be profitable.

Let us sing hymn No. 290.

"I am trusting Thee to guide me,
Thou alone shalt lead;
Every day and hour supplying
All my need."

WM. H. WILSON.

"Shall We Know Each Other There?"

BY REQUEST OF BROTHER P. H. BOUK.

Dear Brother, you ask if I believe that the people of God will recognize each other in Resurrection Life? It is not safe to believe without evidence; but it is easy to be persuaded of that which we wish to believe. I know very little on the subject; but my answer is:—"I THINK they will," because

1st. The grand central truth about which all God's truth revolves, is The Second coming of our Lord and Life-giver. He is the sample sheaf of the great harvest of Redeemed ones. As the eyes of Cleopas and his companion were holden that they should not recognize him, they would have recognized him had they not been holden.

2nd. The people of God will see him and be made like Him. 1 John iii. 2. He will be the center of attraction to them; they will sing to him who has washed them in his blood and made them kings and priests to God. Rev. v. 9, 10. And when we reflect that he is the Head of the Body, the members of which they are, it would be strange if the very closest intimacy did not exist between them; and doubly strange when we reflect that each preserves his own identity and carries it with him—that is, does not become some one else.

3rd. Jesus informs us that the sight of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and all the prophets in the kingdom of God will cause [illegible] ones to gnash their [illegible] cation. And that [illegible] from all points of the compass [illegible] come and sit down with these ancients. Is not this said as an inducement for us to secure seats with that august company? And if those who are rejected recognize them, will not the accepted guests?

4thly. Imagine if you can the twelve apostles, seated upon twelve thrones, ruling the twelve adjacent tribes (Matt. xix. 28) and not recognizing each other. Imagine them all seated at the table of the Great King (Luke xxii: 30) and not recognizing each other.

5thly. Job will know his Redeemer and his Redeemer will know him. And it will be a source of sadness I think, if I cannot recognize him and the great cloud of witnesses whose memories I now cherish, and whose faith and love, and fortitude I faintly strive to emulate. And when I catch a glimpse of that company through David's telescope (Ps. cxlv. 10-13) as they praise the great Jehovah, and speak of the glory of his kingdom, and talk of his power, and make known to the sons of men his mighty acts, and the glorious majesty of his kingdom, I have little doubt about recognizing them, if I ever get there. It seems to me that the thrill of immortality will enable me to pick up the threads of love just where the enemy snapped them asunder.

6thly. Paul and Silvanus and Timotheus told the beloved Thessalonians that they will be their joy and crown of rejoicing in the presence of the Lord Jesus Christ at his coming. There could be no doubt of recognition in that case, see 1 Thess. ii. 19. And in Philippians ii. 15, 16, the apostle enjoins them to be blameless, and harmless, the sons of God without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world, holding forth the word of life, That I may rejoice in the day of Christ, that I have not run in vain, neither labored in vain." Consult also 1 Cor. xiii: 12.

7thly. Attention is invited to 1 Thess. iv. 13 to 18 inclusive. The church at Thessalonica are told not to sorrow as those who have no hope, because, even as Jesus died and rose again, so God will bring with Jesus all who sleep in him. There is no danger of their being forgotten; their case receives the first attention. The Lord himself superintends the harvest. The trump of God and the archangel's voice, wakes them from their slumbers, and the dead in Christ rise first, —then the living are changed, and together they are caught away to be forever with the Lord. Oh, no; you must not sorrow as do others; you will meet again, meet never to sever; shout all your suffering over, all your trials ended, and all tears wiped away; "Wherefore, comfort one another with these words;" they are true; they depict the future for you as it will be. Take them home to your troubled bosoms. They contain just the medicine you need; it is prescribed by the Great Physician, who has thoroughly diagnosed your case. Yes; "comfort one another with these words." I do not know after all, dear brother, but what I can now say, "YES; I BELIEVE" "the people of God will recognize each other in Resurrection Life."

Lastly, Let us not forget, that pleasing as this thought is, the Spirit has not seen fit to say much about it. It is very significant that not enough has been said to distract our minds or obscure the vision of the coming Lord of Life and glory. We do not have to search long for proof that He is coming, or infer that we shall know Him, if among the faithful. No; his name shall be in our forehead; we shall see his face,—we shall hear his voice,—Yes; the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed us, and lead us to living fountains of water, and God shall wipe away all our tears." That the grand and general assembly may soon take place is my fervent prayer.

M. JOBLIN.

PROBATION.

Probation, according to Webster, signifies "the act of proving." It is often said that men are "on probation," and that probation ends at death, or when Christ comes. In "human probation" the thing to be proved is the worthiness of human beings to have eternal life, or their fitness for an eternal existence. But is it necessary for human beings to be put on probation to prove to God their fitness for an eternal existence? So far as fitness is concerned, God knows that without trial; but worthiness cannot exist without a development of character, and character cannot be developed without trial under law.

Adam was placed under law, and soon proved himself unworthy of the priceless gift of life, and of the dominion over the earth which God had given him. Accordingly God sentenced him to die. He being the head and representative of the race, in his trial the race was tried, and in his sentence the race was condemned. "By one man sin entered into the world and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men, in whom all sinned." (Marg.) Rom. v. 12. "As in Adam all die." 1 Cor. xv. 22. There could be no further trial only as connected with a remedial system. God's plan was to institute a system of redemption and regeneration. With this system human probation is connected.

By his spirit he produced out of the seed of the woman a son of man, who being put on trial under law developed a character every way lovely and worthy of honor, glory and immortality. He was obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. God the Father marked him out to be his Son according to the spirit of sanctification by raising him from among the dead. He, Jesus, is the first begotten of a family of sons of God to be developed out of Adam's family. On what principle is this divine family developed? I answer, On the principle of faith proved [probated] by trial. Is this correct, or is it not? If it is not, faith is unnecessary to salvation. The Scriptures teach that faith is necessary. "The just one shall live by faith." Rom. i. 17. This was true of Jesus the first begotten, who is preeminently "the just one." It is true also of his brethren, justified on account of his faith by faith in him. Rom. i. 22. What then is to be "proved" in probation under the Gospel? It is the genuineness of faith. How is the genuineness of faith proved? Answer, by works or deeds. "As the body without breath is dead so faith without works is dead." James ii. 26. Works are not the life of faith but the result and evidence of faith. A genuine faith is a living faith, a "faith that works by love," and "purifies the heart." Gal. v. 6; Acts xv. 9. "Show me thy faith without works and I will show thee my faith by my works." James ii. 18. Faith then is the basis of the character of the sons of God. Where faith cannot exist the character can not exist. Faith comes by hearing the word of God. Rom. x. 17.

Those who never heard God's word and never had the written word are destitute of faith. What is there then in them to be proved? God placed Israel on trial under law and their conduct proved them incapable of developing a spotless character so as to be justified by the law. No other nation would have done any better if placed under law. Where is the evidence then that the nations were on trial during the ages of the law, seeing the law was not given to them? They were left to walk in the vanity of their minds, having their understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God by the ignorance that was in them. Eph. iv. 17, 18. This was the condition of the Gentile world when the Gospel was first preached to them in order to the "obedience of faith;" Rom. i. 1-5; xvi. 26, that is, that having faith they might develop a character to be approved. Those who hearing the Gospel rejected it proved themselves unworthy of eternal life. Men were not put on trial for eternal life until they heard the gospel. Millions have died in this age without hearing it. Add these millions to all the millions of of Gentiles who lived and died before the gospel was preached to men, and you have a mighty host of human beings who died in helpless, hopeless, ignorance. Strange that thoughtful men who study the Bible can believe that those millions were on probation. If they were on probation God put them in that state. How could he put them on trial and not communicate his will to them? Could they in their ignorance work out a character that he would approve as constituting them worthy and fit to live eternally in his kingdom? What standard would they be judged by? Certainly not by any standard that has been revealed. When the gospel was preached to them they were all under condemnation: All had sinned and fallen short of the glory of God: Rom. iii. 23. and the gospel revealed to them the only way of salvation which was by faith in Jesus Christ. They were condemned in Adam. The gospel justified all who put faith in Christ. Their faith was to be proved by obedience. This was their probation. Those who did not believe the gospel could scarcely be reckoned as being on probation. Condemned already before the gospel saluted their ears, and not accepting God's gracious offer of pardon in Jesus, they remained under condemnation with their guilt made known by the word of God. Where the gospel was preached the great principles of the law were exhibited, showing men their obligation to serve God and love their fellowmen. Whatever they thought about Jesus these principles appealed to their reason and to their consciences and laid the foundation for a future judgment. The times of ignorance God winked at, but now commanded all men everywhere to repent, because he had appointed a day in which he will judge the world by that man whom he ordained in whom he offered assurance to all men in that he raised him from the dead. [Acts xvii. 31] Though they who heard the gospel and believed it not were put on probation for eternal life, yet their relation to God's judgment was changed by the proclamation of the gospel and the establishment of Christianity in their midst. This is the judgment [the ground of it] that light has come into the world, and men love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil. John iii. 19. Apply these principles to the present generation and consider the question of the extent of human probation.

There are millions yet in ignorance of the gospel, who consequently have not been commanded to "repent." According to what has been shown they are not on probation. Does probation end with them when they die? If Christ were to come to-day would probation end with them? How could it end with them before beginning? Are they to be punished with everlasting destruction without trial and without the offer of mercy? And yet Christ died for them? Still they cannot be benefitted by the sacrifice! Why can they not? Because the good news of salvation never reached their ears. God in his boundless love never sent it to them. Why not? Could he not find messengers enough to send? Who will say that? Why did he not send the gospel to the millions who have died in ignorance of God's grace? Let those who deny future probation answer.

A "second chance" is objected to. But the millions already spoken of who lived and died in ignorance never had any chance except what the race had in Adam in whose failure all were condemned. A second chance was provided for in Christ; but it comes through faith in him, and faith in him is impossible without hearing the gospel. The gospel must come from God, authorized by him and sealed by the blood of Jesus, to give it force and efficacy. The fact that God did not send it to them is proof that they had no opportunity to avail themselves of the redemption that is in Christ Jesus.

Either God intended that they should have an opportunity to avail themselves of the salvation provided in Christ, or he did not. If he did, that opportunity so far as they are concerned is in the future. If he did not, Christ did not die for them; and having returned to dust under the Eden sentence, in the dust they will remain. If Christ did not pay the price of their redemption there is no future life for them, and they cannot be released from the grave. Death holds them forever by virtue of the Eden law. There is no other law applicable in their case. Understanding not they are like the beasts that perish. [Ps. xlix. 10.] Nothing given to them, nothing of them required. They sinned without law. [Rom. ii, 12] I do not say that God intended that they should not have an opportunity. I leave this mighty question for greater minds to decide if they can. But as I read the Scriptures there is another age in which Israel and the nations will have grand opportunities of blessing under the reign of the Mechisedek high-priest, who will sit on David's throne in Jerusalem and rule the nations righteously.

"And in mercy shall the throne be established, and he shall sit upon it in truth in the tabernacle of David, judging, and seeking judgment and hasting righteousness." Is. xvi. 5. "Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles to take out of them a people for his name. And to this agree the words of the prophets, as it is written. After this I will return and build again the tabernacle of David that is fallen, and set it up, that the residue of men may seek after God and all the Gentiles upon whom my name is called. Acts xv. 14-16. All the ends of the earth shall remember and turn unto the Lord, and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before thee, for the kingdom is Yahveh's.'

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortality of the righteous, and the final destruction of wicked: eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and Immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

A Guided Word.

One evening as Newman Hall was preaching in London to a crowded congregation, somewhat aside from his usual manner he was treating his theme in a calm and even philosophic or scientific way. Suddenly the thought flashed through his mind, this is not what some one here may need. In an instant, and with a sort of undefined inspiration, he broke abruptly from the train of thought which he had been following, and exclaimed in some such words as these: "Perhaps there may be some poor wanderer all hopeless under the sway of intoxicating liquor who has strayed in here tonight. Perhaps he has reached the point where he is just ready, and on the way to take his own life as a refuge from the horrible bondage. To such a one I call, O poor and lost one, Christ is waiting to help and save. He can, he will save and help if you but will now call upon him in your trouble and sinfulness." Having made this sudden appeal he resumed his discourse.

Some weeks afterward his assistant came to him and said: "I have just met a very interesting and even strange case in my visitings. I have found a poor woman, evidently near her end. She has been dissipated, and her disease is probably the result of her excesses, but she seems to be having a good hope in Jesus Christ, clearly resting on his salvation. She tells me this story. On a week-night some months since she was on her way, in her despair and agony, to one of the bridges with a fixed determination to cast herself into the river. As she went toward the bridge she passed the door of our chapel. Seeing it lighted and hearing your voice she stopped, and stood at the door. Just then you looked up and spoke to her as if you knew what was in her mind; told her of the Lord Jesus, and urged her to come to him. She knew that you spoke to her, and she took the message to her heart. She seems by it to have been led to embrace him as her Saviour, and to be peacefully waiting till he shall take her to himself."—Christian Commonwealth.

Dear Restitution:

I have been trying amid many difficulties to live a Christian life. The accuser has laid many snares to ensnare me as I journey on in the narrow way, but I thank the Giver of all good, that I still have a disposition to press on. Pray for me that I be enabled to press on to the mark of the high calling. The prize that is above all rubies. I am looking for that blessed hope. The glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ, who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity and purify unto himself a peculiar people zealous of good works. I want to be saved from this evil world. Deliverance from the evil. I want a crown of life when the chief-shepherd shall appear. I want to reign with Jesus when He comes. I want to be found looking for Him when He comes, for it is written, unto them that look for Him, He shall appear the second time without sin unto salvation. I want to be one among those that wait for God's Son from heaven, who shall change the body of our humiliation, and fashion it like his own glorious body, I want to be like Jesus when He comes.

The fashion of this world, age, passes away, but that Divine fashion will never fade. Will never wear out. I need your prayers. Pray for me, that as in time past I may receive power to overcome. That I may be enabled to continue to seek for glory, honor, incorruptibility. To all who do patiently seek these things God will render eternal life.

I want a share in the everlasting kingdom. Eternal life will be given the inheritors of that kingdom, crowns of glory will be given us, and garments that will make us shine like the sun. There will be no pain or death. The owner of that place will wipe away all tears, no more sorrow nor sighing. There we shall see men, that by the world were cut in pieces, burned in flames, eaten by beasts, drowned in the seas, for the love they bore to Jehovah and each other, all well, alive, and clothed with immortality, as with a garment. Let us so walk in this life that we may all meet there. What a meeting it will be. I am seeking an inheritance incorruptible undefiled and that fadeth not away. It is laid up in heaven. It is safe there. In this world nothing is safe, or sure. These treasures are kept there for you, who are kept by the power of God, through faith, unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time. The last time is rapidly approaching. Soon the judgments of Jehovah will encircle the earth. Soon the nations will be called to the judgment. Will be weighed in the balance, and as the head of gold they will be found wanting. Soon it will be said by him who has the right to say gather my saints together those who have made covenant with me by sacrifice. It is my determination to so live by the help of my Heavenly Father and by your prayers so as to be gathered with the saints in the great gathering. I want to be among those who are raised changed at the sound of the trump. When the dead in Christ are raised I want to be clothed upon with incorruptibility. If we never meet here let us all strive to meet in the kingdom of God. Yours in hope,

Henderson Murphy.

Dear Restitution:

The department of The Restitution devoted to our social meeting is one of the most interesting features of our highly valued paper. I think we ought to do our part to keep it well filled. Many have written and given us words of advice and encouragement and our hearts have been warmed and our strength renewed, but there are many others from whom we have not heard. Let us not forget that in olden times they that feared the Lord spake often one to another and a book of remembrance was kept, and then we have that blessed assurance the Lord says they shall be mine. It is over thirty years since I obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine delivered unto us, and I still feel determined by God's grace to make my calling and election sure, but when I look over my past life I am led to say can the Lord say of me, well done thou good and faithful servant. Solemn thought, he will never say so unless it is true. Let us see to it that we walk worthy of our high calling redeeming the time seeing that the days are evil. If the Lord does not soon come many of us will be called upon to sleep the sleep of death, and let us so order our lives while they are spared that we may hear that blessed summons, come ye blessed of my Father inherit the kingdom prepared for you.

I cannot afford to do without the good Restitution.

I do enjoy the contents of the letter drawers. Quite a number of the signatures are familiar to me, knowing them in childhood. I wonder if Brother Hatch's daughter "Zora" (we called her then) remembers, while traveling with her father, of stopping at Rochester, Ind. with a good Brother and Sister where there were four romping little girls. I am one of the four. Away off all alone, I have not heard a word of the True faith from the pulpit for more than twelve years. I know that I would appreciate it more now than I did then, but the seed of truth was sown then, and these are they which are sown in good ground; such as hear the Word and receive it, and bring forth fruit, some thirty fold, some sixty, and some an hundred. I ask that the brothers and sisters will remember me in their prayers, that I may have strength to over come all deceitful cares, and other things that enter the heart to choke the word.

I would like to write more but fear I have occupied the allotted space. I want to have my lamp trimmed and burning when the Lord comes, that I may be one in his kingdom. There may I meet you all.

Mrs. C. Phillips.

Editor Restitution:

The last paper brings the long expected news of Bro. Chaplin's death. My tears of sorrow, and of joy are mingled with those that weep for departed loved ones. It is sad to know that death still reigns the king of terrors! But it is a joy to know, that the dead are free from all pain, and will soon rise to live again, to die no more forever! Bro. Chaplin was born the same year and the same month that I was, June 1809. Bro. Lyon was born the same year, and now they both sleep in Jesus in the silent grave, while I still live, and hope to live till Jesus comes and never die! May we all hold fast the profession of our faith a little longer, and then meet to part no more forever. Amen.

S. Adams.

Dear Restitution:

Time is carrying us onward o'er lifes uneven plane. We are noting the landmarks and rejoice as they appear in sight each one giving new promise of Him who is to come and fill the earth with righteous rule. The world is distressed and perplexities arise on every side which baffle the wisdom of political government to untangle. Joy and sorrow still mingle their smiles and tears, down from pride and ambition's lofty height mighty ones are falling. The death angel calls, and royal robes are changed for the pall and bier.

Let us who are waiting for the coming of the Lord in power and great glory be up and doing making our house ready, and though our loved ones fall asleep and nature mourns, for we cannot make "death other than death" let us be thankful for the promise of awaking in His likeness. May our hope reach beyond this vale of pain and anguish, yet may we so live in this world that we may be worthy to behold the immortal grandeur of the world to come and share with the honored saints its blessings. We feel the good influence which the Restitution unfolds in its columns of unadulterated Gospel Truth and thankful for its weekly visits,

Mrs. G. W. Merwin.

Dear Restitution:

I wish to express my heartfelt thanks to the dear brethren and sisters for there many words of cheer and comfort that great my eyes and encourage my poor fainting heart from week to week. It causes my heart to leap for joy to know we are almost home and Jesus is soon coming. O what joyful news. Come dear Lord, come quickly is my earnest prayer. How glad we all shall be who have been waiting for Him will be to see his sign appear and him coming in the clouds of heaven. How I wish that I may be the means of causing some poor soul to turn from the evil ways unto the true and living God. How great God's love is toward us and how much he has done that we may have eternal life. He manifested himself to the world in Christ Jesus our Lord. Just and holy are all his ways, and he has commanded us to be holy even as he is holy and he has provided a remedy, if it is only rightly used. Let us see that our hearts are all washed and cleansed in the blood. It fills my heart this eve as I pen these few lines to feel the blood applied. Bless his name for taking me out of the pit and helping me to get into the strait and narrow way. Dear brethren there are many good things you write about that I love to read. There are many things which I would like to say, but will close and come again.

Joseph Allard.

Dear Restitution:

I am writing this for my father. I am a boy ten years old, and I like to read the letters in The Restitution. Father is almost blind and cannot see to write or read any more. The United Brethren are holding a protracted meeting for over a month and they are teaching sanctification and they claim they are sanctified holy to the Lord. Will some brother write an article on sanctification and show how a man is sanctified. Will Bro. M. Joblin write and tell us how we get sanctified. As I did not tell you the cause of father's blindness I will tell you now, he has cataract on both eyes. He has not seen out of his left eye for over a year.

Editor Restitution:

I take much pleasure and profit in reading your exposition of the Sacred Scriptures, and would be very glad to contribute matter for publication occasionally had I time to do so. I some times give away my papers after reading them, that others who want the light they shed may enjoy it as well. I usually read Bro. Wilson's "Pine Woods Bible Class" first, Signs of the Times second, then begin with the first page and read by course. It is all very good; I have been particularly interested in "What is a Christian?" I hope that the sick ones may soon recover, that the progress of the true gospel may not be retarded.

Your Brother in Christ, hoping for his glorious appearing,

D. D. Lathrop.

Editor Restitution:

I herewith send you my years subscription for Restitution, continue to forward it as heretofore.

A few of us here, are endeavoring to hold the faith of the gospel; about which there should be no difference of understanding; nor will there be, when we adopt the only rule of determining given us from headquarters; and I am truly glad, when I realise that we are so far removed from Rome, as well as Canterbury, as we are! If the apostle Paul could say "he knew no man after the flesh," we certainly should say as he said. Thank God for an open Bible! Thanks also be to Him, for a sound mind; such as can rightly accept, a rightly divided, word of God.

"Human hearts and lips deceive me,
God is faithful, God is true."

Our expectations since coming here have not all been realized; as very "dull times" set in soon after; this was not peculiar to these parts, but was very general; at the same time many have suffered blighted hopes; possibly their hopes were of too sanguine a character, based upon the marked prosperity, which had come to these parts by the great sales of real estate, and the fond hopes entertained, that all things would move on as heretofore; this really should not have been looked for; inasmuch as real loss had occurred in the disastrous fire of 1890. We now have in Seattle, some very great improvements in widened streets, elegant buildings for Bank and mercantile uses. The people have largely settled down to the making of homes, and very beautiful ones at that. Here, where the grass is green the year round, and roses live outdoors without any care, with a climate far superior to anything experienced by me, though for over forty years a resident of Brooklyn N. Y. Puget Sound country is bound to come to the front, and when it does, I expect a very rapid and substantial growth of cities, towns and entire country. We read the weather reports of the East, and congratulate ourselves we are so far removed therefrom!

I wish to say—I am not "booming," I never have, and I never will; I tell my individual likes, and what I see and hope: others will do the same, but none can controvert what I have said.

In matters religious, I would say, we are hopeful, that seeds of truth, as they drop out in [illegible] Bible class; in Sunday school, and in the preached word will effect in leading some to a better understanding of God's Word—we are working to that end, and in the way appointed—searching the Scriptures.

Geo. W. Young.

The Resurrection of the Dead.

"Now if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead?" 1. Cor. 15. 12.

The Resurrection is a prominent doctrine of the Bible. We find it in the Old Testament as well as the New. Jesus, the Christ, taught it in his discourses, and illustrated it by facts, viz., the raising of Jairus' daughter (Mark v. [illegible]), the widow's son, (Luke [illegible]) [illegible] greatest proof of the [illegible]e, however, is the resurrection of [illegible]s himself. He foretold his own death and resurrection to the Jews, when he said—"Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up" John ii. 19-22. Also to his disciples in Matt. xvi. 21; xvii. 22-23; xx. 17-19. All the four evangelists testify that Jesus rose from the dead on the third day. His enemies did all they could to make him falsify his word by keeping him in the tomb. They sealed the stone which covered the entrance, and set a watch or guard of soldiers. Thus all was apparently secure. But early on the morning of the third day since his burial—the first of the week—a messenger comes from heaven, shakes the solid ground, breaks the seal and rolls away the stone. The keepers are helpless in his presence, and become as dead men, and are unable to prevent the crucified Jesus from coming out of the tomb. To the wondering women, who had come early in the morning to anoint the body of their dead Master, the angel said, "Fear ye not; for I know that ye seek Jesus, who was crucified. He is not here; for, he is risen, as he said." Matt. xxviii. 5 6.

The doctrine of the resurrection of Jesus the Christ from the dead is the corner-stone of Christianity. If the testimony given us by the apostles concerning this great fact is untrue, then the Christian religion is a fable, and our hope [illegible] future life visionary. The apostle Paul, the last witness of the resurrection of Christ, argues the case very clearly and strongly. In 1 Cor. xv. 14 15—he says, "If Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain. Yea, and we are found false witnesses of God; because we have testified of God that he raised up Christ; whom he raised not up, if so be that the dead raise not." It is asserted in the apostolic writings more than twenty times that God raised up Jesus from the dead; and surely this is sufficient evidence to prove him to be the Son of God with power. Rom. i. 3 4. "And if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also who sleep in Jesus will God bring (from the dead) with him." 1 Thess. iv. 14.

When we read about the resurrection of the dead, we ought to understand that it is really of dead not of living persons; nor is it proper to say the bodies of the dead. The Catholic and Protestant world in generally profess to believe in the resurrection; it is in their creed—"I believe in the resurrection of the body." They do not believe in the resurrection of dead persons, but of dead bodies. Their idea is, that "there is no death"—that the soul, the spirit, the person cannot die—that the wages of sin is only inflicted on the body. This is not a Bible doctrine. But both Jesus and his apostles taught the resurrection of the dead—toon nekroon—dead persons, always in the plural number; therefore, in order to complete the sense, the word persons should be understood as immediately following the word dead. To be raised from or out of the dead, implies plurality. Hence Jesus was raised (ek nekroon) out of dead ones. So Paul desired, if possible, to attain the resurrection (exanastasin toon nekroon) from among the dead ones. Phil. iii. 11. If the popular and almost universal doctrine of the immortality of the soul was correct then there might be some reason for the resurrection of the dead body merely, so that the immortal soul may be united to it again. But we know it is not true—the sentence of death is inflicted upon the person, and not upon the body only. "Dying thou shalt die," (marg.) Gen. ii. 17; and "the soul that sinneth, it shall die," Ezek. xviii. 4. If it is only the body which dies, the house or tabernacle in which the immortal soul dwells, then there is no resurrection of dead persons, only of dead bodies, and the Church creed is correct which says,—"resurrection of the body." This doctrine, however, is unscriptural, and robs the Christian of his only hope of life. The Christ died, and rose again. If only his body died, then he was not sacrificed for us, and he did not rise from the dead. But we know it is a solemn truth, repeatedly affirmed, the Son of man gave his life for us—gave himself a ransom—that Christ died for us, etc.; and he positively declared to the Apostle John, "I am he that liveth and was dead; but behold, I am alive for evermore," Rev. i. 18.

If the immortal soul after "shuffling off its mortal coil," finds itself more free to act, why should it be united to a body again? There is no necessity for raising the dead body. Hence many, like some in the Corinthian church, deny the resurrection of the dead, thinking that only the body is raised; and even then they skeptically ask—"How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come?" Mark Paul's reply to these Sadducees: "If there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen; and if Christ be not risen, then our preaching is vain, and your faith is also vain; * * * * ye are yet in your sins. Then they also who are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." 1 Cor. xv. 12-18. Paul teaches here that all perish, or are annihilated as personal beings, who are not raised from the dead. No life for any one who dies without a resurrection. "If the dead rise not, let us eat and drink; for to-morrow we die," or perish without the hope of future life.

Some objector says, "I cannot believe in the resurrection, for those persons who died long ago have been dissolved into their original elements, and have entered into and become component parts of other bodies, both animal and vegetable; therefore I ask, how can the dead be raised up? and with what body do they come? My answer to this objection is,—that it is not necessary to personal identity that the resurrection-body should be composed of the same particles of matter as the body which was laid in the grave. Even in life we are constantly changing—waste or dead matter continually passing off, and new matter taken in. Physiologists tell us that the entire body is changed every seven years. Yet we are the same persons all through life,—our identity, and consciousness are preserved. So it is not necessary for the resurrection-body to possess the very same particles that were in the old body, in order to be the same person. Paul tells us that the sown-body is not the same as the raised body. That which is sown is animal—the raised one will be spiritual, etc. See 1 Cor. xv. 42-49. The believer who sleeps in Jesus will awake to consciousness, and know that he is the same identical person who laid down to rest, though it may have been for hundreds of years. As in perfect, dreamless sleep, we take no note of time, and we rise to consciousness upon awaking, so will it be with the sleeping saint when he hears the Master call. He will then "see as he is seen, and know as he is known."

Jesus told Nicodemus that it was necessary for a man to be born again, or born from above, in order to see the kingdom of God, John iii. 1-8. This implied a change in a man's nature—moral, intellectual, and physical. When Nicodemus could not understand what it was to be born again, Jesus further said, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and of spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God. That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the spirit is spirit." The Apostle Paul corroborates this in his argument on the resurrection in 1 Cor. xv. He says, "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God;" that is, human nature in its natural, sinful, mortal condition. A change of state and condition is absolutely essential. The future kingdom of God will be the kingdom of Israel restored, but upon a spiritual and immortal basis. The risen and immortal Christ, the son of David and the Son of God, will be King in Zion. His bride, the church, has also the promise of ruling with him. But in order to obtain this exalted position, it is necessary for the church to be born again, born of the spirit, as Jesus was, when he was raised from the dead. "For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." Christ became the first fruits of the sleepers—"the first that should rise from the dead," Acts. xxvi. 23—"the firstborn from the dead;" and those who are Christ's, must also be of the same order—firstborns—the chiefs of the kingdom of God. Those who have been born of water or immersed into Christ, and keep their vows of consecration inviolate to the end, will obtain a change of nature, be born of the spirit, and thus become like their living Head,—spiritual, immortal, and glorious. "When he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is," 1 John iii. 2. "Our citizenship is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our humiliated body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself," Phil. iii. 20, 21.

Do the Scriptures teach the resurrection of all of Adam's race, or an eclectic resurrection? Some are of the opinion that all—every one—of those who have died will be raised up. They think 1 Cor. xv. 21 proves it—"As in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made alive." Paul was writing to the Christians composing the church at Corinth, and proving the resurrection of the dead to some Sadducees who had crept in amongst them. His object was not to prove the resurrection of all men, but of all believers. This being kept in mind, then the text is plain, and limited to believers—viz., "As by Adam (we) all die, so by Christ (we) shall all be made alive." This agrees with the teaching of Jesus in John vi. 40—namely, his promise to raise the believer at the last day. Others think that because "Christ died for all," and "gave his life a ransom for many," and that "he is a propitiation for the sins of the whole world;" that therefore all will be raised from the dead, in order to obtain the benefit of his sacrifice. I understand that ample provision has been made for all, but none except those accepting the invitation to partake of it will be benefitted. "Hear, and your soul shall live," Isa. lv. 3; "come unto me, and I will give you rest," Matt. xi. 28; "I give unto them (his sheep) eternal life," John x. 28; Christ has become "the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him," Heb. v. 9. The benefits arising from Christ's death are conditional; and resurrection is promised to those only who accept the terms.

I believe in an eclectic resurrection. There is a first or chief resurrection—of those who are Christ's. Some of these will be raised to meet him at his (secret) coming, or presence. Some afterwards, when they have passed through the "great tribulation," and sealed the testimony with their blood, Rev. xx. 4. These also are in the first resurrection, and belong to Christ, as his bride, and are also of the royal priesthood. Then there is another class of saints, of a lower order, belonging to the patriarchal and Mosaic dispensations, who will be raised up to eternal life, probably at the coming or appearing of our Lord with all his saints; when Michael will stand up for the deliverance of Daniel and his people from the grave, and also for the living who are written in the book. Dan. xii. 1, 2.

I could write more on this subject, but this article now is long enough to be of interest to the reader. May you and I, dear reader, strive to attain to that resurrection out from among the dead ones.

Announcements.

The Iowa State Conference will be held at Webster City, Hamilton county, at the intersection of the Ill. Central and the Toledo branch of the C. & N. W. Ry., beginning Thursday, June 9, and closing June 20. Business will be called at 9 o'clock on Friday June 10th.

Let all who read this notice try to be present at the beginning of the meeting. Matters of importance to us all, relating to our evangelist work, tent work, educational work and other things, demand our united counsel and effort; and we should not fail to be at the meeting. If we are God's children we are the keepers of his precious truth, and we should let the light shine through good works. Come then brothers, sisters, come to the annual meeting. Three times in a year all Israel were commanded to assemble in the place chosen of God; then can not we assemble once a year? Arrange now, plan now, work now toward that end. Consult one another, save up the money for the fare, arrange the work at home so that you may be ready to come.

If ten or more persons purchase tickets at the same station at the same time, they may be had at reduced rates. Set your time for starting, secure ten or more persons to go, and come to the meeting. If the older people cannot come send the young people, they will hear the truth, become interested, and obey the gospel. Our young people are taking hold of this work. Encourage them by letting them come with you to the meeting. If you cannot all come, let as many come as can. The money spent in coming to the meeting is put out at good interest.

There will be plenty of tents for the use of all who come. Bring what bedding and dishes you may need for your own use. Provisions can be purchased at restaurants.

The meetings will be held in the large tent. There will be preaching each day and evening, also prayer and social meetings and Bible investigations. Come. By order of committee.

Mrs. J. W. Appleyard, Sec.

Arrangements are being made for a general Northwestern meeting to be held at Omaha, beginning Saturday, May 14, covering four Sundays. Our Iowa tent will be pitched somewhere in the north part of the city, possibly on 24th street, with small tents to accommodate all who may be in attendance. A number of speakers are expected to be present—A. Adams, A. J. Eychener, A. F. Dugger, W. J. Orem, Lott Clover, John Foore, H. V. Reed, Arthur Regal, and others. A general invitation is extended to all brethren to attend this meeting, at least a part of the time.

If you can secure ten persons to collect at any one point at any time to start for the meeting you can at any time get reduced rates. This will be your best way; consult, get your number, set your time and apply for rates and you can get round trip tickets for one and one-third fare, if within 100 miles. This is railroad rule on all roads. If your point is over 100 miles away write to us in ample time and we will secure you special rates.

An Important New Publication.

The issue of "King's United States of To-Day; a handbook of all the States and Territories," marks the completion of a great enterprise. It is a marvelous summary of every fact covering the beginning, the growth and especially the present development and resources of each state and territory. Prof. Greenwood, a prominent educator, says it is "the most complete, compact, solidified, instructive and useful mass of information of all the states and territories that has ever been published." It is commended in similar terms by such men as Pres. Dwight of Yale, Pres. Adams of Cornell, Pres. Patton of Princeton. Wm. M. Evarts, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Cardinal Gibbons, and many others.

It contains complete maps of every state and territory, and about 3,000 fine engravings, showing the chief objects of interest, including grand scenery, chief cities, public buildings, educational institutions, manufactories, etc., etc. These with the array of statistics and vivid, concise narrative, present a glowing picture with pen and pencil of the greatness and glory of our Republic, while the mass of information given is just what is needed for quick reference in every office, store, factory, shop and home in the land. It is sold by subscription, and as the price is only $2.60 it must meet with an immense sale. Agency may be secured by addressing O. B. Beach & Co., Publishers, Lakeside Building, Chicago.

Passenger Fares Reduced.

Frequent reductions in the fares for the round trip seems to be the order of the day at present. In the North-west and West, the news of the wonderful yield of cereals or some recent developement of the vast mineral wealth sends a thrill to the feelings of the average citizen; in the South-West or South, some marvel of progress in the new industeries so rapidly developing, calls strongly upon the speculative instincts.

Circulars and other information of all reductions are constantly in possession of the principal Agents of the Nickel Plate. If inquiry is made of any Agent of the Nickel Plate not fully informed on the subject, the information will be procured at once and by telegraph if necessary. Tickets of any class on sale and baggage checked to any destination in the United States, Canada or Mexico, at lowest rates.

Mar. 16 to April 27.

Reduced Rates to Portland, Oregon, via Pennsylvania Lines.

For the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, to be held at Portland, Oregon, in May, excursion tickets at reduced round trip rates will be sold via Pennsylvania Lines. Persons who expect to attend the Assembly, or who contemplate a trip to the Northwest, will receive detailed information concerning rates, limit of tickets, and the excellent facilities for a pleasant journey via Pennsylvania Lines and connections, if they will send their names and addresses to F. Van Dusen, Chief Assistant General Passenger Agent, Pittsburgh, Penna.—April 13 15.

Poetry.

"The Hoary Head is a Crown of Glory, If it Be Found in the Paths of Righteousness."

There he lies, with Crown of glory,
Set in locks so soft and hoary
On his aged and honored head,
Restful, pillowed with the dead:
And from more than four score years,
God, this monument uprears,—
"I have made his hair, a crown!
He in righteous paths was found."

Tempests past and battles won,
Tasks accomplished, duties done:—
We with Paul can make our boast
Not for him the race is lost.
He the faith has firmly kept
Fought the fight while others slept,
Moved not from the hope away,
His the prize in coming day.

Those dear feet were held secure
On God's promise strong and sure,
While above him sweet and calm
Swept the shade of Elim's palm;
O'er his weary, wandering lot
Watched a love that changeth not,
Clasped for aye his trembling hand,
Fixed his eye on Canaan's land.

And those blessed, lengthened years,
Golden hopes and holy fears,
But as stepping stones have been
To a peace few mortals ken.
Fires have burned and purified,
Dross from silver set aside;
Touched his lips with angel's food,
Meekness brought and patience good.

Till at last he learned to bear
All his griefs to God in prayer,
When in fiery furnace faint,
Make to God his mournful plaint,
Felt the dear sustaining grace,
Saw the smiles of "love-beamed face!"—
Singing songs in "deepest night"
When e'en "stars refused their light."

O those more than four score years!
Shed we o'er them joyful tears,
Thank our God that earthly fame
Weighed but naught 'gainst heavenly name.
That the humble voice and pen,
He but used for fellowmen,—
Took the message mercy gave,
Made it power to reach and save!

The Gospel According to John, Chap XI.

1. Now there was a certain one enfeebled, Lazaros from Bethania of the village of Maria and Martha her sister.

2. And Maria was the one who anointed the Lord with Myhr, and dried his feet with his hair, whose brother Lazaros was enfeebled.

3. Then the sisters sent unto him saying, Lord, him whom thou regardest as a friend is enfeebled.

4. And when Jesous heard he said, This weakness is not unto death; but for the glory of God, that the Son of God may have been glorified thereby.

5. Now Jesous loved Martha and her sister and Lazaros.

6. When then he had heard that he was enfeebled, he remained in the place where he was two days.

7. Then after that he saith unto his disciples. Let us lead on into Joudaia again.

8. The disciples say unto him, Teacher, the Joudaians now were seeking to stone thee, and art thou going to go back there?

9. Jesous answered, Are there not twelve hours of the day? If any one walk in the day he doth not stumble, because he is looking at the light of this Cosmos.

10. But if any one walks in the night he stumbleth, because there is not light in him.

11. These things he said and after that he saith unto them, Lazaros our friend hath lain down to sleep, but I go my way to awake him out of sleep.

12. Then said the disciples unto him, Teacher if he hath lain down to sleep, he will have been saved.

13. But Jesous spake of his death, and they supposed that he was talking about the lying down to sleep.

14. Then said Jesous unto them plainly, Lazaros hath died.

15. And I rejoice for your sakes, that ye may experience faith, that I was not there. But let us lead on unto him.

16. Then said Thomas, the one called Didumos (a twin) unto his fellow disciples. Let us lead on too, that we may die with him.

17. Then when Jesous had come, he found that he had been in the memorial tomb four days already.

18. Now Bethania was nigh to Heirosoluma (Jerousalem) about fifteen stadia away (seven miles.)

19. And many of the Joudaians had come unto Martha and Maria to console them for their bother.

20. Then Martha when she heard that Jesous was coming went to meet him. But Maria remained seated in the house.

21. Then said Martha unto Jesous, Teacher, if thou hadst been here my brother would not have died.

22. And now I know that anything thou mayest ask of God, God will grant it unto thee.

23. Saith Jesous unto her, Thy brother will arise,

24. Saith Martha unto him, I know that he will arise in the resurrection on the last day.

25. Said Jesous unto her, I am the way of resurrection and the life. The one who putteth faith in me, though he may have died, will live.

26. And any one who liveth and putteth faith in me shall not have died forever. Dost thou trust this?

27. She saith unto him, Yes, Lord, I have trusted that thou art the Christ, the Son of God, the One who cometh into the Cosmos.

28. And having said this she went away and called Maria her sister privately, saying. The teacher is near by and calleth thee.

29. And when she had heard it she arose quickly and went unto him.

30. Jesous though had not yet entered the village, but was still in the place where Martha had met him.

31. Then the Joudaians who were with her in the household and comforting her, when they saw Maria get up quickly and go out, followed her, thinking that she was going to the memorial tomb to lament there.

32. Maria though when she had come where Jesous was and saw him, fell down at his feet, saying unto him, Lord, if thou hads't been here my brother would not have died.

33. Jesous then when he saw her lamenting and the Joudaians who had come along with her lamenting, was exceedingly disturbed in spirit and bestirred himself,

34. And said, where have ye placed him? They say unto him, Lord, come and see.

35. Jesous wept.

36. Then said the Joudaians, See how he loved him as a friend.

37. But some of them said, Could not this person who opened the eyes of the blind man have caused this one not to have died?

38. Jesous then vehemently moved within himself, cometh unto the memorial tomb. Now it was a cave and a stone had been laid upon it.

39. Jesous saith, Lift up the stone. Saith Martha, the sister of the one who had come to his end, unto him, Lord he already emitteth an odor, For it is fourth-day.

40. Saith Jesous unto her, Did I not say unto thee, If thou shalt show faith, thou shalt see the glory of God.

41. Then they lifted up the stone, And Jesus lifted up his eyes and said, Father, I thank thee because thou hast heard me.

42. Though I know that thou dost always hear me, yet for the sake of, this crowd standing around I said it that they may have put faith in the fact that thou hast sent me.

43. And having said this, he shouted with a great voice, Lazaros, come forth.

44. The dead man came forth with his hands and feet bound with bandages, and his face bound around with a coarse linen cloth. Saith Jesous unto them, Loose him and let him go.

45. Many then of the Joudaians who had come unto Maria and beheld what he had done (authorised) put faith in him.

46. But some of them went to the Pharisees and told them what Jesus had done (authorized.)

47. Then the chief-priests and Pharisees gathered together a council (Synedrion lit. a joint sitting of two or more bodies) and said. What are ye going to do? Because this man is (causing or authorizing) doing many signs.

48. If we thus allow him, all will put faith in him, and the Romans will come and take away both our place and our nation.

49. But one of them Caiphas, he being chief-priest for that year, said unto them, Ye know nothing;

50. Nor do ye take into account that it is expedient, that one man shall have died for the royal people and not that all the nation shall have been lost.

51. And this he said not of himself, but being chief-priest for that year, he had prophesied that Jesous was destined to die for the nation;

52. And not for the nation only, but that the offspring of God who had been scattered might be gathered into one.

53. From that day then they counseled together to kill him.

54. Jesus accordingly no longer walked (perapatetic walk) openly among the Joudaians; but went from there into the place nigh to the wilderness into a city called Ephraim, and there abode with his disciples.

55. And the Pascha of the Joudaians was nigh; And many went up to Hierosoluma (Jerusalem) from the country before the Pascha to purify themselves.

56. Then they were seeking Jesous and were saying to one another as they stood in the temple, What think ye, He will not have come up to the feast, will he?

57. Now the chief-priests and Pharisees had given commandments, that if any one knew where he was, he should make it known, that they might do him violence.

COMMENT.

Maria a later form of Mariam, a dialectic variation. That is all. The name of the sister of Mouses and Aaron was the same perverted into Meriam in the Com. Ver.

The term "enfeebled" here significant I think of the fact that Lazarus died of general debility.

"Is looking at the light" strictly in accord with scientific fact. The person looks at the light. He does not see the light. For light is invisible. But the light as an instrumentality affects the optic nerve, and objects in the light are revealed of which fact the mind becomes conscious. We do not see the light strictly speaking. We see things in the light. We see nothing in absolute darkness. But we can look at the darkness and we do in the common experience of life constantly.

"Lying down to sleep" an old parable phrase of the prophets, which Christ is trying by a picture-lesson to make clear to his then disciples as well as all who should become disciples through their teaching and testimony. The picture-lesson is the awakening and raising of Lazarus. It is very evident from the context what the orthodox belief of the church of that day was as to when the resurrection or awakening of the dead was to occur, and Martha states it distinctly and unequivocally, and there is nothing in Christ's answer to indicate that he intends to correct or change this belief. The object here was to illustrate how, not when, God through Jesus Christ could overcome death and incorruption. We learn here also what and whom Martha believed Jesous to be, and what he himself accepted as a true statement of fact. Read it and see how it agrees with modern orthodoxy.

If you will observe the language here carefully, you will perceive that the tomb was a cave, entered from the surface down, not latterly as one would naturally infer from the O. V. and R. V. rendering. This kind of tombs were then very common and are to-day in Palestine. Some of them were natural caves and some of them excavated in the rock.

SEEKING A COUNTRY.

Foreigners in emigrating to this country desire to better their condition. They are ruled and governed by an iron hand, and in many instances reduced to poverty by taxes and high rents. Consequently they seek a country where the chances are more favorable of improving their condition in life and gaining a livelihood are more inviting. They take passage and start out on their voyage with sanguine hopes of reaching the other shore, or the new country, and their new home. They are highly elated with the central idea of being more independent and free. And on their journey they encounter many obstacles in the way of storms and tempests, such as are attending sometimes such journeys. At times their lives are in jeopardy and at the peril of the upheaving of the waves, so that they are almost thrown overboard or shipwrecked, which is sometimes the case. But they survive the tempests and outride the storms and make a complete and successful journey, excepting perchance some of the number may have sickened and died on the way. Consequently were cut off and deprived from enjoying and participating in the hospitalities of the new country. When they want or desire the right of franchise and want to become subjects and citizens of this republic or government, they make application to the proper authorities and take out naturalisation papers, which entitles them to the benefits and protection of this government. They are now within the limits and under the dominion of the United States. And under our protection and care, and can claim protection at the hands of this government, as long as they obey and live within the laws of the government, given by franchise, which places them on the same equality vouchsafed to American born citizens. They have renounced their allegiance to their former government, and have taken the oath of allegiance to defend and support this government. They are therefore no more foreigners aliens or strangers, but fellow citizens of the commonwealth of the United States. The analogy and similarity in many respects bears a striking resemblance to our Christian life and character. We qualify, enter and take passage on the ocean and voyage of life as a delegate under the jurisdiction of the government of God and Jesus Christ whom He hath sent. We are burdened and heavy laden with [illegible] sickness and disease and the [illegible] influences of the world. We want a new country a heavenly country, we desire to better our condition and spiritual welfare. And when a Christian starts out on the voyage of a Christian life, there are elements on land as well as the sea or ocean. And we are liable to come in contact with them and be thrown overboard, or become shipwrecked, in our faith. We want to fortify ourselves against the encroachments of the subtile and cunning devices of Satan and his enemies in the world. (Mark you.) We have engaged passage on the life boat, and our voyage is to continue during our natural life before we enter the port or harbor. When we dedicate ourselves and become acceptable members by obeying and complying with the conditions contained in God's law then we become subjects, heirs of God and joint heirs of Jesus Christ according to the promise. We are no more [illegible] foreigners or strangers but fellow heirs. We have renounced our allegiance to the world Satan and his government and have frankly declared our allegiance and obedience to God and His government and devote our whole life to His service. We have been absolved from all past sins. We have become new creatures in Christ Jesus, under the dominion and government of God. The Christian voyage is a continual warfare during the journey of life. Many obstructions are thrown in the way and passage, to induce or allure you away from the path of duty, and at times almost feel like giving up the struggle, and at times you may become cold and indifferent and shaky in your faith, or meet with adverse circumstances, or other things of like character that I will not mention or call. But stop, look ahead, (for breakers) you are on the life boat bound for the eternal city. Jesus says cast your burden upon me. I am with you and for you, trust in me I will see that you are not not lost or shipwrecked. I am your support and captain. I will pilot you safely through to the other shore. The displays and attractive things of the world at best are only transcient and soon pass away. But if we remain and stand firm and cling to the life boat, and increase our faith and build our hope on a firm foundation, the rock Christ Jesus, we will never become shipwrecked or cast overboard. Jesus is at the helm. In conclusion let us remain firm, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, during our entire voyage of life. We will enter safely into the harbor, on the other shore in the new country, where the climate is congenial. The atmosphere is not tainted with the affects of sin sickness and disease. The air and climate will be adapted according to our immortal nature wants and desires in the new country, in the new earth state, when Jesus comes.

Questions For Brethren and Friends.

Can you tell why it is that some Christian people are so very indifferent about their profession, and their spiritual welfare? Have but little or no time to read the Bible, or to talk about God's glorious truths, and thus to grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Yet they seem to have ample time for almost anything else. When Bible subjects are broached, they become silent, or withdraw their presence, but let the nature of the subject change, and see how quick their tongue is turned loose. Can you tell why it is that Christian people who profess to believe that our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ will come back to this earth, and will then and there reward his servants, do not think talk and preach more about it? Oh says one it makes no difference, just so we are ready. True, but can you be ready and treat his coming with indifference? Can you? Why is it that many good Christian people who profess to follow Christ, are led off by worldly minded people into various organizations, and there mix up with good, bad and indifferent, whose sole object, aim and conversation pertain to this life? Can it be said of you my brother "They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world? Can it? Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God; therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not. "But God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the Lord is crucified unto me, and unto the world." I should think a Christian would feel condemned in such society. Can you tell why it is that Christian people will cling tenaciously to their unnecessary foolish and hurtful habits contracted in their ignorance? Such as the use of profane or vulgar language in common conversation, or the cultivation and pampering of their baser passions, to the exclusion and weakening of their better moral natures, which must be daily cultivated and strengthened in order to overcome and restrain the opposing animal natures. And especially the use of that very unnecessary and poisonous weed, called tobacco. You know it is a filthy habit—a nuisance. And you know it is wrong to use it, as it is using this world's goods—your hard earned money—as abusing them, by spending from five to twenty dollars annually worse than burnt up or thrown away, while your self your family or your neighbors are needing bread or clothing. And do you not know that you could pay your honest debts much easier and quicker if you would stop those leak holes which often takes the last penny and cruelly drives vast multitudes to begging. And do you not know that the world is slowly committing suicide by their foolish habits, and that thousands are reeling and yelling with heart disease, amid all the warning entreaties of kind friends. Are you an overcomer? Are you? To what are you sowing? And what will you reap? Can you tell why it is that those who talk and write on Bible themes persist in using big words, Greek and Hebrew phrases, which only confuses the common reader? Why not use the more common and easily understood words and thus teach others? All of which is kindly suggested in behalf of the good cause, and the common people.

Report of Labors.

"Praise God from whom all blessings flow." We truly feel like uttering praise to him, who has guarded our lives, that while trouble, disease and death lurks in every pathway still we have been preserved, and strength has been given us to tell of his wondrous love, and his power to save, and that even in these terrible days of stubborn unconcern among men regarding the future, still some have been led to accept the blessed faith of the Bible, and has gladly obeyed the gospel. On January 23 my husband and I began meetings at the McKinney school house, one and a half miles from Byron Center. The house is a new brick structure, a pleasant, cozy place to speak in and from first to last we had good congregations, the best of order and interest. We spoke there 27 times and baptized three earnest souls into the saving name. We were then invited to the Barney school-house two miles further south. We went and the congregations and interest increased every evening. We spoke here 18 times and baptized seven. We left these two points with much reluctance so warm had our friendships grown. So genial, so kind, were all we felt that we must have been acquainted for years. Next Saturday (D. V.) we return to them to remain over Sunday and set the church in order. From Bryon we went to Prairie Grove, five miles from Vicksburg, and 48 miles from home, speaking four times there and once eight miles from there in Br. Harper's neighborhood. At both these points they wished us to remain and hold meetings, but we had other engagements, and left with the promise to return at some future time, the Lord willing. On Saturday the Elder went to Dutton, and I to Coats Grove, 35 miles east of Kalamazoo, staying until Monday. Our next points promised are Conkling and Hesperia, but we must rest a little first for we are both very much worn out, and suffering with colds, but God has mercifully spared our lives and given strength for the winter's work and he is able to continue his loving care and so we trust him for each day. Only one day at a time is all we ought to live taking no thought for the morrow, for He will care for that.

Yours waiting for the King,
B. W. and M. A. Woodward.

P. S. Since writing the above report we have been to Southwest Byron, and organized an earnest, flourishing, little church. O, for more workers in the Lord's vineyard to feed the little flocks, the hungry lambs, with suitable food. There are now six places anxious for us to come to them and give the words of life. O beautiful words. How can we leave them, and yet we cannot reach them all. Thank God for The Restitution and other good sound reading which will minister in the absence of preaching.

Obituary.

Died,—At the home of her sister, Mrs. Emma Webb, in Carthage, Missouri, on Wednesday March 9, 1892 of consumption, Sister Lula M. Garton, wife of H. G. Garton, aged 23 years, 5 months and 23 days.

Sister Garton was the youngest daughter of Dr. and Sister Hayden, (Brother Hayden died April 14, 1891.) She leaves a husband, one daughter, a mother, one sister, one brother and a host of friends to mourn her loss. She accepted the terms of the Gospel and with her sister, Sister Webb was baptized by Brother John Foore in August 1884. Since which time she has lived a consistent Christian life and endeared herself to all who knew her by her kind and loving disposition. She died as she had lived in the full hope of a resurrection when Jesus comes.

The writer tried to comfort the bereaved friends by the glad assurance that there would be for her a glorious resurrection when Jesus comes. After which we laid her away in Park Cemetery followed by an unusual large concourse of friends:

Sleep on, sleep on, our sister dear,
Thy work was faithfully done while here;
Thy rest is sweet, thy hope is sure,
To meet the faithful on the better shore.
O faithful one, in God we trust,
To raise thee again from out the dust,
To enjoy that day of eternal rest
Promised to all the faithful and blest.

P. Finn.

Since writing for subscription to The Restitution, I have received the sadest news that ever reached my heart,—the death of my aged father (age 71 years.) Eld. D. F. Salley, Malvern, Ark., March 22nd 1892. But what comfort when I think of the great reward that awaits him in the morning of the resurrection.

What high honors awaits him on high to be given when he will be redeemed from the power of the grave by his Elder Brother Jesus Christ, who will say to him "come ye blessed of my Father inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." When he will be crowned with immortality, to reign as king or priest in the righteous kingdom of God. His illness was of short duration. Passed into sleep quietly and in perfect submission, knowing that he was going to rest "in hope." My father has been a Christian minister since early manhood, and has ever lived up to the full standard of a Christian and minister, and kind and loving father, ever growing in the knowledge, faith and hope of the gospel of God and his Son. Was one who

Firmly stood for God in the world's mad strife
Tho' the bleak winds moan and the waves beat high
As the Rock alone giveth strength and life
When the host of sin is nigh.

Yes, he stood on the Rock!
Firmly stood on the Rock!
On the rock of Christ alone;
For the strife he endured
He shall stand secured, [Throne.
Mid' the throng who'll surround the

Firmly stood for right with a motive pure
With a true heart bold and a faith e'en strong;
As the rock alone giveth triumph sure,
O'er the world's array of wrong.

It is extremely sad to me when I realize the fact that I will never again on this sin cursed earth, behold and commune with my dear Christian father, but I shall be consoled with the high hope that I may share the same blessings in the world to come that he most assuredly will, and thus be permitted there to be clasped in his embrace.

"Dear is the spot where Christians sleep,
And sweet the strain which angels pour;
O, why should one in anguish weep?
They are not lost but gone before."

David S. Salley.

Two Pillars Have Fallen.

George Peacock fell asleep in January last. He was nearly four-score years of age, and a native of Yorkshire, England. He came to America in the thirties, and lived forty years in the town of Maine, Cook County, Illinois and eleven years in Rockford including prolonged visits to Northfield to enjoy the fellowship of Christian friends.

Brother Peacock was a Bible reader before his conversion, but the Bible was to him a sealed book, until he read Elpis Israel by the late Dr. Thomas, he then put on Christ by baptism and joined what was then styled the Church of South Northfield and, for thirty-four years tried to maintain a Christian character, always in his place on the first day of the week as he had opportunity. He was honest and upright in his dealings with his fellowmen, and has left a good record in the community at Northfield.

Renell Phillips fell a victim to the last enemy on the 22nd of March and was laid to rest on the 25th. He was of old Baptist stock from New York state and came west in the forties, and settled in Northfield, Cook Co., Illinois, where he resided until his death, aged eighty-four years. He was rather above the common in intelligence, and took considerable interest in national and local affairs. He was an ardent Baptist though unwashed, but when he learned the way of the Lord more perfectly through the writings of the late Dr. Thomas he conferred no more with flesh and blood, and was baptized in the name of Jesus for the remission of sins, and for the last forty years has been a valiant soldier of the Lord Jesus Christ, always ready to contend for the Faith once delivered to the saints.

Brother P. was a good man, kind and tender-hearted, proving his faith by his works. The memory of the just is blessed. These two aged brethren were among the first-fruits of the Gospel in these parts, there are not many now left of that generation.

Counsel With Your Boy.

Let your boy feel that you are always ready for him, always interested in his plans, however wild they may be. You can no longer command him. If that has been your only hold, then may God have mercy on you and on him. His judgment is beginning to grow, perhaps. Encourage it. Take him into your counsels. It will not hurt you to ask his advice about family matters. See how kindly he will take to being looked up to. Do you not like to have your friends put confidence in you? He is only another you. If self-respect be small, you are cherishing its growth. How do you treat the tender plants in your garden? Do you keep sunshine away from them, and step on each tender little shoot as lift its itself up to the unknown light of a great and strange world? And, as the plants gain strength and courage to stand alone, do you nip off their leaves savagely and water them as with a flood that they have hard work to stand Do you leave them to droop for a lth of encouragement, to grow awry for want of a little support to guide them till strong enough to stand alone? Or do you furnish props on every side, and leave the full-grown stem a derision to beholders?

Never let your boy feel that the household is complete without him. He may prefer anything and everything to his home, but when his "reasons grow," he cannot help coming back to it, if you are faithful to your trust. Never indulge in despair, however hopeless the case may seem, but keep a beautiful trust in him that will shine in your welcome. He may not be worthy, but he will grow to it.

A large attendance at Sabbath-school is inspiriting. There is enthusiasm in numbers. A small attendance at Sabbath-school is, however, a demand for closer personal work with the individual, bringing its opportunity of results from such endeavor beyond all that can be hoped for in the larger gathering. The summer months sometimes show an attendance that fails to provoke enthusiasm, but that ought not to fail of improved opportunities in impressing individual scholars for their permanent spiritual good. What a mistake is made by a teacher who dismisses his Sabbath-school class on the ground that only one or two scholars can be present for the benefit of his loving instruction and influence!

Boys and girls are often spoiled by parental gloom. The father never unbends. The mother's rheumatism hurts so she does not see how little Maggie can ever laugh. Childish curiosity is denounced as impertinence. The parlor is a parliament, and everything is in everlasting order. Balls and tops are a nuisance, and for cheerful reading the father would recommend "Hervey's Meditations among the Tombs." At first chance the boy will break loose. With one grand leap he will clear the catechism. He will burst away into all riotous living. He will be so glad to get out of Egypt that he will jump into the Red Sea. Restraints are necessary, but there must be some outlet. Too high a dam will overflow all the meadows. —Talmage.

A Visit to Jerusalem.

I must write to you a little about my visit to Palestine. Our landing was most difficult and dangerous, as the ship in which we sailed from Alexandria for Jaffa was wrecked upon the rocks near our destination. I cannot tell you our experience through four hours—from five until nine o'clock—with the ship beating against the rocks and sea often breaking over us, while during most of this time we did not know how we might be rescued! But God was kind and brought us help in the form of some Arab boatmen, who saved our lives at the risk of their own. God put a great peace into my heart during these hours, and I could say, 'It is well with my soul.' And when we were taken ashore through the violent sea, and over the rocks, I seemed to be borne in arms invisible. Much of my baggage was ruined, but I thank God for the opportunity to live and work for Him still.

Great changes have passed over Jerusalem since Christ walked her streets and taught her people—according to His prophecy—but it was pleasant to look upon the hills, Zion, Moriah, Olivet, Bethany, the valley of the Kidron, and to know that they were the same places that He walked and looked upon.

I never before realized what it meant to 'Go up to Jerusalem.' It is literally going up from whichever direction it is approached. Going from Jaffa we passed through the plain of Sharon, and then came to a very mountainous, winding way, going up and down the mountains, the general tendency being upward. I came to see more fully, also, the beauty of that expression, 'As the mountains are around about Jerusalem, so the Lord is round about His people, from henceforth even for ever.'

In some places the olive is extensively cultivated, and many of the valleys produce grain, but the country as a whole looked God-cursed, and shows the abomination of desolation. Prophecy has been fulfilled, which said, 'Lo I will bring a nation from afar . . . and they shall eat up thine harvest, and thy bread, which thy sons and daughters should eat.

The Turkish Government has a system of extortion which keeps the people down and kills all ambition for improvment. Like Egypt, Palestine has become a land of 'backsheesh,' where everybody expects to live on somebody else, begging is a common business, and one never knows when he has paid his bills, for after he has paid the price asked for a chance to live there a few days, he is likely to be hailed in any public place by dragomen, muleteers, stewards, and waiters, for 'blacksheesh'. Some of these fellows seem to wait around to be looked at, and then cry out 'backsheesh.'

But there are evidences that a great change is soon to come over that once blessed but now cursed land. The Turks are expecting to lose their supremacy here; the Jews are returning, formerly only the poor and aged came just to die in the sacred city, now the younger and well-to-do come, until there are more Jews than Gentiles in Jerusalem. I would have the country delivered from Turkish rule and Mohammedanism, but I would not have it filled up with the idolatry of the Catholic Church.

The Protestant religion has only a small constituency in Palestine. The Greek Church has a strong foothold here, as has also the Latin or Roman Catholic, the deadly enemy to the Greeks. The Marionites united with the Latins in 1180, and now number two hundred thousand in Lebanon. The Copts have a small representation here. The Jews are a mixed multitude, as they have mostly returned from Spain, Portugal, Germany, Poland, Russia, and other countries. It is a remarkable fact that, in order to communicate with each other, the Hebrew language is being revived, promising to be the written and spoken language of this people again. Mohammedanism is, of course, the prevailing religion. The Moslems accept the doctrines of the immortality of the soul and future rewards and punishments. They believe in but one God, and that He sent six great prophets into the world—Adam, Abraham, Moses, Jesus, and Mohammed, and that the last was the greatest.—T. H. Stacey in Bible Standard.

I will be at Vineland, Jefferson Co. Missouri the 22nd of April in Brother J. H. Morse's part of the country, to hold some meetings, and will likely continue for some days, and if any others want meetings while in Missouri they can address me at Vineland, Mo., in care of J. H. Morse.

LAND SEEKERS.

It will be of interest to those contemplating settling in the Northwest, to know that the choicest farming and timber lands in Wisconsin are tributary to the Wisconsin Central Lines. Settlers on these lands have all the advantages of healthful climate, good market facilities, abundance of fuel and building material, pure and sparkling drinking-water, and other important benefits which cannot be enjoyed on the prairies of the West. No droughts, no cyclones, no grasshopper plague and no fever and ague. Now is the time to select choice lands at low prices. Wisconsin is considered one of the most prosperous states in the union. Located directly on the Wisconsin Central Lines in this state are the thriving cities of Burlington, Waukesha, Fond du Lac, Oshkosh, Neenah, Menasha, Waupaca, Stevens Point, Marshfield, Chippewa Falls, Eau Claire New Richmond and Ashland.

Western Travel on the Nickel Plate.

Numerous letters of inquiry for information relative to rates and routes to the West, at the General Ticket Office at the New York, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad in Cleveland, O.; indicates an increasing desire to seek homes with fully matured state governments. Those of our people who contemplate a future home in the Great West, feel a greater confidence in investing than was felt under their uncertain futures as territorial governments.

North of Utah and south of the British Possessions the entire distance from the Atlantic to the Pacific Oceans may be traversed within the boundaries of Free and Independent States of the American Union. In any of these west of the Great Lakes, fertile farming lands may be secured at a nominal cost, and with the almost innumerable towns and cities which from year to year spring into opulent existence as if by magic, it is a matter of no surprise that many of our most energetic and ambitious citizens become restless and dissatisfied in our over-crowded communities, and aspire to enjoy the advantages offered, not only to the Agriculturist or Stockman, but in almost any of the branches of industry which spring to successful existence wherever the Plow Point is entered or the Miner's Pick lays bare the treasures of the earth.

Special care has been taken to supply all ticket offices of the Nickel Plate with Maps and printed information of interest to those contemplating a home in any part of the West, and also their facilities for ticketing passengers and checking baggage to any point in the United States, Canada or Mexico, are ample. If the information desired is not in possession of the Agent when called for, the same will be procured at once, and by telegraph if necessary. Special advantages in rates may be secured at any time by consulting Agents of the Nickel Plate. Mar. 16 to April 27.

Half Rates to Omaha.

Nickel Plate Agents will sell excursion tickets, account the Conference of the M. E. Church to be held at Omaha, Neb., May 1st to 30th, at greatly reduced rates. Full information given upon application. apr 6 27

"Reformation and Restoration," an address before the Union Religious Mutual Improvement Association of Edinburgh, Scotland, delivered Sept. 7, 1890, by Robert McLauchlin, of Cleveland, O. This discourse is printed in a 36-page tract, and will be sent postpaid to any one for three cents each. The author has supplied this office with a quantity of these pamphlets, the usual price of which would be ten cents. His desire being to do good, he sells this work at the cost of postage and handling, and at this low rate thousands of them should be circulated in a few weeks. The author's name is sufficient guarantee for the worth of the pamphlet, and no better opportunity can be given to those who wish to distribute good literature to the masses.

"A Discourse on Foundation Work," considered physically, morally and religiously, is the title of a 32 page tract, written by R. McLauchlan of Cleveland, Ohio. The Author has supplied us with a large quantity of those pamphlets, which we will be pleased to mail to all who desire them, at 6 cents each. The usual price of tracts this size is 10 cents. In this case the desire of the Author is to secure a wide circulation for these works and so do good, hence the price is put at the cost of the postage and handling them. No better opportunity can be given to secure good solid reading to hand to the uninstructed. Don't let those works remain long on our shelves, but send them out on their mission of love.

The Scriptures Opened—Thoughts and Themes for Bible Students—Lectures and Miscellaneous Papers Exhibiting the Revealed Purposes of God Concerning the Earth and All its Families. What We Are, and What We May Become. The Nature, Extent, Epoch, and Method of our Christian Redemption, by Robert Ashcroft, is the title of a book of 368 pages. This is a compilation of the public utterances and writings of the author while engaged as a minister in England. It is divided into some thirty-one lectures, and an addition of about fifty pages of "things that have struck me in daily Bible readings," being comments on particular texts that have called for thought while reading. This book is published by the author at Toronto, Canada, but may be ordered from Bro. J. O. Woodruff, of Elizabeth, N. J., or from this office. Price $1.25.

FUTURE PROBATION.

We have received an invoice of the new book of 148 pages, written by William Glen Moncrieff, subject, "Future Probation: Is That Awaiting Any of the Unrighteous?" Bro. Moncrieff is a writer well known to our readers, and of undoubted ability. He is the author of "Man's Only Hope of Immortality," "Sodom, or Another Opportunity," and other works. This last book is paper covers, and sells for 25c. each, and can be had at this office.

California.

California is the most attractive and delightful section of the United States, if not of the world, and its many beautiful resorts will be crowded with the best families of the East during the entire winter. It offers to the investor the best open opportunity for safe and large returns from its fruit lands. It offers the kindest climate in the world to the feeble and debilitated; and it is reached in the most comfortable manner over the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad. Pullman Vestibule Sleeping Cars leave Chicago by this line every day in the year and go without change or transfer through to San Francisco, Los Angeles and San Diego. This is a feature not offered by any other line.

TAKE NOTICE OF THIS.

REDUCED TO $1.50.

The price of The Restitution has been reduced to $1.50. This makes it necessary to do as nearly as possible a CASH business.

This reduction is made at the solicitance of many friends who have thought the price too high—not that they could not pay it—but in asking others to take the paper they were met with the objection of the high price. We confidently hope now the reduction is made that all our patrons will make an effort and try and increase our list to at least double what it is. Let each one now taking it get one more subscriber and this is accomplished. If you are interested in The Restitution, work for it a little now. If there is any family in your church that is not visited by it, urge them to try it for 1892.

The short margin, owing to the reduced price, will allow nothing to enable us to keep open accounts. If you pay promptly we can do the same, and live at peace with all men. Some will plead that they can pay better some months in the future than now. We do not wish to doubt your word, and do not, but you must remember we are totally unacquainted with you, and while we might if we personally knew you be willing to trust you, we are not ABLE FINANCIALLY to carry your account. We therefore suggest that you borrow the $1.50 from some friend at home, and that will shift the burden of your account to some one else. Thus the load will be distributed to many instead of put on one, and will be much easier borne.

The poor, those who from age or infirmities, are totally unable to pay for their paper, we will still do as we have always done, send it free. To enable us to do this we depend largely on the voluntary donations of our kind friends, those who are interested, and fully alive, working all the time and with their means in the Master's vineyard. Their reward is sure, and the blessings of the aged and infirm, to whom they have sent paper and tracts, will be no mean recommendation in the last day.

JUST TRY IT!

One of the Jewish Rabbis of [illegible] is holding services on Sunday as well as Saturday; an innovation which a part of his congregation do not approve.

A recent dispatch shows that the Czar of Russia resembles Nero, who slaughtered the Jews when Rome was burned. On discovering a conspiracy against him the Czar was so enraged that he ordered their persecutions to be redoubled. How long, Oh Lord?

One of our consuls in the East has been converted to Moslemism, and is coming home to labor as a missionary among his benighted countrymen. What a pity that he did not first see what sort of a foundation to build upon was furnished by the prophets, apostles, and Jesus Christ.

A [illegible] British official who has spent years on the Indian frontier, is reported as saying that a war between Russia and England for the possession of India cannot long be delayed. This confirms us in the [illegible]inion that our brethren have the [illegible]y of the Eastern Question.

Brethren and sisters scattered [illegible], it is the Truth believed that [illegible]tifies and saves. It is the truth [illegible]plified in our lives and conver[illegible]ion that commends it to others, [illegible] brings joy and peace to our[illegible]; but it must be believed with [illegible]

If we keep in mind God's purpose, [illegible] remember that we have been [illegible]lled according to that purpose, [illegible] narrowness of the way will not [illegible]ghten us; it will then be clearly [illegible] only a narrow way would [illegible]rther that purpose. Those who [illegible] to avoid what is distasteful [illegible] them either in the conditions or [illegible]scipline exacted by God, would [illegible] most unfit to rule the world in [illegible]ghteousness in the ages to come.

We remember once reading of [illegible]lebrated English general, Sir [illegible] Napier, that at the Battle [illegible] in India in 1845, an [illegible] came up to him and said, [illegible] Charles, we have taken a standard." The General looked at him [illegible] made no reply; and turning round began to speak to some one [illegible]—upon which the officer re[illegible], "Sir Charles, we have taken a standard," when the General turned [illegible] round upon him, and said, "Then take another." This suggests the lesson that boasting of [illegible] is no way to achieve success in the future. He who rests [illegible] a victory will soon be [illegible] God, you [illegible] your zeal. You [illegible] forward in the [illegible] realize that [illegible] to turn back [illegible] sisters scattered [illegible] to say to you the [illegible] has not come [illegible] for dividing the [illegible] yet. And to [illegible] to boast of having [illegible] we feel like [illegible] Forget[illegible] are behind, [illegible] that [illegible] will not be done [illegible] Who of us [illegible] but [illegible] now living know they shall die, and myriads will die before the close of this year. As our accounts close at death, it is not out of place to think of that event, and keep our books posted. But if we live with reference to future life all the time, the sythe of the enemy will not overtake us with unfinished business of importance on hand.

We sincerely hope that the year 1893 may prove to be a happy year to the Household of Faith. Trials they will have, and many of them, doubtless; but they are at peace with God,—the war in that direction has ended. On their side wilful sin has ceased, and they live lives of faith. On the part of God there is forgiveness of the past and acceptance in the Beloved. They, as the Bride, are watching for the Bridegroom, and as news from the East brings word that the morning cometh,—that morning without clouds—their faith is strengthened, and their hope confirmed. And seeing they have a standing invitation to cast all their burdens upon the Lord, what is to hinder their having a happy year? Nothing, providing they accept the divine aids within reach. "In the world ye shall have tribulation, but in me," says Jesus, "Ye shall have peace." Blessed assurance.

What the Truth Must Do For Us!

In resuming this important subject, the words of Jesus in Matthew xv. 9 instinctively came into mind. After reproving the Scribes and Pharisees for making the commandments of God of none effect by their traditions, he added: "But in vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." Are we not warranted in concluding that the truth must constitute acceptable worshippers? Can any other meaning be lawfully taken out of these words? If not, then the position of those who have the truth is a most exalted one; they can worship God acceptably, because they know what they need,—know what to ask for; know what it is the Father's pleasure to bestow; know what it is not proper to ask for; know what to thank him for; know for whom they can make supplication and intercession.

Yes; we can get near to the faithful in Christ Jesus on this line: as they glance over these simple reminders their hearts will swell with emotion, and their love will go out to God and Christ, and all who have been brought nigh by his precious blood, till every soul seems enrapport with both the Body and Head—the Christ. This gives a faint foretaste of the glory to follow, and impels them onward and upward in the divine life.

But there is another phase of the subject. The converse of all this is true of those who are not in the truth. They have not put on the name of Jesus the Anointed. God does not grant them audience through the Mediator. They do not know what they need; and, in fact do not want what he offers to give. How can such be acceptable worshippers? They come to God with imaginary ailments, and ask for impossible blessings, and the words of Jesus quoted from Matt. xv. 9 plainly define their status. "But in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrine the commandments of men."

If we accept these words as a finality, the Truth of God must constitute men and women acceptable worshippers. If, after what Jesus has said we consider it an open question, then the privileges of the believer vanish into thin air.

It now becomes necessary to enquire what commandments of men make the commandments of God of none effect. We trust that our readers will take in the whole situation:—That which makes the commandments of God of none effect prevents men from worshipping acceptably. The commandments of men are legion—so that we can only enumerate what are considered the greatest of them. The Doctrine of the Trinity was established by the commandments of men. The [illegible] Version says, "There are three persons in the Godhead; the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost [illegible] three are equal in power and glory." [illegible] speaking for the Spirit in [illegible] says, there is "One God and Father of all." This of necessity includes both the Holy Ghost and the Son, as his children, on the supposition that they both are persons. And if one God be father of all, the two other persons must have derived their substance and existence and power and glory from him; and are therefore not equal to him; and the words of the Son (John x. 29) that his Father is greater than himself, are true also of the Spirit. The doctrine of the trinity makes the commandments of God of none effect; as do also Natural Immortality, Eternal Torment, Eternity of Sin and Satan, Church Millennium, Immaterial or Sky Kingdom, and Vicarious Suffering. Gentile systems of religion are built upon these foundation stones. Who dare say they contain one God-idea? And when we add to this a man-made law of pardon in lieu of God's which requires faith in the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Anointed, repentance toward God and baptism for the remission of sins, is it any wonder that Jesus in Matt. xv: characterizes the worship of such as lip service, while their hearts are estranged? Is it hard, after what we have seen, to realize that acceptable worship without truth is impossible?

We ought to be able now to see how and why believers of the Gospel are not of the world? And how and why those who believe something else than the Gospel ARE of the world, and why Jesus prays that we may be separated from them by the truth? As those who must give an account for the manner and substance of our teaching, we say that he who believes the great truths we advocate, without separating from those who do not believe them, do not yet believe the Gospel! They merely give intellectual assent without believing with the heart, or else they believe them as abstract truths, just as they believe that Herod was eaten of worms, which is as true as any passage in the book, but the belief of it, and baptism in obedience to it, will not save, because it is not Gospel. The Gospel is God's converting and saving power.

Those who believe with Peter that we must be made partakers of divine nature by means of exceeding great and precious promises, realize that those promises comprise the Gospel, the truth that separates from sinners; and they separate themselves if they believe with the heart.

If they do not separate it is proof they consider that those they affiliate with can be saved as well without truth as with it. This is practically saying that God SAYS "The Gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation; but he does not mean it. He PRESCRIBES faith in the things promised, repentance toward God and baptism for the remission of past sins; but he allows us to believe what we like and make just what conditions we please.

Remember, Jesus was separate from sinners.

Remember, His disciples were separated from sinners as he was.

Remember, They had been made clean through the Word he had spoken to them.

Remember, that those who did not receive his words were not cleansed by them—they were the sinners the disciples had separated from.

Remember, Acceptable worship cannot be offered by any who lack the truth.

Remember, the spirit says, (2 Cor. vi. 15.) that the believer has no part with an unbeliever.

Remember, that God commands believers to come out from among unbelievers and be separate from them. 2 Cor. vi. 17.

Remember, that the promise to receive believers and be a Father to them and make them his sons and daughters is on condition that they separate from sinners. 2 Cor. vi. 17, 18.

Remember, the apostolic word informs us that it is by God's favor, we must be saved, through faith, and those who deem the Gospel non-essential, set aside both the favor on God's part, the faith on their own part. By voluntary humility and will-worship they propose to earn salvation.

Finally let us all remember, that like Paul we have been called by [illegible] of the world. In return for this favor let us turn our strength to [illegible] that they must come out of the thronged broad way into the narrow, if they would become sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty. Let us look about us and make sure that none be in danger from careless work on our part.

Expository.

The 14th verse of the second of Romans has puzzled not a few, but we think that collating a number of renderings the difficulty of Gentiles doing by virtue of nature the things of the law, is effectually disposed of. For when [the] Gentiles who have not [the] law do by nature the things of the law," etc. The bracketted words are omitted from the Revised Version as also from most other translators. Griesbach puts a comma after phusis—nature—so that the literal rendering would read: "For whensoever Gentiles—those no law having by nature—the things of the law may be doing, these—law not having—to themselves are a law," etc. See also the Diaglott rendering.

An Epistle to Hebrews.

Chapter 9.

1. Then the first (covenant) also had statutes of wage-service and the cosmic sanctuary.

2. For a tabernacle was fitted up, the first in which was the lampstand and the table and the setting forth of the loaves of bread, which is called a sanctified one (that is a sanctified tabernacle).

3. And within the second vail (or curtain) the tabernacle called a sanctified of sanctified ones (that is of tabernacles).

4. Having a golden altar and the ark of the covenant covered on every side with gold, in which was a golden pot containing the manna, and Aaron's sceptre that budded, and the tablets of the covenant.

5. And over and above it Cherubim of glory, over-shadowing the place of favor; concerning which it is not necessary now to speak particularly.

6. And these (tabernacles) having been filled up in this wise, into the first tabernacle the priests were allowed (to enter) constantly while perfecting their wage-service;

7. But into the second once a year the chief-priest alone, not without blood, which he was accustomed to offer for his own and the royal-people's sins of ignorance.

8. The sanctified spirit thus indicating that the way for the saints had not been made manifest, while yet the first tabernacle had a standing.

9. Which was a parable (teaching) until the appointed time impending, according to which they were accustomed to offer both votive-gifts and sacrifices, not that they were able to perfect the servitor in the way of conscious-knowledge.

10. Being imposed only in respect to kinds of food and drink, and different kinds of baptism and carnal statutes until an appointed time for a full restoration to uprightness.

11. And Christ having arrived, a chief-priest of the good things destined to be, hath entered into the sanctified of sanctified (places) once for all, through the greater and more perfect tabernacle not made with hands, that is not of this creation.

12. And not with blood of he-goats and yearling bullocks but with his own blood, having found an eternal way of redeeming.

13. For if the blood of he-goats and of bulls and a heifer's ashes sprinkling those who had become common (unsanctified) sanctifieth unto the cleansing of the flesh,

14. How much will the blood of the Christ who through sanctified spirit offered himself without blemish unto God, cleanse our conscious knowledge from dead works unto the serving of a living God for hire.

15. And therefore is he a Mediator of a new covenant in order that, death having occurred in the way of redeeming from the evasions pertaining to the first covenant, those who have been called might receive [illegible]

16. For where there is a covenant it is necessary that the death of the one covenanted (that is the victim) be brought about:

17. For a covenant over dead (victims) is sure, while it has not full power when the one covenanted (the victim) is living.

18. Hence not even was the first covenants renewed without blood;

19. For when every commandment had been spoken according to the law by Mouses unto all the royal-people, one took the blood of the bullocks and the he-goats with water and scarlet wool, and a hyssop, and sprinkled with it the book and all the royal-people.

20. Saying, This is the blood of the covenant which God hath enjoined in relation to you.

21. And the tabernacle moreover and all the vessels of the public-service (the liturgy) he sprinkled likewise with the blood.

22. And almost everything is accustomed to be cleansed with blood according to the law, and without a shedding of blood there occurred no remission.

23. It was necessary then that the patterns of the things in heaven be cleansed with these, but the heavenly things themselves with more efficient sacrifices than these.

24. For Christ hath not entered into sacred places made with hands, antitypes of the true; but into the heavens themselves now to appear before the face of God for our sakes.

25. Nor that he might offer himself many times. Even as the chief-priest is accustomed to enter into the sacred-place year after year with another's blood.

26. Since it would have been necessary for him to have suffered many times from the founding of the cosmos on down; but just now once for all, at the unification of the ages, for the putting away of the sin through the sacrifice of himself hath he been made manifest.

27. And inasmuch as there is reserved for men once for all to die under sentence, and after that a judicial trial.

28. In this wise also the Christ who hath been once for all offered that he might carry up (this is on an appeal to a higher court) the sins of many, will have appeared a second time without sin unto those who are expecting him in the way of salvation.

COMMENT.

"The cosmic sanctuary" instead of "a worldly sanctuary" C. V., or "a sanctuary of this world," R. V., the idea being that this sanctuary was a harmonic construction in all its details as a pattern of the real sanctuary in a heavenly order of things.

"Statutes of wage-service" instead of "statutes of divine service," R. V. "Called the sanctified" instead of "the Holy place" R. V., the word sanctified agreeing with tabernacle understood.

"Aaron's sceptre" instead of "rod" C. V. and R. V. it being the priest's and prophet's sceptre of authority. "The place of favor" instead of "Mercy-seat" C. V. and R. V.

"Indicating that the way for the saints" instead of "the way into the holy place," C. V. and R. V. This agrees with the general teaching of the gospel as well as being a grammatical rendering.

"Conscious-knowledge" instead of "conscience" as philosophy and theology have interpreted the word to mean—an infallible monitor namely, which all experience shows to be a false interpretation or definition and never so used by the sacred inspired writers in the old or new.

"Until an appointed time for a full, restoration to uprightness" instead of "Until a time of reformation" R. V. and C. V.

"The greater and more perfect tabernacle not made with hands" is generally interpreted to mean "Christ's heavenly body." Possibly it may, but there are objections to this interpretation and none to "the heavenly tabernacle" of which this writer is here speaking. It certainly could not be that the writer intended to compare the inner tabernacle with Christ's body, though he might intend to compare the first or outer tabernacle with it.

"Having found an eternal way of redeeming" instead of "having obtained eternal redemption" a very different thought from that [illegible]

[illegible] In order that, death having occurred, in the way of redeeming from the evasions of the first covenant," the death here referred to being Christ's death as the sacrificial lamb, and "Evasions" being used instead of "transgressions," C. V. and R. V., in accord with this writer's previous argument that the old covenant was efficient to accomplish all that God had in mind for his people.

The word translated "covenant" all along so far in the C. V. and R. V., does not and never did mean "testament" as we now use the word in legal and common parlance. For there must necessarily be two parties to any covenant: whereas a testament is the probated will of one person, and not valid until the death of the testator and the judicial probate of the "will" or "testament."

The C. V. and R. V. assumes however a covenant and a testament to be the same thing and upon this assumption build another assumption which is purely fictitious namely, that this writer is here making an argument which would be applicable only to a dead person's last will or testament. And to do this the text is twisted out of all proper grammatical construction and true rendering. The reader will please compare and judge for himself as to whether this criticism is not well made. If this "covenant" be "a testament," then it is God's testament and to be valid it must be proved to be his last will or testament and that he is dead. What greater absurdity could theological speculation lead to than this that the ever-living God to whom alone belongeth immortality," had died and that too to make his own will valid. This is something worse than ignorance. my brethren, and has the ear-marks of the one whom we know as Satan.

"Hence not even the first covenant rendered," etc., instead of "dedicated," C. V. and R. V.

The reference here is to the regular annual "renewing of the covenant-service" in the temple. Another absurdity. How could one dedicate a covenant? "For when every commandment had been spoken according to the law by Mouses" instead of "when every commandment had been spoken by Mouses according to the law," C. V. and R. V. The text shows this to be the true rendering. The appropriate official after the demise of Mouses continued to perform this service regularly year after year. In short it is the law given by Mouses according to which this custom obtained. not the commandment spoken by Mouses. See John x. 22, for an account of the observance, here translated "dedication" also.

"At the unification of the ages" instead of "the end of the world," C. V., or "at the end of the ages," R. V.—the idea being that all the ages before and after Christ's coming center here, as do all the lines in a picture in "the vanishing point."

"Inasmuch as there is reserved for all men," etc. Instead of "appointed," R. V. and C. V., gives a different trend to the argument here. "That he might carry up," etc., instead of "bear the sins of many," C. V. and R. V.—the idea being not "to bear" in the sense of endure, merely but to "carry up" an appeal to a higher court—a very important difference I think. This he does as our advocate and it is here at the court of heaven that he meets our Adversary.

Not only is the debt paid, but the justice of this whole matter is going to be asserted in a judicial way at the great assize.

[illegible] your hearts with me for a few moments in prayer. We can do nothing without God. He is a buckler to all those that trust in him. He it is that girdeth with strength for the battle. The Lord liveth and blessed be our rock; let the God of our salvation be exalted. "Some trust in chariots and some in horses, but we will remember the name of the Lord our God."

It is good to give thanks unto God for his marvellous lovingkindness, unto us poor worms of the dust that we are. We are better able to consecrate ourselves and all that we have anew to him. Let us do this. Let us thank him for having put into our hands the means wherewith to do good. God give us grace to spend every dollar of his money, aright!

O we need to hasten the work. While we wait, dear ones are dying—unbaptized! We have just received a letter from a [illegible] mother telling us of a [illegible] daughter's death, who had put off obedience, because there was no preacher to come and tell her the sweet, sweet story of Jesus' love. No one to come and baptize her into his dear name! It is heart-rending to know these things, and to feel, that upon our heads, rests the guilt. There might be more evangelists out, if we would do our duty.

What if it do cost "the loss of all things" in the present life? The everlasting riches will be ours. There are other dear ones waiting to learn what they must do in order to be saved; they will then obey. Young men, while you dally, not knowing what course to take, whether to go out with the Cross of Christ on your shoulders, or to tarry, where your wages will seem to be sure, men and women are perishing—let this thought nerve you for the battle. God will go with you and God will give you all that you need in the present time. Let no one slacken the giving hand. When the clouds of trouble break, as they surely will in the coming year, our gold will be worth no more than a dropping leaf. Let us use it to save the poor ones who have not heard of the crown, and the glory of the life to come.

Brethren, awaken! There is much for you to do. Bro. Hatch, is sitting idly at home, because you do not give him employ. Bro. Geiselman wants to beat work, and Bro. Schuman calls for help. Send them all into the field for the day of the Lord hasteth greatly.

Adam and Eve fully understood what they had lost by their disobedience; that the royalty—the headship of the race—the eternal kingship, had slipped from their hands; that it could only belong to one, who would keep the law, and therefore, prove himself worthy of attaining to an absolutely incorruptible and deathless estate. They knew that there must be no sin, no blemish in his character, who was to be the chosen of God to rule over men, that he, "whose throne was to endure as the days of heaven," must be "girded with righteousness, as with a girdle," that "justice and judgment might be the habitation of his throne." They were comforted, when the promise was made to the woman that "her seed should crush the serpent's head,"—"when a son, should be born, the lost dominion, with all its honors and blessings, would again come to the race." Hence Eve's exultant cry, at the birth of Cain,—"I have got a man from the Lord!"—and when Seth was given,—"For God hath appointed me another seed, instead of Abel, whom Cain slew." [illegible]—tried for a time upon Cain,—passed over to Abel, and from Abel to Seth. But the priest-king, so dimly foreshadowed, who was to undo the fearful work of Satan, had not yet come. Offerings must be made to God, looking forward to him. Atonement for sin, can only be had through faith in the foreshadowed One; the purifying blood, must make evident the faith. Death has come in through Satan, life will come in through Christ. But death was made the penalty for broken law, before Satan interfered. God, himself affixed. He it was, who hung it over the heads of transgressors. It was executed upon Adam, the representative man, [illegible] the race. He died, in an absolutely literal sense, and was resolved to dust. He became as though he had not been.

The condemnation still hangs over the heads of sinners. "The wages of sin, is death,"—not to the sin, but to the sinner. He must be a counterfeit Son of God, and a counterfeit religion and hope. The son of the woman, to the deceived people would be the priest-king of promise, they would believe him immortal. But the plot, if such plot there was, went down in the flood, to be tried again, on this side of the waters.

[illegible]

God instituted an anti-typical, priest-kingship, with Melchisdec, as its head. Satan counterfeited it.

The name Nimrod, signifies "the extremely impious rebel." He "builded Nineveh and Rehoboth City and Calah and Resen," and, was probably instrumental in the building of Babel. At any rate the apostate religion, can be traced back to a period, long before the Terahites left the land of Canaan.

Records have recently been discovered at Babylon and Nineveh, that establish beyond question, the existence of a secret society of unbelievers, in the land of Chaldea, shortly after the death of Nimrod. Micah v. 6, connects Nimrod, with the land of Assyria. Genesis x. 10, says the beginning of his kingdom, was Babylon; tradition affirms that he was its founder and first king. We put all these things together; and reason, that if God called the great grandson of Noah—Nimrod or the Rebel,—he must have been the one, who first, on this side of the flood, apostatized from the worship of Jehovah. The records having brought the idolatrous faith so near to his time, we can hardly escape from the conclusion, that he was, in a most conspicuous manner connected with it, as its priest-king, or head, as a descendant of the gods. The doctrine of Satan had gone through the flood, and at his instigation its altars were set up. "Thou shalt not surely die," was the only hypothesis on which the false religion could be built,—therefore, was it studiously taught, and most industriously too, by the members of the secret organization, whose headquarters were at Babylon,—that somehow, even when man seemed to die, he yet survived.

This false theory made possible the worship of demi-gods, or dead men. It spread rapidly, and Abraham was called out of the land are the five planets, the sun, a bareheaded female, and the figure of a man, standing under the sun, and advancing towards the kingly form with a wreath of balls in his hand (are they beads?)—the female precedes him,—both have the attitude of suppliants. They are priest and priestess of Baal. The worship of the whole host of heaven, is plainly symbolized. We come to Nebuchadnezzar; he has taken and carried part of the vessels of the house of God, from the land of Israel, to the treasure house of his god. He has men in his service, who may not marry,—they are eunuchs. The associate rulers of the future kingdom of God, are neither to marry nor to be given in marriage,—hence the celibate priesthood of paganism. The high-priest of the religion of Jehovah, stood as a mediator between God and men, that he might "present on the behalf of men," "both gifts and sacrifices for sin,"—the priests of paganism were middle-men, between man and the deity. The office of priest and prophet under God, were in many cases also united.

Therefore, paganism had its priestly soothsayers, or prophets. Nebuchadnezzar chose four young men of Judah, "of the king's seed and of the princes" in whom was no blemish "skillful in wisdom, and cunning in knowledge and understanding science," to be schooled for places in the Chaldean college of cardinals,—they were Daniel, Hananiah, Michael and Azariah,—God gave them knowledge and skill in all learning and wisdom, and Daniel had understanding in all visions and dreams."

They stood before the King, and were found ten times better when enquired of, than all the magicians of his realm.

The two religions,—the false gods and the true God, were to be brought into comparison before the king, by a test that would incontestively prove, in which of whose ministers "dwelt the spirit of the Holy One."

Nebuchadnezzar had a dream; it went from him, some one must reveal to him the forgotten dream and the [illegible] our adoption into the family of God is in the mind of the evangelist, a privilege bestowed by grace upon all who receive the Divine Son, called in the first verse of this chapter, the Word. But this adoption is not of privilege only, but of right—God-given right—inasmuch as there is given to believers a new nature, a divine nature; for this being begotten of God is a birth from heaven, and is the commencement of the new life. Its origin is not in man, but in God. Its source is not human, but divine and heavenly. The Jews, or at least the Jewish leaders, seem to have regarded themselves as God's children, and as having the Divine favor, because they had descended from Abraham; but this passage shows that to be begotten of God is not after the order of natural generation. The change is wrought only by divine power, and adoption and regeneration are concomitant arts. Natural life follows the natural birth, or begins with the natural birth: so spiritual life follows the spiritual birth, or begins with the spiritual birth.

2 Cor. v. 17; "Wherefore if any man is in Christ, he is a new creature (margin, or there is a new creation); the old things are passed away; behold, they are become new." The word used here by the apostle denotes a new nature. The old, carnal, selfish nature is put down, is deprived of its former power, and in Christ, he has passed through a spiritual birth, and passed into a heavenly life. And this new creation, this spiritual birth is a present experience, is realized as soon as the soul, by faith is united to Christ. This new birth, as an experience to be enjoyed now, is a truth the apostles often insisted upon. "For we are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus for good works, which God afore prepared that we should walk in them." "That ye be renewed in the spirit of your mind, and put on the new man, which after God hath been created in righteousness and holiness of trut[illegible] 10; iv. 24. "Seeing [illegible] put off the old man [illegible] that is absolutely true. In regeneration there is introduced into the soul a new principle of life,—the Christ-life, spiritual and divine. Christ liveth in the regenerate man, communicates to him His own life. Hence the new birth in its nature is much greater than the first. The first or natural birth constitutes us children of Adam; by it we become a part of the Adamic family: the second or spiritual birth constitutes us children of God; by it we become members of the royal family, of whom the Lord Almighty is the Father, or a part of the great household of faith. Now as the Holy Spirit uses the Word as the instrument of our regeneration and adoption, let us love and honor the Word. It is everlasting truth; it will never fail but will abide for ever; and if we receive it into our hearts, and keep it there, and live under its influence and guidance, we shall live and abide unto the ages of the ages.

1 John iii. 2: "Beloved, now are we children of God, and it is not yet made manifest what we shall be." This passage has the clearest possible reference to sonship, to our being born again, born from above, or begotten by the will of God. We become God's children by a spiritual birth brought about by the operation of the Holy Spirit. John, and the believers to whom he wrote, were then already the subjects of this new birth, and their sonship would be made manifest at the appearing of the Christ, when greater honor and glory would be conferred upon them.

1 John v. 1: "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is begotten of God." Here again we have the new birth, in language unmistakably plain, as a work which is wrought during the natural life. Begotten of God is the second birth, and it takes place when a man receives Jesus as the Christ, the Anointed of God. Christ is the Greek word which corresponds with the Hebrew word Messiah, and refers to Jesus as King, anointed for the of[illegible] by the Holy resurrection when Jesus shall come. When he shall call them from their dusty graves to a life that is incorruptible and that fadeth not away. But the saddest of all is to know that those whom we have loved and walked with turn away from the good old Book and say "there is no life but the present." "Christ is dead and dead forever." The Bible has caused divisions in our homes! Dear brothers and sisters, if we exercise the Christ-like spirit, which I understand is love, joy, longsuffering, tenderness, gentleness, meekness, patience, it is impossible so it seems to me. Such a disposition would melt a stony heart, instead of being antagonistic. But is it not often the case that the husband exercises his lordship, more than the husband. How much there is in that word "husband" and the word "father." A husband, how he nourishes and cares for those under his charge and so with the word "father." Does not the Bible make me more tender and patient with those who seem to be contrary to me. Is not the fault in me rather than in the Blessed Book? "Let us ponder the path" the wise man says, "before we step out from the Path of Life." Paul says, "If we only in this life have hope, we are of all men, most miserable."

Why?

He had fought with beasts at Ephesus. He had counted all things as dung that he might win Christ, and the resurrection from among the dead. If this hope is all false, then he could truly say we were of all men most miserable. Dear brothers and sisters let us strive the coming year to manifest the fruits of the spirit then it will be indeed a Happy New Year to us all.

Dear brethren suffer the words of exhortation.

Personally I know I am weak, as we all are, but he has said, "As thy days are so shall thy strength be." I never shall forget the words of my dear sister before she died, as she explained after an article I read about the Kingdom of God upon Earth "It lifts me up." As faith grasps the promise of God it brings the future promises so real and vivid before the mind.

Her life at home had been one of suffering since our parents died when she was young, and to come here for a few years to suffer the balance of her days seems to [illegible] sad picture. But often she said to me and my dear wife, she was glad she came over to [illegible] her [illegible] at Oklahoma. But did not arrive in time; got there on the 18, one day after their mother was laid away into the carnal house of death waiting the summons from on high till he will come, who held the keys of hell and of death. Her age was 70 years 2 months and 22 days.

Subject. I would not have you to be ignorant concerning them that sleep, 1 Thess. iv. 13 to end.

We had a full house to preach to and all seemed to be interested very much.

The year of 1892 is nearly gone and many of our dear brothers and sisters are gone with the year. As the years go by, so one by one we also go. She leaves Brother Davi[illegible] her husband, and six children, and two brothers, and a host of friends to mourn, but we need not mourn as those that have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. Those that knew our sister [illegible] loved her best.

Brothers who will be the next [illegible] it? All ask yourselves this question and let us all so live that whether we are awake or asleep we may be ready to meet our loved ones that have fallen asleep is my prayer. Funeral services by the writer.

"Joel A Simonds, who died at the residence of his daughter Mrs. N. A. Fletcher, in this city yesterday afternoon, was well known to all the older residents of Grand Rapids. He was born in Vermont in 1812, and in boyhood moved with his father's family to Genessee county, N. Y. After his marriage in 1854 he moved to Michigan, settling upon a portion of the Barney Burlan farm, north of this city. In 1871 he moved into the city, and for several years was engaged in business here. For twelve years past he had resided in Chicago with his youngest son. During the anti-slavery agitation he was an ardent abolitionist, and in the early years of his residence in this state was a strong advocate of advanced methods in education. He was one of the founders of the Mayhew Teachers' Association, which was for a long time a leading factor in progressive rural education in Kent County. He was one of the early presidents of the Kent County Agricultural Society, and assisted in the locating, clearing and settling of the old grounds and the erection of the first building. In religion he was a Second Adventist and held very pronounced views, of which he was an earnest and fearless advocate. Evening Prayer.

O, may thy kingdom come,
And may thy will be done,
On earth as it is done;
By those who live in heaven!
Fill thou our hearts with love,
From thy white throne above,
And by so doing prove,
Thy grace to us is given.

Jesus, be thou our guide;
Let not our feet to slide,
Nor we our sins to hide,
Under a cover.
When in thy righteous will,
Thou dost thy word fulfill,
Give us thy "Peace, be still,"
When life is over.

Letter to a Friend.

Dear Friend:

Having had the pleasure of hearing you preach last Sabbath on the kingdom of heaven, yet I must say that the essential things contained in the Word of God, bearing upon this subject were left out, which I should liked very much to have heard you brought in. But whether done intentionally or not you know best, but I wish to call your attention to the same. A part of your sermon I liked very much, the exceptional part was you did not go far enough—as to the nature, location and time of establishment of the kingdom. I was glad indeed, to hear you repudiate the false theory of going to heaven at death, and also to hear you say that the kingdom is on earth. But why did you not explain to the people that it is now only in its primary condition, and that we are now only in the kingdom by anticipation. God is now and has been during this Gentile dispensation taking out from among them a people for his kingdom, and the way this is being done is by his Word (the Gospel of the kingdom) being preached to mankind; your quotation—"The kingdom of heaven is within [illegible] expounded by you, and hundreds of other teachers of the Word, causes much confusion. My friend, this passage of Scripture you will find by inspection was not addressed to the disciples of Christ, but to the wicked Pharisees, which you will find upon investigation. Now my friend do you suppose that the kingdom of God was in those wicked Pharisees' hearts? I do not so understand it. Well now, what is the meaning? The margin reads "among" you; but by still further investigation we find it very nicely and correctly rendered thus—"The Royal Majesty of the heavens is among you," or "in your midst." If your exposition of this passage of Scripture be true, my friend, please explain the following Scriptures; "Behold thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his Father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Luke i. 31, 32, 33. "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the [illegible] shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice [illegible] Lord of hosts [illegible]" Isaiah ix. 6, 7. "I have made a covenant with my chosen, I have sworn unto David my servant, Thy seed will I establish forever, and build up thy throne to all generations. Selah. * * * My covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips. Once have I sworn by my holiness that I will not lie unto David, his seed shall endure forever, and his throne as the sun before me, it shall be established forever as the moon, and as a faithful witness in heaven?" Psalms lxxx. 3, 4; 34; 35.

When Zedekiah the last that reigned upon David's throne, became so wicked, the Lord said; "Remove the diadem, take off the crown; this shall not be the same; I will overturn, overturn, overturn it, and it shall be no more until He come whose right it is; and I will give it him." Ezekiel xxi. 25-27.

Now the reference here takes us to Luke first 31, 32, 33 as given in my first citation. Nearly 20 years after Christ had ascended into heaven James said: "Men and brethren, hearken unto me: Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name, and to this agree the words of the prophets as it is written, after this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up." Acts xv. 13, 14, 15, 16. "And I saw in the night visions, and behold one like the Son of Man came with the cloud of heaven, and came to the ancient of days, and they brought him near before Him, and there was given Him dominion and glory and a kingdom, that all people, nations and languages should serve Him. His dominion is an everlasting dominion that shall not pass away, and His kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." Dan. vii. 13, 14.

"Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth. In His days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely; and this is his name whereby He shall be called, The Lord our Righteousness." Jer. xxiii. 5, 6. "And His dominion shall be from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth." Zech. ix. 10. "The Lord shall reign over them in Mount Zion from henceforth even forever." Mic. iv. 6, 7. "As truly as I live all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord." Num. xiv. 21. "Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously." Isa. xxiv. 23.

"For the Lord hath chosen Zion; He hath desired it for His habitation. This is my rest forever; here will I dwell; for I have desired it." Psa. cxxxii. 13, 14. "Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth is Mount Zion, on the sides of the north, the city of the great King." Isa. xlviii. 2.

"When the Lord shall build up Zion He shall appear in his glory." [illegible] 16. Now my friend these are only a few of the great number of passages of Scripture found in all parts of the Bible—both Old and New Testaments—that beautifully describe the beauties and blessings of the kingdom of heaven. Christ was seen by his disciples for forty days after his passion, and spoke to them of the things concerning the kingdom of God; and the last thing the bereaved and sorrowing disciples asked him was, "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom unto Israel?" Acts i. 6, 7. "And he said unto them, It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power."

"For the Lord will comfort Zion: He will comfort all her waste places; and he will make her wilderness like Eden, and her desert like the garden of the Lord; joy and gladness shall be found therein, thanksgiving and the voice of melody." Isa. li. 3.

"The Lord also shall roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the heavens and the earth shall shake: but the Lord will be the hope of his people, and the strength of the children of Israel, so shall ye know that I am the Lord your God dwelling in Zion, my mountain: Then shall Jerusalem be holy and there shall no strangers pass through her any more." Joel iii. 16, 17.

"This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts i. 11. Now what is our Savior's coming for? Ans.—to reign. See Matt. xxv. 31. "When the Son of man shall come in his glory and all the holy angels (saints) with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." which is the throne of his father David and the one which we have been talking of, the one which has been promised to him.

When shall he come? For an answer please read the 24th of Matt. in connection with Luke 21st and study Daniel, Isaiah, Ezekiel, Zechariah, and Revelations. For Christ said, "all things must be fulfilled which are written in the law and in the prophets and in the Psalms concerning me," and let us remember what the apostle Peter said,—"We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn and the day-star arise in your hearts: Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."

And Peter after telling his brethren what to do, how to live, etc., says, "For if ye do these things ye shall never fail: For so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." 2 Peter i. 2.

My friend do you not see that although these brethren were followers of Christ, yet they were not in the kingdom only by anticipation; because Peter says an entrance "shall be ministered unto you," etc.

—And again it is said,—"Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God," which shows that the resurrection must first take place. More hereafter.

And he shall speak great words against the most High. Dan. vii. 25. And he shall exalt himself, and magnify himself above every God. Dan. xi. 36. So that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God. 2 Thess. ii. 4. And he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God. Rev. xiii. 6. I beheld, and the same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them. Dan. vii. 21. And it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them. Rev. xiii. 7. He was to arise out of the fourth kingdom. Dan. vii. 24. He was to arise out of the four winds of heaven. Dan. viii. 8, 9. He was to arise in the latter time of the kingdom of the Greeks. Dan. viii. 22-23.

Bear in mind that Daniel speaks of the horns as kings, while John speaks of the beast as kingdom. But the two sections of the vision together and we have a king and a kingdom of people, and a country ruled by a king. The spirit teaches that the Man of Sin is the result of the apostasy. The little horn was to make war with the saints and overcome them, and all the blood of saints shed upon the earth is found in the woman. In the make up of [illegible] we have the [illegible] the little horn or king [illegible] church. The little horn makes war with the saints until judgment is given to them. The beast makes war with the saints to the end and judgment overtakes the woman when she is drunken with the blood of the saints.

Daniel speaks of the judgment of the little horn, and John's attention is called to the judgment of the woman. Judgment will overtake the woman when she is seated on the beast. In order to do this the beast must come out of the deep, and the woman be seated on him. In other words she must be elevated to power [illegible]. The [illegible] He went down into the pit, but he will ascend when the time comes referred to in the vision (the judgment of the whore.) The vision of Rev. xvii. refers to her judgment, not her former career. The little horn was to arise amid ten. He was to pluck up three of this first ten. All of the ten of John's section of the vision engage in the woman's destruction, and all of the ten make war with the Lamb and are conquered by him. The ten of Daniel vii. arose at one period and the ten of Rev. xvii. arose at another time.

How few there are that are looking for the fallen church to come into power again. And all that dwell on the earth whose names are not written in the book of life will wonder—be astonished—when they see the beast, because he was, and is not, but shall be present.

Will those who are expecting antichrist to arise outside and apart from the fallen church, point out some things that this antichrist does? She made all nations drunken with the sins of her fornication. Because of the sins of her fornication all the nations will fall. In her is found the blood of all the saints killed upon the earth. What is left for another to do? If infidelity is what is wanted in the make up of the Man of Sin, there is enough of it [illegible]. There is not room in this world for another antichrist, neither is there any work for another to do. Admit that the fallen church will come into power again, and the vision as it relates to antichrist and his work is plain.

The judgment as it relates to the apostasies is not a long [illegible] of work. But her plagues shall come in one day, death, famine, and mourning, and she shall be utterly burnt in fire. The career of the beast for forty-two months, and the woman's career for a time, times and a half, is yet future. She will be nourished or fattened by the powers in her place, for three years and a half. Rev. xii. 14. Her place is a seat of power over the beast. Rev. xvii. 3. This place is in the wilderness. The antitype of the wilderness in which the church of the Old Covenant wandered until all of the sinners perished. For this place, this seat of power, she lusted, and in this wilderness of sin judgment will overtake her. Let us not err by trying to make too much of the vision of Daniel's prophecy. We have [illegible] history of [illegible] all [illegible] and all [illegible] exists at certain [illegible] time. As it arose [illegible] Dan. vii. 24 [illegible] 7, 41 [illegible] Rev. xvii. 12 [illegible]

Submitted in love,

A DREAM.

With open Bible on my knee, swayed by conflicting [illegible] and tortured by soul doubts and [illegible], I raise my [illegible] dimmed [illegible] heaven. Oh thou eternal [illegible] Thou, whose love had no beginning and shall have no end, [illegible] who created the universe [illegible] to my petition [illegible] [illegible] down in [illegible] thy servant. Oh that I [illegible] to the days of the [illegible] prophets [illegible] of them. And as I [illegible] thought I [illegible] voice [illegible] the gentle zephyr whisper sweetly, "You [illegible] Peace be still."

And Lo, what wonders pass before me. My humble lodgings pass away, and instead a temple, whose lofty dome is like the heavens, its walls of burnished gold, bedecked with precious stones; and as I gaze in speechless awe and wonderment, Lo the air seems filled with music [illegible] did hear. Methought I closed mine eyes in silent prayer, and once again I heard the gentle voice say; "Peace, be still." And opening wide mine eyes with fear and trembling sore, I beheld a Kingly company around a central figure grouped that did surpass them all in majesty of bearing. In stature, tall and straight, of perfect mould; his hair in glowing ringlets on his ample shoulders rests, and on his forehead, bright and dazzling as the noonday sun, a crown bearing the words, The Lord of lords, and King of kings. Around him are grouped the prophets, one and all, From Moses unto John; not one was missing. And their faces did also shine; and truth, and peace, and love, and joy sat enthroned on each brow.

When I saw these things, my powers failed me, and falling prone upon the ground, I cried out: Lord, what wouldst Thou have me to do?

With voice of touching sweetness, like far off music, he replied: "I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end. I will give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life freely. Thy prayer and thine anguish hath come up in remembrance before me and behold I and all the prophets am come to answer thee, touching those things of which thou desirest to know. Cast aside then thy fear. Arise and question us. And with his words my strength returned to me, insomuch that I marveled at my confidence. And I stood erect and spoke as follows: I little merit, oh King, this condescension on thy part, but inasmuch as Thou hast so graciously inclined Thine ear unto me, I will joyfully inquire of Thee and Thy prophets, touching those things which concern the salvation of mankind, and upon which the creeds of mortal men are so hopelessly mixed. Therefore, Moses, Thou most venerable of all the prophets, tell me how was man formed. Moses—That which I have written, oh Son of Man, is true. "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." Gen. ii. 9.

But, Father Moses, it is said by mortal man that the breath in his nostrils is the soul. Is this true?

Moses—Man (not the breath) became a living soul.

What then was the penalty of disobedience?

Moses—"Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." Gen. iii. 19.

Obadiah canst thou tell us what then shall be his condition?

Obadiah—"He shall be as though he had not been." Obe. xvi.

Now, Father Moses, wilt thou tell us how the death sentence was [illegible]?

Moses—As physical decay was arrested and youth was renewed by virtue of the fruit of the tree of life. Therefore the Lord said, "Lest he put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life and live forever." So He drove out the man, and he placed at the east of the garden Cherubims, and a flaming sword, which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life." Gen. iii. 22, 24.

And what then [illegible] of Adam?

Moses—"All the days that Adam [illegible]

[illegible] of Man, the words which the Spirit hath given me to speak, hath no uncertain sound. Give me then [illegible] my answer, "That which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even the one thing befalleth them. As the one dieth, so dieth the other. Yea, they have all one breath; so that a man hath no preeminence above a beast, [illegible] All are of the dust and all turn to dust again." Eccl. iii. 19-20.

Oh, venerable Sir, light is breaking in upon me, and much I fear me that the teachings of men hath strayed from truth upon this question, for they teach that death is but a change, the gate to heaven. That man is but a captive here held in durance vile, and that death is a friend that sets the prisoner free. That between death and the resurrection there is a conscious existence for man in holiness or misery. What dost thou know about this matter?

Ecclesiastes—There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave, whither thou goest, for the living know that they shall die, but the dead know not anything. Eccl. ix. 5-10. Son of Man I have spoken. Go and spread this truth among thy people for assuredly upon this question much error doth rest.

Father Moses, as touching the state of the dead between death and the resurrection, what did the Lord say to thee concerning thine own death?

Moses—He said, "Thou shalt sleep with thy fathers." Deut. xxxi. 16.

And Job, Thou pattern of truth and patience, what dost thou know concerning this great question?

Job—"So man lieth down, and riseth not; till the heavens be no more. They shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep." Job xiv. 12.

But Job, the sons of men tell us that our loved fathers who are dead have only gone before, and they are now up in heaven watching over us and conscious of our deeds of good or evil. Canst thou tell us if these things be true?

Job—The sons of men lacketh wisdom and have given their ears unto fables. Had they inquired of us they would have understood that when a son of Adam dieth, "His sons come to honor and he knoweth it not, they are brought low but he perceiveth it not of them." Job xiv. 21.

David, Thou sweet singer of Israel, dost thou too, agree with thy brethren upon this question?

David—Truth is mighty and must prevail; it has been written that "In death there is no remembrance of Thee (God). In the grave who can give thee thanks." Psa. vi. 5.

Then King David, do I understand you to say that the dead saints are not in heaven playing on golden harps and singing praises to God, as the children of men do teach?

David—Son of man, get thee back to thy people and say unto them concerning this matter that "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence." Psa. cxv. 17.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JAN. 11, 1893

WE have this past week mailed statements to those of our subscribers who are in arrears beyond the first of the present year. We hope all will respond to these calls promptly. We do this for a mutual understanding. If any one cannot renew at this time, let him write us so, and we will try and await the convenience of such ones. As we have reset our mail list entire lately, it is not improbable that mistakes occur. These are of course avoided as far as possible, and corrected at once when pointed out. We do not claim infallibility. Let us hear from all as fast as possible. We thank the kind friends who have sent in their renewals so promptly. We feel encouraged.

ONE of the surest ways to secure a continuance of God's favors is to be grateful for those of the past and the present.

WE were not mistaken in appealing to those who are on tip toe with expectation. They are responding already; our field of usefulness is widening and we are thankful. Let the good work go on.

A RECENT writer says that melancholy people are self-centered; and the specific for this trouble is to become God-centered, and then they will live for others. Love to God soon manifests itself by love to others.

PROF. Briggs has been acquitted, but the prosecutors have appealed the case. It is given out that Prof. Smith of Lane Seminary is to remain in that institution, although convicted of heresy on several particulars. It looks as if both the Bible and the creeds have to go.

A DISPATCH from London says:—Six edicts have recently been issued by the Russian government against the Jews, and the persecutions of that scattered and peeled people are worse than ever. Every effort is now being made to induce them to renounce their religion for that of the Greek Apostacy.

HIRAM MUNGER of Springfield, Massachusetts, 80 years of age, asks the ministers of that town some very pertinent questions, through the local newspapers. He calls for categorical answers. We are afraid the old patriarch will not live to get the answers. Here are the questions:

1. Is life immaterial or material?
2. Was there ever a time when there was no life?
3. Can there be consciousness and intelligence without life?
4. Does anything leave man but life at death?
5. Which was first, living matter or nonliving matter?
6. Can there be eternal life without an eternal body?
7. Is there more than one kind of life?
8. Can life do anything outside of a living being?
9. Has life any life?
10. Does life either live or die?
11. Has life any attributes?
12. What became of the lives of the animals and men at the flood?
13. Can life continue longer than the body in which it is confined?
14. Can the brain think without life?
15. Can the life think without the brain?
16. Is life a creation?
17. Can anything inorganic have life?
18. Can anything die that is not organic?
19. Can anything immaterial have life?

The Woman's Seed. No. 2.

Having seen how necessary in the purpose of God, it was for the to Be Anointed Jesus to be made under the law, let us now give attention to what is said in the 16th 17th and 18th verses of the second chapter of Hebrews: "For verily he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham: wherefore, in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people; for in that he himself hath suffered, being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted." This language would imply that some one for whom the pronoun "Him" is used, took on him a nature that he did not previously possess, and that the newly assumed nature was not that of Angels, but of men. Angelic nature is divine, and the only other nature we are acquainted with is human nature. Now, supposing the "Him" to represent a person who existed before he took on him the seed of Abraham, would not that person possess divine nature? If so, how could it be said of him that he "took not on him the nature of angels?" How could he take what he already possessed? We have long since concluded that the common rendering was very misleading, for reasons that will presently appear. In the first place the margin of the Common Version reads: "He taketh not hold of angels," this is much better, but still the casual reader is apt to read it in connection with the word "Nature" in the text in this way; He taketh not hold of angels' Nature. But be it observed, the word nature has been supplied by the translators, to make clear what they understood the sense to be, but which we regard as very misleading.

Henderson's translation reads: "He taketh not hold of angels."

The Revised Version reads "Not of angels doth he take hold."

Dean Alford's translation is as follows: "For, as we know, it is not angels that he helpeth, but it is the seed of Abraham that he helpeth."

Rotherham's reads thus: "For NOT SURELY of messengers is he laying hold, but of Abraham's seed he is laying hold."

Conybeare and Hawson have rendered it in these words: "For he giveth his aid not unto angels, but unto the seed of Abraham."

Jamieson, Fausset and Brown, render it in this way: "For as we all know.... It is not angels that he is helping (the present implies duration) but it is the seed of Abraham that he is helping. The verb is literally, to help by taking one by the hand, as in Heb viii. 9, "When I took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt." Thus it answers to the word succor in the 18th verse, and deliver in verse 15. Not angels who have no flesh and blood, but the children who have flesh and blood, he takes hold of to help."

Prof. Gardner translates, "For surely he doth not get his claim from angels; but he gets his claim from Abraham's seed;" explaining this to mean his claim to be our advocate.

The American Bible Union renders it as follows: "For surely he does not succor angels, but he succors the seed of Abraham."

Whiting's translation is, "For truly he helpeth the seed of Abraham."

The Diaglott renders it in this way: "Besides he does not in any way take hold of angels, but he takes hold of the seed of Abraham; hence he was obliged to be assimilated to his brethren in all things."

By the aid of the above collation of different renderings we think the truth is not difficult to find. When we understand that he takes hold of the seed of Abraham to help them, we are prepared to read the next verse intelligently: "wherefore in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren;" and then follows the reason why it was necessary for him to be made in all things like unto his brethren, viz.; "that he might be a merciful and faithful High Priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people; for in that he himself suffered, being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted." It seems to us that every honest devout soul should feel like shouting aloud with joy and gratitude because Christ was made in all things like unto his brethren, so that he could suffer like them, be tempted like them, and feel like them, and sympathize with them, and in that case he qualified to succor them;—in a word, "be a merciful and faithful High Priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people."

God never makes any mistakes; he never does what is not necessary, so it was necessary for Christ to be made exactly like his brethren, that by suffering like them he would be able to succor them. Be it remembered too that he was made perfect through suffering, he was not made perfect before he suffered. It must also be borne in mind that his brethren, like to whom he was made, were not partly human and partly divine.

But it may further illustrate the wisdom and goodness of God to refer to the 9th verse; "But we see Jesus who was made a little lower than the angels, for the suffering of death." It is safe to say that man would have devised a Savior possessed of angelic nature. But what a tremendous blunder that would have been! Had he not been made lower than the angels he could not have died: would have been unfit for the very thing that it was necessary for him to do—viz. Even now in the face of this testimony, men invest Christ with a nature that could not die. But when we think of it that he was made lower than the angels so that he could die, it thrills our whole soul, body and spirit, and we feel like shouting with Paul, "Oh, the depths of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God,—how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out, for who hath known the mind of the Lord, or who hath been his counsellor? Or, who hath first given to him, and it shall be recompensed to him again." He is beholden to no one; "for of him, and through him, and to him, are all things, to whom be glory forever." This of course, includes the Christ, and directs our attention to the 7th verse of the second Psalm where the decree is made, "Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee." Does not God here inform the Son of his origin? If so remember the prediction was not made till about 3000 years after Adam, and it was a thousand years later still when the begetting became a fact. If it be asked on what principle Jehovah could say, "This day I have begotten thee," when it did not take place for a thousand years? I answer, by the word of the Spirit in Paul, Rom. iv. 17, that "God who quickeneth the dead," and calleth those things which be not, (yet) as though they were," because he has so fully determined that they shall be, that he regards them as already accomplished.

Jesus was not created as the first man, but begotten—the only begotten Son. If it be asked how begotten? The answer is, "The word was made flesh and dwelt among us." If it be asked how the word was made flesh? We answer, In the same way that the worlds were framed. How were the worlds framed? The answer is found in the 3rd verse of the 11th of Hebrews—framed by the word of God. How framed by the word of God? The answer may be found in the 23rd Psalm and in verses six to nine. "By the word of the Lord were the heavens made, all the host of them by the breath of his mouth. He gathereth the waters of the sea together as an heap; he layeth up the depth in storehouses. Let all the earth fear the Lord; let all the inhabitants of the world stand in awe of him, for he spake and it was done; he commanded and it stood fast." Oh! what power in that word!

If we step outside of a starry night and look up, and then quote the verses, "By the word of the Lord were the heavens made, and all the hosts of them by the breath of his mouth,—he spake and it was done:" we may well stand in awe of him, but it would help us to understand how the word was made flesh. The fiat went forth, Isa. vii. 14; "Behold, a virgin shall conceive and bear a son, and thou, oh virgin, shall call his name Immanuel." This was a sign worthy of him by whom all the hosts of the heavens were made. He said, "Behold a virgin shall conceive," and she did. He spake THIS too, and it was done; for after the angel had explained to Joseph what was about to happen, it is added in the 22nd verse of the first chapter of Matthew, "Now all this was done that it might be fulfilled which was SPOKEN of the Lord by the prophet, saying, "Behold a virgin shall be with child—an unheard of wonder—and they shall call his name Immanuel." "He spake and it was done."

But we have not yet done with Heb. ii. 9, where it says Christ was made lower than the angels, for the suffering of death. It was absolutely necessary for him to die. He could not have died had he been made on the same plane of existence as angels. Angels cannot die. But why was it necessary for Christ to die? One answer is found in Heb. ix. 22, for there we learn that in the economy of God, there is no remission of sins without the shedding of blood. Jesus could have shed no blood had he possessed divine nature; and could not have became the Savior.

But a serious looking question may be asked here, viz.: Does it not say that he was begotten of God? and that being the case, would not the Son have the nature of his Father? Ordinarily, that principle holds. This was a miraculous interposition. By spirit power he was made of a woman, and hence possessed the nature of the woman. Inasmuch as no man was his father, he did not inherit the warped and twisted disposition of such father. Here God's wisdom and love shines forth again. Four thousand years had passed since man sinned, and every son and daughter of Adam had tainted his and her blood with sin, so that among the teeming millions who had lived and died, no one of them had blood that was acceptable to God as an offering for the sin of others. They were all sinners, and had no precious blood to offer. God foresaw that this would be so, and provided against it, by promising that the "Seed of the woman" should bruise the serpent's head. He who doeth all things well would select the most suitable woman in the world out of whom to make the Savior. And would it not be like him to have selected her parents and grand parents and great grand parents away back to the Father of the Faithful? Infinite pains were taken in order that the Second Adam should not fail as did the first, for his Father's Spirit was given him without measure, and with the grand result that he was tempted and tried in all points like as we are, yet without sin. His blood was precious; it was the blood that made effective the new covenant—the life-giving instrument. That we all may participate in the life and glory made possible through the efficiency of that blood, is our prayer.

Watchfulness and Prayer.

Prayer is a request for something we desire. We may make requests of any one, but we are thinking only of requests of God now. An astonishing prominence is given to this subject in the Word of God; but it shows at once how helpless we are, and what rich provision the Father has made for his children, and with what a bountiful hand he dispenses his favors. He does not merely make known his willingness to assist all who ask him in Jesus' name,—he invites and enjoins them to ask—tells that withholding does not enrich him, nor giving impoverish him; tells them to come boldly, and he will distribute liberally, and will not upbraid them if they come ever so often. Indeed our Lord in Luke xviii. 1: says men ought always to pray and not to faint,—i. e., not to weary of it. This shows that we always need something that God ~~waits to~~ give; and, inasmuch as it elsewhere says that we must worship in spirit and in truth—that involves a knowledge of the truth before we can worship in truth. We need to know the truth in order to know what to ask for, and what it is God's will to bestow.

This relates to all requests; but we learn from the prayer our Lord taught his disciples, that adoration and praise to God are included in prayer. In 1 Tim. ii. 1-3 we see that it is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Savior to make supplications, prayers, intercessions and thanksgivings for all men, including those in authority over us, that we may lead quiet and peaceable lives in all godliness and honesty. If for all men, then certainly for those of the household of faith; and Paul sets us the example of praying for them always. If it was right for Paul it is right for us. And whenever one is found who declines the prayer of others, we may know that he has little part or lot with the Body of Christ; for we are assured by God that he hears prayer, and that "the prayer of the upright is his delight."

We have apostolic example of meetings for prayer. In the 12th chapter of Acts we read of a prayer meeting at the house of Mary the mother of John. We think it very probable they were praying for Peter's release from prison. Herod having killed James the brother of John. If that was the case their prayers were answered for while they were still praying Peter knocked at the door. We have the account of another prayer meeting on the riverside in the 16th chapter of Acts. And we learn the benefits of prayer in 2 Cor. i. 11, where Paul tells of his deliverance from a great trouble in Asia, partly through the prayers of the church at Corinth.

Prayer is the special privilege of God's children. There is a family throne where favors are granted through the One Mediator. And we are told that angels are ministering spirits to the heirs of salvation; and that the Angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them. What a gracious God we have! What a glorious captain we have to bring the many children to glory.

Apart from all special favors bestowed in answer to prayer, just intercourse with the Father through the Son, brings one's mind into sympathy and touch with the spirit. Those who hold frequent intercourse with heaven show the fruit of it in their temper and conduct. Love and joy and peace and long suffering, and gentleness characterize them; hatreds, emulations, envies, malice and bitterness will not thrive in that atmosphere. The peace of God rules in their hearts, and hence they do not grumble and worry, and think everybody else out of the way.

But watchfulness must be coupled with prayer. We cannot expect God to help us when we do not try to help ourselves. It is useless to ask God not to abandon us to temptation, if we willfully or carelessly walk into it. If we fail to do what we can, God will not help us to do what we cannot do; but no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly. The Spirit says, what shall I say unto you? What I say unto you I say unto all,—watch. To be certainly ready, we must be always ready, for in such an hour as we think not the Son of Man cometh. May we all be ready is our fervent desire.

An Epistle to Hebrews. Chapter 10.

1. The law moreover having a shadow of the good things destined to be, not the image itself, could never perfect those, who come year after year with the same sacrifices, which they are accustomed to offer in continuity.

2. Since would they not have ceased being offered, because of the servitors, who had been once for all cleansed, having no future consciousness (or conscious-knowledge, the word usually translated conscience) of sins.

3. On the other hand in them is there a reminder of sins year after year.

4. For the blood of bulls and hegoats cannot take away sins.

5. Therefore the one who is coming into the cosmos saith, sacrifice and offering thou didst not intend; but a body hast thou restored to order for me;

6. With whole-burnt offerings for sin even thou hast not been satisfied;

7. Then said I, lo I come; In a chapter of a book it hath been written concerning me—to do thy will, oh God.

8. In saying beforehand that thou didst not intend nor wast satisfied with sacrifices and offerings and whole-burnt offerings for sin even, which are being offered according to law;

9. And then in having said, Lo I come to do thy will; he taketh away the first that he may establish the second.

10. In which will we have been sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesous Christ once for all.

11. And every priest forsooth stood serving publicly day after day, many times offering the same sacrifices, which never could take away sins;

12. But he when he had offered for sins one sacrifice in continuity (or for the whole term.) sat down at the right hand of God.

13. For the rest (of the term) awaiting expectantly until his enemies shall have been put under his feet.

14. For with one offering hath he perfected in continuity (or for the whole term) those who are being sanctified.

15. Moreover the sanctified spirit also testifieth unto us; For afterwards was the statement,

16. This is the covenant which I shall have made with them after those days, saith the Lord: giving my laws to be in their hearts, I shall write them on their thoughts:

17. And their sins and transgressions I shall no longer have remembered.

18. And where there is a remission of these, there is no further offering for sin.

19. Having therefore, boldness, brethren in respect to the entering in of the saints in the blood of Jesous,

20. By a recent and living way which he hath renewed for us, through the vail, that is his flesh,

21. And having a great priest over the house of God,

22. Let us approach with true heart in a full supply of faith, having had our hearts sprinkled from a wicked consciousness (or a consciousness of wickedness);

23. And having had our body washed with clean water, let us hold fast the confession of our hope without wavering; For he is faithful who hath promised.

24. And let us learn to know one another in a paroxism of love and good works,

25. Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together even as is the custom of some; but exhorting one another, and by as much more as ye behold the day drawing nigh.

26. For if we continue sinning wilfully after we have received the full comprehension of the truth, there remaineth no further sacrifice for sins;

27. But a fearful expectation of judicial trial, a zeal of fire that is destined to devour the adversaries.

28. Any one who hath set aside Mouses' law is condemned to die without pity on the testimony of two or three witnesses;

29. How much more think ye, will he have been thought worthy of a worse punishment, who hath trodden on the Son of God and accounted the blood of the covenant, in which he hath been sanctified, a common thing, and insulted the Spirit of the grace?

30. For we know him who hath said, Requital is mine; I will repay. And again, The Lord will judge his own royal-people.

31. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of a living God.

32. But call to mind the former days in which after ye had been enlightened, ye endured a great struggle of suffering;

33. On this side a spectacle in the way of reproaches and tribulations, and on that having become partners of those who were having like experiences.

34. Yea indeed ye suffered bonds along with them and accepted the plundering of your property with joy, knowing that ye had a more efficacious and abiding property.

35. Cast not away your boldness (free-speech lit.) therefore which hath a great recompense of wages.

36. Though ye have great need of patient-endurance, that, when ye have done the will of God, ye may realize the promise.

37. For yet a little while, a little while and the one who cometh will come and he will not tarry (lit. prolong the time).

38. Moreover the Just One will live on account of faith in me, and if he draw back, my soul hath no satisfaction in him.

39. And ours is not a drawing back unto loss, but a faith unto the soul's salvation.

COMMENT.

Observe the word "Consciousness"—or consciousness-knowledge or C. V. and R. V. "Conscience" as here used. The true meaning is perfectly apparent as the reader will perceive and it would be in every other case were it not for false-teaching and prejudice.

"In them is there a reminder of sins" states the rationale of these religious duties as imposed. We need something to constantly remind us of our inefficiency at best to work out our own salvation.

"The One who is coming" or "the One who cometh," an old prophetic formula made familiar by constant use and iteration to the student of Old Covenant Messianic prophecy.

"A body hast thou restored to order for me" is a much more significant statement than "thou hast prepared for me." C. V. and R. V. Meaning restored to the original Adamic harmonic order before sin wrecked it—the same instrumentality given the "first Adam" who failed to use it aright.

"He taketh away the first that he may establish the second" ought to warn us against trying to enforce any part of it now, the keeping of Sabbatic days and periods as well as other things belonging to it as a whole.

"Stood" and "sat" here significant of the work going on and the work completed.

"The sanctified spirit testifieth." How? Just as it does now, by appealing to one's enlightened common sense, as the reader will perceive by reading the context here carefully.

"Our confession" not profession remember requires "boldness" and great boldness sometimes, and well is the exhortation enforced here.

"Paroxism" is merely the Greek word anglizised and I do not see how "provoke" or "provocation" translates it R. V. and C. V. at all.

"Requital" not "vengeance" C. V. and R. V. "Boldness" or free-speech under trying circumstances.

"The Just One" a Messianic appelation of frequent occurrence in old covenant prophecy and teaching.

"Soul" here means mind in one instance and in the other the whole organic being whether natural or spiritual, not an entity divorced from organism.

LONDON, January 5.—The Rev. Henry S. Lunn, M. D., a Wesleyan minister of London, with the assistance of the son of the bishop of Worcester, is making arrangements for a Christian reunion at Jerusalem to take place in the autumn. Archdeacon Farrar and a number of bishops will take part in the pilgrimage. Archdeacon Farrar will deliver six lectures in Jerusalem.

BERLIN, January 5.—St. Petersburg dispatches confirm the report that the Czar has ordered the Minister of the Interior to transfer to the holy synod the administration of all church affairs. This order is certain to result in putting further vexatious restrictions on non-orthodox religions, and will probably lead to religious persecution. It is feared that the chief sufferers will be the Lutherans, who are mostly German or of German descent.

Life is too short to be wasted in petty worries, frettings, hatreds and vexations. Let us banish all these, and think on whatsoever things are pure and lovely and gentle and of good report.

The Bible is being translated into the Corean language.

Poetry.

SOME TIME.

Some time, when all life's lessons have been learned,
And sun and stars forevermore have set,
The things which our weak judgment here has spurned—
The things o'er which we grieve with lashes wet—
Will flash before us out of life's dark night,
As stars shine most in deeper tints of blue;
And we shall see how all God's plans were right,
And how what seemed reproof was love most true.

And we shall see, that, while we frown and sigh,
God's plans go on as best for you and me;
How, when we called, he heeded not our cry
Because his wisdom to the end could see;
And e'en as prudent parents disallow
Too much of sweet to craving babyhood,
So, God, perhaps, is keeping from us now
Life's sweetest things, because it seemeth good.

And if, some time, commingled with life's wine
We find the wormwood, and rebel and shrink,
Be sure a wiser hand than yours or mine
Pours out this potion for our lips to drink;
And if some friend we love is lying low,
Where human kisses cannot reach his face,
O, do not blame the loving Father so,
But bear your sorrow with obedient grace

And you shall shortly know that lengthened breath
Is not the sweetest gift God sends his friend,
And that some times the sable pall of death
Conceals the fairest boon his love can send.
If we could push ajar the gates of life,
And stand within, and all God's workings see,
We could interpret all this doubt and strife,
And for each mystery could find a key.

But not today. Then be content, poor heart;
God's plans, like lilies pure and white, unfold;
We must not tear the close-shut leaves apart.
Time will reveal the calyxes of pure gold.
And if, through patient toil, we reach the land
Where tired feet, with sandals loosed, may rest,
When we shall clearly know and understand,
I think that we shall say that "God knew best."

Nebuchadnezzar's Religion and the Image of his Dream.

The prophets of Baal and the Chaldean cardinals are brought before the King, but the only answer is—"Tell us the dream and we will make known the interpretation thereof." "There is not a man upon earth that can show the King's matter." "None can show it before the King except the gods, whose dwelling is not with flesh."

"Not a man upon earth,' in the theology of Babylon, we must remember, men did not really die, they were only transferred, at what seemed to be death, to the abodes of the gods. The king-priests, being accredited as having descended from the gods, were worshiped as such, during their lifetime, and after death, their names were placed in the category of gods. There seems to be an allusion here to men, 'whose dwelling was not now with flesh.' The Jews never talked about 'the shades of dead men' untill they had had some intercourse with the Babylonians."

"Tell me the dream, and I shall know that ye can show me the interpretation thereof."

Baal is silent. Satan, cannot fathom what Jehovah has bidden. He is not the true God.

As in the time of Elijah, the prophets of Baal, and the prophet of God, are set in juxtaposition.

A plain demonstration has been made of the falsity of Nebuchadnezzar's religion. The satanic creed is in jeopardy and the king is furious. The fault must be in the priests, and not in the oracles, he will have them all "cut in pieces and their houses made a dunghill."

Daniel is brought in. He shows the king that "there is a God in heaven that revealeth secrets, and maketh known to the king Nebuchadnezzar what shall be in the latter days."

No astrologer, nor magician could do this.

The dream had been of an image built in sections, each of the sections of different metals, but all joined together, in so close a manner as to form one continuous picture. The king had seen it standing until a stone was cut out without hands, that smote it on the feet and broke them to pieces. He had seen that with the breaking of the feet, the whole image fell, broken to pieces together, and that all became like the chaff, and was carried away by the wind, and no place found for them, while the stone that smote the image, became a great mountain and filled the whole earth.

The interpretation of the dream, was of the duration of the religion of Nebuchadnezzar. It would continue unbroken through all the four great sections of Satan's kingdom, and until the time of the kings of "the toes of the feet," then would the God of heaven set up a kingdom, that should never be destroyed, and idolatry in all its forms and transformations, would be at an end, the whole image would tumble together, God's kingdom would consume and break in pieces, all these great empires, held to the end by idolatry, would take their place and stand forever. "The great God had made known to the king what would come to pass hereafter," the dream was certain and the interpretation thereof sure.

Nebuchadnezzar was not converted. He is the head of gold of the Babylonian religion, its king-priest, and a descendant of the gods; he will be a god by and by, and he will not renounce his faith, nor his divinely acquired right to the dominion of the world. Instead of praising the great Creator, he prostrates himself to Daniel, and commands, that an oblation and sweet odors be offered to him! "His God is a God of gods and a Lord of kings, and a revealer of secrets," and having shown himself, through Daniel, his minister, Daniel, must receive adoration, and great gifts, and be made governor of the whole province of Babylon, and chief of the wise men.

But Nebuchadnezzar's faith, embraces other gods, he will perpetuate the religion of his fathers, he makes a great image, sets it up in the plain of Dura, and commands that all men worship it, or take the alternative of being cast into a burning fiery furnace. Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego refuse. Another demonstration is given, that the God of Israel, is the only living and true God, and that even in the most perilous circumstances he can deliver out of the king's hands them that trust in him, notwithstanding Nebuchadnezzar has denied his power. The flame, slays the servants of Baal, and God's servants are preserved by an angelic being, who walks with them in the midst of the fire.

Nebuchadnezzar is astounded. He concedes something, when he calls the men to come out of the fire, it is that "they are the servants of the Most High God." He blesses the God of Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego, and commands that whoever speaks a word against him shall be "cut in pieces." "because no other god can deliver after this sort."

In his mind, there are still other gods, but this one is the supreme.

Another dream is given him, whereby he is made "to know that the Most High, ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will." The dream was of a tree, that became strong and high, with fair leaves and much fruit, and under which the beasts of the field had shadow, and in the branches the birds a dwelling. Of its fruit, all flesh was fed. A holy one comes down from heaven, it is hewn down, its branches cut off its leaves shaken off and its fruit scattered, the beasts are commanded to get away from under it, and the birds from its branches. Only the stump is to be left in the ground with a band of iron and brass, in the tender grass of the field; it is to be wet with the dew of heaven, and his portion is to be with the beasts in the grass of the earth.

The matter was by the decree of the watchers, and the demand by the word of the holy ones, that the living might know, that the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will and setteth up over it the basest of men. Daniel was called to interpret the dream, and was troubled.

The tree was Nebuchadnezzar, he was to become insane, and be driven from men. His dwelling was to be with the beasts, and he was to eat grass like the oxen, until seven times, or seven years had passed over him. What a debasement!

The signs and wonders have not convinced him that there is but one God, and that to him alone is adoration due, the dream to him must become a reality.

He walks at the end of a year in the palace of the kingdom of Babylon, and says to himself "Is not this great Babylon, that I have built for the house of the kingdom, by the might of my power and for the honor of my majesty?"

There comes a voice from heaven that says, "The kingdom is departed from thee." The predicted insanity overtakes him, and for seven long years he dwells with the beasts of the field and eats grass as the oxen.

At the end of the days, he lifts up his eyes to heaven and his understanding returns; he blesses the Most High, and praises and honors him, who lives forever and whose dominion is an everlasting dominion, and his kingdom one that shall not be destroyed." His kingdom is restored.

The image and the tree are one; their duration is the same. The religion of Nebuchadnezzar is to stand, like an image on its feet, and like a strong and mighty tree overshadowing and controlling all human governments, until a holy one comes down from heaven, and demolishes it.

The beasts in the shadow of the tree, are the four great empires, symbolized by the sections of the image. The branches are the different forms of idolatry, that have sprung from the mighty trunk of the Euphratean tree. The baleful leaves and fruit, are the doctrines of which all the nations of the earth have partaken.

Men have wondered why frauds, and oppression, ignorance and cruelty, should bear sway in the world, why there should be so much of insanity and of the wild-beast character in ruler and in people; the history of Nebuchadnezzar explains it all, he is a symbolic, as well as a historic character. He was debased to a level with the beasts, because he would not acknowledge and worship the one supreme and only true God, but clung pertinaciously to the debasing superstitions, and worship of Baal.

Idol-worship, is always corrupting. It leads men captive by its licentious rites and pleasures. They may take their own course and Satan will admit them into Paradise. This is his doctrine.

Having lost their reason, when brought into his kingdom, they believe it, and are driven forth from men (men, who by being true to God, are men of understanding and of wisdom) to eat, live, and die, like the beasts. Their kingdom, is the kingdom of beasts; their wisdom, the wisdom of beasts.

But the beast-rulers, would not be able to destroy the Shadrachs, Meshachs and Abednegos, of the religion of Jehovah. It was these who were going to be the immortals. Out of the flames will they come forth with no smell of fire on their garments. Beyond the perished kingdoms of the religion of Nebuchadnezzar, will they with the Son of God, who by his own blood delivers them from the power of the flame, and the grave, be given the restored dominion; and the empires of earth, restored to reason, will confess that "the heavens rule," and will extol, honor and praise the King of heaven."

The fiery furnace of Nebuchadnezzar, destroys the subjects of Baal, but it cannot touch the future life of the children of God.

The men who throw God's children into the flames to destroy them will themselves be destroyed.

Seven times pass over Nebuchadnezzar in his insane state; God has given us a day for a year, Ezekiel iv. 6. Seven times are seven years. Seven years have seven times 360 days, or 2520 years. When these come to an end, the Holy One will come down from heaven, and the tree will be hewn to pieces.

Nebuchadnezzar's kingdom falls but his religion spreads. It had long ago invaded Egypt. A rock-tablet 3000 years old found by Dr. Flinders Petrie at Tel-el Amarna, represents King Khuenaten, his wife and two daughters worshiping the sun. "The immaculate Isis" took the place of Mylitta; the scarabeus, was a symbol of the sun, and the bull of Baal.

All the inhabitants of Mesopotamia, and its adjacent countries, were worshipers of Baal.

The Israelites were seduced; they offered their children to him in sacrifice and "made cakes and poured out drink offerings to the queen of heaven." The worship over-spread India, and became the Bhuddism of the Brahmans; it went into Britain with the Druids; a sun-stone and moon-stone have been found in the islands of the Hebrides, the Aztecs were worshipers of the sun.

The Persians worshiped the host of heaven, the Medes the imaged symbols of the gods.

Grecia had her sun-god in Apollo, and her moon-goddess in Diana. Rome had her Jupiter and her Juno, or Venus.

But as Nebuchadnezzar is the head of the image in his priestly captivity, we must follow the king-priests, his successors, from one seat to another. Their first seat was Babylon. When the Medo-Persians captured the city they removed to Pergamos, and it became as Babylon had been before it, "the seat of Satan" "where Satan dwelleth," Rev. ii. 18. It had them who "held the doctrine of Balaam" and of the Nicalaitanes, who thought it no sin to "eat things sacrificed to idols and to commit fornication." And more significant still, it had a temple for serpent-worship, and serpent-worship, like the worship of Baal is universal, and connects itself in legend and in astronomy with Satan. The ancients, had a serpent about to devour the ark. The Asiatics think a serpent, called "Satan," is about to eat up the moon in an eclipse.

Pergamos, was "Satan's seat," and Pergamos belonged to Medo-Persia, Nebuchadnezzar still heads the image.

Under Alexander, Pergamos becomes the property of Grecia, and Nebuchadnezzar heads the image in its Grecian form.

The family of Attalus, held for centuries the idolatrous king-priesthood at Pergamos, but on the decease of Attalus the Third, it with its wealth and dominion was bequeathed to Rome. Numa Pompilius the second King of Rome, was an Etrurian; the Etrurians were from Babylon, or from an adjacent country holding the Babylonian creed.

The Name above Every Name.

God hath highly exalted him, and given him, (Christ) a name which is above every name. That at the name of Jesus every knee shall bow.

Dear reader do you know what that name is? If not, let me say to you, it is important that you should, for there are people in the world that are practising things that they think are God's ordinances, which are not. For instance, the practice of trine immersion. If those practising trine immersion thoroughly understood the name they would not practice it.

Go teach (disciple) all nations baptizing them in the name, (singular) of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Name, not names plural, for Paul says, "there is only one name given under heaven whereby we must be saved." Matt. iii.

Peter said, "repent and be baptized, every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ." What does Peter mean here by the name of Jesus Christ? Let us see if we can find out.

Paul says, "God hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name." Then it is the highest name in the universe of God. Then it must be the name God. Jesus said to the disciples, "if I go away, I will send you the other comforter in my name." Then the Holy Spirt bears the same name. We must conclude that it is a family name, and by baptism we are adopted into the family of God.

The apostle says, "what love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God." Baptism is compared to a birth, and also to a planting.

Reader, what would you think of a man who would plant potatoes today, dig them up tomorrow, and plant them again, and then dig them up the next day, and plant them over again.

By baptism we symbolize Christ's burial and resurrection. He was not buried three time, neither did he raise three times. A birth is a single coming forth, therefore trine immersion can not be a symbol of his burial, or a birth, or a planting. Therefore I must conclude that it is not a scriptural baptism.

Submitted in love.

Some souls there are like the cactus blossom, surrounded by a prickling mass of ugliness, themselves a marvel of sweetness.

CONFESS.

The Apostle James in his letter to the brethren enjoins them to confess their faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed: then he adds—"The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." v. 16.

Although this divine requirement requires humiliation and contrition of heart and soul, yet we feel sure that if we would preach it, and talk it, and practice it more, there would be more harmony and less trouble in the church. This is a part of the divine plan, and of the Father's will, our duty as brethren and sisters, and heaven's remedy for our troubles. Then why not adopt it and obey it, instead of quenching the spirit that dictates and points out our duty, and freezing the life out of us, waiting for time to heal our few real and many imaginary wounds. Then the church would have more influence, and would look more like a city set on a hill. Then we could feel and realize how good, how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity. But says one, "I cannot get down to that, that is too humiliating, and if I could, then some might judge me wrong, and think that I was real bad. Oh what a flimsy excuse. Do you not feel ashamed of yourself? Our Father in heaven who understands our very secret thoughts, knows our dispositions, and our stubborn hearts much better than we do, for our good has provided the necessary remedy for all our troubles, and the sooner we realize how weak and frail we are and humble ourselves before him in obedience to his requirements, the better it will be for us. This little trouble, and that big trouble in the family, and in the church, that has pained our hearts for months and years, separating near relatives, and dear friends, and brethren, shutting out the sunlight, and creating darkness, and crippling our influence, both in and out of the church, might all be avoided if we would only be like little children in malice, and observe the golden rule. If we would walk humbly before God, and feel our weakness, and our unworthiness before him, and our dependence upon him. Then we would be hid away from many of Satan's fiery darts, that are flying thick and fast in the closing days of Gentile times. Confess your faults brethren, it will do you good, and pray for one another that you may be healed. And pray for me, that I may stand firm in the faith. The promise is to the obedient. Amen.

Dear Restitution:

We could hardly get along without you. If we get a little downcast or think the work is not moving along as smoothly as it should, if we pick up the good paper we most always run across a word of advice or encouragement. It does me good to read the letters from brothers and sisters scattered abroad. Some telling of their grief, others how they are isolated and trying hard to battle against the world. My heart-felt sympathy goes out to them, they all seem so near to us. Oh, when will we be gathered together in one great family as Bro. Prime said in his discourse. It almost makes us impatient when we think about it, but that which should tax our minds more seriously is, are we ready. Can we say Lord Jesus come quickly. I have fought the good fight I have kept the faith, or have we still that doubt in our minds We think yes, I am going to cultivate more patience or I am going to quit finding fault with my brother and try to look at his good qualities. I am going to quit surmising so much. We can't all look at everything alike, Yes we are going to throw aside all these foolish habits. How many times have we made resolves like these and broken them. Oh, dear brothers and sisters let us make one last resolve and keep it, lest that day come upon us unawares. How uncertain our lives are, we know not but that we have finished our work when we lie down to sleep. We know not the day or the hour when our Lord shall come. Let us set to work with a new zeal, strive hard for mastery, and lay aside every weight and sin that doth beset us, and run with patience the race that is set before us and at last win the crown.

Mrs. A. F. Harlan.

Dear Restitution:

The eventful year 1892 is at its close, so is the time of the Gentiles, if we can understand our whereabouts; and while the multitudes are sound asleep, and the majority of the teachers of our day are crying "Peace and safety," we see and feel terrific forces at work for evil. A constant menace to Christianity and pure society. The rum power is poluting every thing it touches, the rapid growth of socialism, mixed with anarchy and the deadly dynamite at hand as a tool to complete the work. The enormous wealth in the hands of a few, while poverty and tramps are fearfully on the increase, the vast labor organizations organized for self-protection, which brings capital and labor face to face, hence the great strikes at Homestead and Buffalo and many other places this year. Lastly come Romanism the enemy to our liberties and religion. Hence we see no peace and safety, but unrest and dissatisfaction every where. A similar condition to that which existed just before the French Revolution. Truly we are well down in the perils of the last days, when men's hearts are failing them for fear and for the things that are coming on the earth. Oh may our lives be such that we may escape all these things which are coming, and be able to stand before the Son of Man. Only our dear heavenly Father knows what 1893 has in store for this poor wicked world. Let us watch and be sober and try and be the means in the hands of our blessed God of snatching some poor soul from the burning. Let us be in dead earnest, dear brethren, do not fear that any one of us will do too much this coming year. God is a good pay master, his Bank never breaks, and in the sweet by and by we will get our principal with interest. Remember, a hundred fold now and in the world to come life everlasting. O, glorious hope. Yours waiting for its consummation.

Dear Restitution:

A Happy New Year to all the dear ones of like precious faith. We have missed the weekly visits of the dear Restitution for some time, so as I have opportunity to send this to-day of new years for it, again thanking the Editor for continuing to send us so long gratis. May the Lord help him, it cheers us up in our isolation to read letters from the brothers and sisters. I can say we are still striving to live so as to gain an inheritance in the Kingdom I hope soon to be established on the earth. I have lent The Restitution to all who I thought would read it, but they would return them in too short a time to read them, and did not ask for more. They are all gone over to fables and follies, nothing good can reach them it seems. Well I think my letter is long enough so I will close, hoping to meet all the faithful in Christ Jesus in the kingdom of God, is my prayer. Your Sister in Christ waiting and watching for the Life Giver to return.

Mrs. W. J. Beebe.

Dear Restitution:

Please to find $1.50 enclosed, for which continue The Restitution We like the paper much, it seems to grow better by age—trust it may continue to do so until the King comes.

We are still strong in the faith. We have no meetings, but think the time near when we shall have a grand meeting of all the faithful, but then the thought comes, "shall I be there?" There are so many dangers by the way, we must needs be watchful, or the reward will slip from us. Trusting the good Lord may smile upon you and your work. I am yours waiting for the redemption.

May F. Appleyard.

Dear Restitution:

Enclosed find two dollars which you will please apply to my subscription, with many thanks for the continuance of it so long. We would be lost without it, being situated here alone as we are, having no chance to hear the truth promulgated only through the paper. We feel that we are living in perilous times [illegible] we can [illegible]

I have just heard of a Sister's death in Union County, where we used to live, Martha Lamberth an old veteran of forty-three. Thus they are dropping off one by one. Our turn will soon come if the Master does not come to destroy death, and him that hath the power of death. My prayer is, Come Lord Jesus, and come quickly. O, brothers and sisters, those of you who are more favored with places of meeting, and helpers to help along life's journey we ask your prayers. We love to read your letters of encouragement in our beloved paper, The Restitution. I wish I could say something to encourage some lonely pilgrims on their way home. I will say, cheer up, day is breaking. Lord help us all to watch.

Yours, in hope.

Simeon Skeels.

Editor Restitution:

As my subscription expires to-day, I will enclose M. O. for $1.50 for which you will please send me the paper another year.

The Letter Drawer is a good feature in the paper. Let us stand firm for the plain truth as we did twenty years ago. The old veterans are passing away. Who can fill their place? But the love of saving truth will prompt others to go and do likewise. Money can never fill their places. We are doing what little we can for the Master without money and without price.

Wishing you all a Happy New Year, I am yours, in hope.

Obituary.

Died, in southeast Mo. Brother Walter L. Kile, on the 17th of Dec. 1892, aged 37 years and 8 months. The circumstances connected with our dear brother's death were very sad and affecting. He left home the fourth of Sept. last with high hopes of making enough to buy a team so he could farm successfully on his place and not be obliged to leave his family again he so tenderly loved. There were three sawing down a large cypress tree, his brother, himself and a man from Ind. There was a large dry limb, they watched and went a good many feet back of the stump, but by the rapid force of so large a tree this limb was hurled backward and overtook our dear brother, crushing the back of his head causing instant death. It was about four o'clock Saturday afternoon. His week's work, and day's work was most finished and he anticipated a day of rest. It came. His life's work is now done, and he sleeps that blessed sleep.

Bro. Kile was born near Mt. Liberty, Knox Co. O. May 27, 1855, and give his heart to God at the age of 22 years, and I have no doubt but that he has lived a faithful Christian, adorning the religion of Jesus Christ by a Godly walk and holy conversation. He was a very modest and unassuming man, but firm and bold in the truths taught in The Restitution.

He has worshiped with the dear church at Plymouth, he and his wife, and they have often talked to us of the good times there when dear old Father Chaplin was in health and strength, and other dear ones who now sleep. Bro. Kile leaves an affectionate and heart-broken wife and five small children, who will so much miss a loving father's care. He also leaves [illegible] brothers and sisters who are in several states.

Bro. Kile was killed 35 miles from the railroad in the cypress swamps and his faithful and afflicted brother had to convey him by wagon that distance to the railroad. A sad errand for him. We hope dear Sister Kile will be remembered in the prayers of the household of faith that she may be sustained under this heartrending trial and be enabled to bring her little ones up in the fear of the Lord.

A funeral sermon was delivered in the Baptist Church at Hutton Valley by H. M. Campbell, after which was sung the beautiful hymn, "We may sleep but not forever," and at the grave was sung "Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep," when he was laid in his last resting place amid the sobs and tears of friends, till Jesus comes.

Mary R. Campbell.

We please God most, when we trust him most.

Beautiful Things.

Beautiful faces are those that wear—
It matters little if dark or fair—
Whole-souled honesty printed there.

Beautiful eyes are those that show,
Like crystal panes where hearth-fires glow,
Beautiful thoughts that burn below.

Beautiful lips are those whose words
Leap from the heart like songs of birds,
Yet whose utterance prudence girds.

Beautiful hands are those that do
Work that is earnest, brave, and true,
Moment by moment the long day through.

Beautiful feet are those that go
On kindly ministries to and fro—
Down lowliest ways, if God wills it so.

Beautiful shoulders are those that bear
Ceaseless burdens of homely care,
With patient grace and daily prayer.

Beautiful lives are those that bless—
Silent rivers of happiness,
Whose hidden fountains but few may guess.

Selected.

Jews Cruelly Used.

LONDON, Dec. 29.—The latest advices from St. Petersburg and other parts of Russia show that the persecution of the Jews and the inhumanity of the Czar's officials toward that unhappy race are greater than ever before. Six edicts have been issued, aiming to disperse the Jewish subjects of Russia, weaken their position and trading centers, and crush out their religion. These edicts are enforced with the utmost rigor in many parts of the empire and with severity everywhere.

The Moscow papers boast that since the beginning of 1891 20,000 Jews have been converted to orthodoxy. The unhappy converts, who have been driven to a pretended denial of their religious faith in order to escape intolerable persecution have been deported to the District of Tcherkesovo, about five miles from Moscow. There they are rigorously governed by priests of the Russian Orthodox Church, who require them to attend the service of that church and to comply with its various rules, watching narrowly for any sight of evasion or repentance. These priests have entire supervision of the wretched colony, and the alleged converts from Judaism are only allowed leave to return to Moscow upon a certificate from the priests that the convert holding such certificate is assured in the faith of the Orthodox Church.

When thus released from the ordeal at Tcherkesovo their troubles are not over. The police and spies keep a careful watch over them, and if they fail in attention to their religious obligations as members of the Orthodox Church they are reported as recanting to the Jewish faith. Should the charge of recantation be established the usual punishment is deportation to Siberia.

The police have been making a careful scrutiny of the birth papers of the Jews, with a view to driving more of them out of the towns, none being allowed to reside in towns except those who are natives.

In Moscow, where the anti-Jewish crusade received a great impulse through the zeal of the Grand Duke Sergius, brother of the Czar, and the Governor of Moscow, against the Jewish race and religion, persecution continues with unabated severity. Jews who are not natives of Moscow have been given twenty-four hours to return to their native towns. A Jew who has conducted an important mercantile establishment for thirty years near the central postoffice has been compelled to close up his business and leave on twenty-four hours' notice.

No mercy is shown to any Jews, no matter how meritorious, who can be brought within the scope of the cruel edicts. Thousands of Jewish working people have been driven from their employment to become beggars and wanderers. Old soldiers who wear medals for faithful and gallant service in Russia's army are treated with as little mercy as other Jews. No recognition whatever is given to their claims upon the country.

Merchants of the best standing are driven out like the poorest laborer and not only deprived of their business but robbed of the money that is owing to them, for their debtors, encouraged to injustice by the unjust course of the authorities, refuse to pay the debts, well aware their Jewish creditors are virtually without remedy.

Summarily deported to their "birth districts," merchants who were recently in affluence find themselves helpless and impoverished in localities with which they may have long been unfamiliar. They may not even have a single tie there, and may have been absent a longer period than an average human lifetime, but that makes no difference to the Russian officials. The old man of 70 or 80 who left his native place when a child must go back there, and be torn from the arms of his children and his children's children, unless they choose to accompany him. The scenes witnessed in consequence are most pitiable.

Moscow has lost, in consequence of the persecution there, a multitude of its most valuable residents. Many of the Jewish tradesmen and artisans who have been driven from Moscow have gone to Lodz, a place a few hours by rail from Warsaw, and which has rapidly risen to a population of 125,000, most of them Jews.

The regulations especially and universally enforced throughout Russia are those limiting the residence of Jews within certain fixed locations, the prohibition of Jewish artisans from working in places beyond the control of official boards of trade, and the restriction as to unauthorized synagogues, it being forbidden to Jews to worship in any but an authorized synagogue. The condition of the Jews except in Lodz and a few other places is becoming steadily worse, particularly in the case of those who have no means to bribe Russian officials.

Extraordinary measures are shortly to be inaugurated to compel all Jewish traders in Moscow to abandon their religion and join the orthodox Greek. The Chamber of Commerce has adopted a resolution, which, however, is not to come into operation immediately, to exclude all Jews from the list of Moscow merchants. Not knowing at what moment this decision may be enforced the Israelitish traders are hastening to purchase their trade licenses for the ensuing year, which they hope will at least protect them for the next twelve months. On the resolution of the Chamber of Commerce coming into force all those Jewish merchants who, by abandoning their faith, purchase their licences to carry on commercial operations in Moscow, will be transferred for three years' probation to the Village of Tcherkijova. The insincerity of the conversion of the great mass of Hebrews not belonging to the commercial guilds who have obtained permission to reside in Moscow by joining the orthodox church is shown by this fact. One of the wealthiest merchants in the city, who is already the godfather of over 400 baptized Jews, promised some time ago to leave a legacy to each of his nominal godsons on condition of their sending him annually a certificate testifying that they had at least once received the sacrament, and up to the present only two have complied with the stated condition. A few Moscow Jews had succeeded in obtaining recognition as members of the English Church, but the great majority of those who have thus endeavored to gain protection have been unsuccessful in their endeavors.

The governor of Moscow, the Grand Duke Sergius, dislikes the race, and his object seems to be to turn every Jew out of the city. Since he came to town he has expelled 60,000. There used to be 80,000 Jews in Moscow. Hence there remain now only 30,000, but one may be quite sure that the numbers will continue to dwindle. There are this winter in Moscow at least 80,000 lodgings empty, so that many landlords are in a fair way to being ruined through the carrying out of this cruel policy.

By a new law, which has been recently put in force only ten out of 100 Jewish lawyers in Moscow and St. Petersburg are allowed to practice, while in Warsaw and Russian Poland this liberty is wholly denied. The Moscow University shuts its doors against Jews, and it will not be long before the Conservatoire does the same.

The Smolenski station, whence trains start for foreign parts by way of Poland, has been the scene of some of the most painful spectacles. The Moscow correspondent of the London Daily News decribes the scene. In the throng at the station there were old men and women upward of 80 years of age and half-clad little children. All were crying, cursing, or praying.

Sarah Bernhardt gave her first representation in Moscow about a month ago. The play was "La Dame aux Camellias." It is scarcely to be believed, but she really received a cold reception. On her second appearance she fared no better. The reason of it all was that she is a Jewess. Many of the rich Moscow residents disposed of their tickets for the series of twelve performances at any price. "We will not," they say, "go to see her."

New Candidate for the Throne.

COPENHAGEN, Jan. 2.—The state of affairs in France on account of the great Panama scandal has given rise to a serious report which has created considerable comment here. It is said that the Duke of Chartre's short visit to Copenhagen was connected with the possibility that Prince Waldemar of Denmark, who married the Duke's daughter, Princess Marie Orleans, might be designated as the Orleans candidate for the French throne should serious political complications arise in France. The fact that Prince Waldemar is a brother-in-law and a great personal friend of the Czar of Russia is believed to enhance his chances of ascending the French throne should opportunity occur.

California is the most attractive and delightful section of the United States, if not of the world, and its many beautiful resorts will be crowded with the best families of the East during the entire winter. It offers to the investor the best open opportunity for safe and large returns from its fruit lands. It offers the kindest climate in the world to the feeble and debilitated; and it is reached in the most comfortable manner over the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad. Pullman Vestibule Sleeping Cars leave Chicago by this line every day in the year and go without change or transfer through to San Francisco, Los Angeles and San Diego. The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN.

VOL. XLII. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JANUARY 18, 1893. NO. 3.

The Restitution advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisite to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

O, to be Something!

O, to be something for Jesus.
  Perfected body and soul:
Made ready and strong for service,
  Made useful, pure, and whole;
Thoughts that shall blossom in beauty,
  Hands that toil ever, nor tire,
Feet that are swiftest for duty,
  And Pentecost's tongue of fire.

O, for the tender pleading
  Heard in the Master's voice
The loving and giving spirit
  That made the poor rejoice,
For the touch of his infinite pity,
  The strength of his royal hand,
Christ-like to live and serve him,
  According to his command!
—Christian Advocate.

"This Day Shalt Thou Be With Me in Paradise." Luke xxiii. 42.

The passage to which I would invite attention this evening may be found in the 23rd chapter of Luke, and the 42nd verse. The scene is Calvary, the occasion a public execution. Human nature being much the same in all ages we can imagine the motley crowd that had gathered there,—the vulgar and morbidly curious largely predominating, although doubtless, there would be a sprinkling of the religious leaders, whose persecutions had culminated in the crucifixion of one of the victims,—he in the center, whose crime, as stated on the cross, was, that He was King of the Jews, one Jesus of Nazareth. For three years and a half, under most discouraging circumstances, he had been confirming the covenant of God to set up a kingdom of his own upon earth, that should literally consume all the kingdoms of men, and occupy the whole territory forever. God, a thousand years before had sworn to David, who was then King of God's Kingdom of Israel; that is, the twelve tribes of Jacob's sons—that a son of His should be king of that future, universal, and everlasting kingdom of God. It is important to bear these things in mind, because, when we turn to the first chapter of Luke and find Gabriel promising that Mary's son should have the throne of his father David, and should reign over the house of Jacob forever, it will be an impenetrable mystery to us if we do not see in it the fulfillment of promises made ages before.

You remember that wise men from the East came to honor a child born to be king of the Jews, whose star they had seen. You will remember how his lowly birth in a stable was honored by heavenly hosts, and revelations of angels to shepherds. But from his birth and early youth we lose sight of him until he is about thirty years of age. He then applied to John for baptism, and here again heaven's recognition was vouchsafed him. After his long fast and subsequent temptation he began to announce the long the subject of promise to the Hebrew nation,—and in many indirect ways proved that HE was the one in whom all the promises centered, and that he was born to fill out all the promises relating to the Messiah. But although the Messiah was professedly the Hope of Israel, when he appeared his people rejected him. I mean that those in authority, and who directed public opinion, set themselves against him and his claims, because he denounced their wicked practices so boldly, that they felt sure they would be left out in the cold if HE ever came into power. As might have been expected, they resolved to put him out of the way; and, at last, by the most inveterate hatred, vehement importunity and intimidation, they secured his condemnation, although Pilate repeatedly said he found no fault in him.

Let us try to take in the whole horizon: It is true Gabriel made specific promises concerning him, and actually identified him as the Messiah that was to come. It is true that he was approved of God by signs and wonders; but then, think of the contumely heaped upon him at his mock trial: see him suspended between heaven and earth in the agonies of death! What!

WAS HE AN IMPOSTOR

after all? Can it be that he who went about doing good, and assumed to speak only the words given him of God, and who suffered meekly at every step, is a fraud? Can he have offended in some point and for that cause have been forsaken at this awful juncture? There must be causes that do not appear on the surface.

Jesus of Nazareth, born to be King of the Jews, put to death as a felon! Terrible! He made but few converts, comparatively, while evangelizing, although he proved his mission by miraculous power!—Look at his bleeding hands, and feet, and side! Hear his agonizing cry, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" He is parched with thirst, but even a drink of water is denied him! Will he make any converts now? Who will believe him now? He will soon be dead; what is the use of believing in a dead person?—Ah, what's the use? But, apparently, he yet made a convert. He had the satisfaction of speaking pardon and peace to one soul while in the agonies of death. Oh, how it must have comforted him in his last conscious moments, and given him a slight foretaste of the future when he shall see the travail of his soul and be satisfied. Yes, one of the thieves said, "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy Kingdom." At first he seems to have reviled Jesus, but a change comes over him. Jesus is at the point of death, and such words from any one under those circumstances would prove that the speaker believed the one addressed would live again and carry out the work assigned to the Messiah of the prophets. Of course Jesus must live again in order to remember any one.

FORSAKEN OF GOD AND MAN

Remember ME, a malefactor justly dying for my misdeeds. Thou hast said that thou camest to call sinners to repentance, that's just what I am. I repent, Lord, although it is too late to prove my faith by a life of obedience. Thou Lord, knowest all things, and therefore knowest that I believe thee to be all that thou hast claimed to be, and hast power to forgive sins, and will come again and restore the Kingdom of Israel, and be King over all the earth beside. I know the thou hast preached. Time and again hast thou said "Come unto Me," but I paid no attention to it then, but I come now to thee as the way, the truth, and the life. Remember me, Lord, when thou comest into thy kingdom. Thou hast said it is the Father's good pleasure to give the kingdom to the Little Flock—Lord, unworthy as I am, make me one of them. Remember me, when thou comest back from the far country. Thou hast said, the hour is coming when all that are in their graves shall hear thy voice, and those who have done good shall come forth to the resurrection of life. I want to be of that number—Remember me, Lord!

My friends, if you take in all the circumstances you will think,—this being a true history—that the faith of the thief vies with that of Abraham. I tell you he believed under difficulties if any one ever did, and hoped against hope, accounting that God could raise Jesus and all believers, as Abraham did.

We ought by this time to be almost ready to examine the answer of Jesus to the thief's request to be remembered when he comes in his kingdom. Bear in mind that Jesus in John 17; prays that his disciples may be sanctified by, or through God's Truth, and adds that God's Word is Truth. Yes; bear this in mind, and you will see that the prayer of the thief was according to the truth of God. That is, he asked in one short petition to have offered the world of mankind through Jesus the Anointed One. His asking FOR them proves his faith IN them. If he had asked amiss would not Jesus have corrected the thief? He certainly would, because it requires truth believed to separate men from sinners, and book them for life in the kingdom. Jesus could not correct him, for this is just what Jesus had offered everybody in Judea.

I understand that Jesus granted the request of the thief; that settles it that the request was according to the truth as it is in Jesus. As men cannot be saved in their sins—as the pure in heart only shall see God, the sinner on the cross was certainly justified by faith, and had peace with God, or else Jesus could not have promised him what he did. But what follows? Why, that as the Gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, the thief had

BELIEVED THE GOSPEL.

How do I know this? I know it because he asked for just what the Gospel offers—the kingdom of God; and eternal life is wrapped up in the same offer, because the kingdom cannot be everlastingly inherited without everlasting life. Sometimes the kingdom includes the life, and sometimes the life includes the kingdom.

The thief believed the Gospel of Christ, for in Matt. iv. 23 and Mark i. 14, it distinctly teaches that Jesus preached everywhere the Gospel of the kingdom to come, and this is just what the thief wished to inherit. The serious aspect for us is, that he tells his disciples in Matt. xxiv. 14, that it is this same which is to be preached in all the world for a witness; the same Gospel that believers of shall be saved, and unbelievers of which shall be condemned. The thief believed it and was promised a share of its blessings.

It may be objected that the thief asked to be remembered when Jesus should come in his kingdom, but that Jesus did not grant that request, but, instead, promised he should be with him in Paradise that very day, showing in the objector's opinion that while the thief was perfectly sincere, he was quite mistaken in regard to Christ's mission, and the subject matter of the Gospel; but in consideration of his sincerity, he assured him a share of what he had to bestow—viz: a home with him in Paradise that he would

NOT HAVE TO WAIT FOR.

They would meet there that very day. That is the popular view of it. And as populars believe that the real man never dies—lives right on after the body has been laid away, this is one of the easiest things in the world for them to believe about Jesus and the thief.

Apparently, Jesus' reply to the thief sanctions this view of it; but as it directly conflicts with numerous Scriptures which teach that man in death is unconscious, returns to dust, knows nothing, and praises not the Lord, it behooves us to examine it closely; because if the Bible contradicts itself, certainly

IT IS NO BOOK OF GOD!

I ask your earnest attention, then, while I examine this passage. If the popular view be correct all our positions are wrong; and instead of this being the Church of God, it is a congregation of heretics, a schism; and the sooner we know it the better.

But now to the words of Jesus to the thief;—"And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee to-day, thou shalt be with me in Paradise." That distinctly promises that the thief shall be with Jesus in Paradise at some time, but as to when, no intimation is given, whatever. But let us try again, "And Jesus said unto him, verily I say unto thee, to-day shalt thou be with me in Paradise." That promises two things instead of one. It promises not only that the thief shall be with him in Paradise, but also promises that he should be there and yet I have neither added a word to it, nor taken a word from it, but just read it in two different ways. Before I proceed further I wish to show you how that passage of the New Testament—in fact how the whole of the New Testament was written and read for more than fifteen hundred years after Christ. "ANDJESUSSAID UNTOHIMVERILYISAY UNTOTHEETODAYSHALT THOUBEWITHMEINPARADI-E." The present system of punctuation was invented by a printer of Venice named Manutius, about the close of the 15th century. There were previous to this hardly any punctuation marks at all. The whole was one compact mass of words without spaces, commas, semicolons or periods, as you see by these lines. The importance of proper punctuation is shown by the two meanings made out of Jesus, answer to the thief. If we do not understand a writing we cannot punctuate it correctly. He who punctuated this passage did not know that a man cannot be dead and alive at the same time—did not know that did not know that the Scriptures teach that "the dead know not anything;" or, if he knew it he did not believe it, and so put the comma after thee; "verily, I say unto thee, to-day shalt thou be with me in Paradise." Jesus promised no such thing. He said "Verily (or amen,—be it so) I say unto thee to-day thou shalt be with me in Paradise," agreeable to the request. You shall be with me when Paradise is restored. As if to say to him; you have believed in me when all men have forsaken me, and tremendous odds seem to be against my claims—you shall be remembered—you shall be with me in Paradise. Just the position of a comma makes all this difference; and it was placed there by an uninspired man, and one, too, who did not know the truth concerning man's nature,—thought the man proper never dies, but he does.

WITH HIM THAT VERY DAY,

THE DEAD ARE ALIVE IN NO SENSE

And, now, what does Paradise mean? It is a Persian word meaning a beautiful garden or park, or a delightful grove; and the Septuagint translation renders "the garden of Eden" by the word "Paradise." And it is common for us to speak of it in the same way. Man lost Paradise through disobedience, in the very infancy of the race;—lost it when there was but one couple. And besides Paradise they lost their lives. But no sooner had and the right to live, than God made other propositions to the guilty pair, which, if accepted, would not enable them to EVADE death, but entitle them to live again after death. This is set before us in the opening pages of God's book, and by turning clear over to the closing pages we see what Jehovah proposes to do for those who secure another life after this on his terms.

Paradise is to be restored, and the antitypical tree of life is to be in the midst of the Paradise of God, as was the typical; and its fruit is to heal the nations; this shows that the scene of all this blessedness is to be the earth, where the nations needing healing will be. And there is to be additional proof that it is said of earth which is now cursed. Still another proof of this is found in the fact that Jesus says in the same chapter, that those who keep his sayings will be blessed, for he is coming quickly and will bring his reward with him when he comes. That is the time he remembers all the faithful—the thief among the rest. There is described the Paradise he promised to share with the thief. It has not come yet.

Your attention is now invited to 2 Tim. iv. 1, where you can see that the kingdom comes when the Lord comes, just as the thief believed. It says he judges the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom. Bear in mind he is to occupy David's throne; and Jeremiah says Jerusalem shall be called the throne of the Lord; and the 2nd chapter of Isaiah says the law shall go forth to the world out of Zion, and the word of the Lord out of Jerusalem; and Jesus himself called Jerusalem referring to himself. And Isaiah speaking of the Lord as coming, says "he shall comfort Zion; he will make her wilderness like Eden, and her desert like the garden of the Lord; and Ezekiel's 36th chapter speaks of the same time and events, saying the "land of Israel that lay desolate so long is to become like the garden of Eden—Paradise. You see, then, it was no new thing for Jesus to call the kingdom Paradise, because it is the coming of the kingdom that restores Paradise. And Peter in the 3rd chapter of Acts says the heavens must retain Jesus until the times for restoring all the prophets have predicted, among which Paradise occupies a conspicuous place.

THE CITY OF THE GREAT KING

But there is one more place where the word Paradise is mentioned; and it seems to favor the popular view, at first sight. I refer to 2 Cor. xii. 2-4, where Paul speaks of some one having been caught up to the third heaven; and in the 4th verse this third heaven is called Paradise. In regard to this I remark first, that the word up is not in the original; it is merely "a gloss of the translators," which expresses their opinion about it.

CONVEYED AWAY

is the word for word rendering,—away, not up. Away in the future some two thousand years, when Paul wrote. As we have seen, Paradise is to be restored. Now please turn to the first verse and you will see that it was not a literal transaction at all, for he says: "I will come to visions and revelations of the Lord," not to a literal event. Then follows the description of the vision; and I understand that he was projected forward by the spirit to that good time coming, and had such transcendant revelations made to him about it that he was in danger of being unduly elated by it, and so a thorn in the flesh was given him to keep him humble. But still, there stand the words "third heaven," which seem to convey the idea of some place in the upper regions. Happily we are not left to guess about it. The Spirit in Peter helps us out, as you may see by turning to the 3rd chapter and 5th verse of his 2nd Epistle. He says those who ask, for all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation, are willingly ignorant of the fact that by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water, whereby the world that then was being overflowed with water, perished."

WHERE IS THE PROMISE OF HIS COMING

That disposes of one heavens and earth—they perished by water. But what of the present heavens and earth? Peter tells us in the 7th verse that the heavens and earth which are now, by the same word (which destroyed the first by water) are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men. When that takes place two heavens and earth will have passed away. And what next? Are there any more heavens and earth beyond the present? The answer is found in the 13th verse, where he says: "We according to his promise look for a new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. That makes three heavens and earth. It was to this third heavens and earth in vision that Paul was caught away. This was the Paradise he speaks of.

THIS IS THE PARADISE

in which Jesus and the thief will meet. And John the Revelator saw in a similar vision a course of events through some two thousand years that LEAD UP to those new heavens and earth. "I saw a new heaven and a new earth," says he; but it was only in vision. The reality is not yet. People who talk glibly about Jesus and the thief being in Paradise together that day, do not know much about it, do they?

But I must condense, or I shall not have time to make the points I wish to: FIRST, Jesus in Luke 24 is said to have announced his history for three days in advance. He would be delivered into the hands of sinful men, and be crucified; and the third day rise again; the burial being understood. There is no room here for a journey to Paradise that day with the thief.

SECOND, In Matthew xii. 40, Jesus predicted that "As Jonah was three days and three nights in the whale's belly; so the Son of Man (He who was speaking) would be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth. Was his prediction verified? If he and the thief went to Paradise that day it was not.

THIRD, We have the word of the Spirit in Eph. iv. 9, 10. That he that descended into the lower parts of the earth (the grave) is the same that ascended up far above all heavens. This is a strong nail in a sure place. He was not dissected, so to speak, and himself dispatched to heaven, and his tenement put into the lower parts of the earth. It was he who descended that ascended. A veritable Gibralter that has been hitherto overlooked, I think.

FOURTH, We have the word of the Spirit for it in the 9th verse that He FIRST DESCENDED INTO the LOWER PARTS OF THE EARTH BEFORE HE ASCENDED. So it now becomes necessary to learn how long he remained in the lower parts of the earth. Jesus' prediction that he would be in the heart of the earth three days and three nights clearly teaches that he would be there ONLY three days and three nights. But in the case? Did he rise at the end of that time? In Matt. xx. 19, he positively said he would. Did he, is the question? The answer is, yes; the women from Galilee followed the corpse in charge of Joseph and Nicodemus, and saw how it was laid (Luke xxiii. 55), and on the First day of the week, very early in the morning, came to the sepulchre with spices, and found the stone rolled away and the body of Jesus gone. When their astonishment was at its height, two men stood by them in shining garments, and said, "Why seek ye the living among the dead? He is not here:

WHAT ARE THE FACTS

HE IS RISEN.

He was alive again you see; the grave was no place for him. Jesus was a true prophet. He rose again the third day. I submit then, that as Paul said it was he who descended that also ascended, and that he descended first, and then ascended, he did not ascend until the third day, if then; so that the thief was not with him in the supposed Paradise that day of his death.

FIFTH, Did Jesus pardon the thief? If so, when he died would he not be numbered with those who and who God shall by and by bring out of that state with Jesus? (1 Thess. iv. 13-16). In that case certainly the thief cannot be with Jesus, for HE (Jesus) has been already awakened.

SIXTH, If the thief was pardoned, then died and was buried, would he not need a resurrection in order to live again? This is not speculative. The question grows out of Paul's assertion in 1 Cor. xv. 17, 18 that if Christ be not raised, believers are yet in their sins, and they who have fallen asleep in the faith of Christ have perished. Perished if Christ be not raised. Plainly, then, the death of Christ avails nothing unless he be raised. He was not raised on the day of his death. He died about the 9th hour (see Matt. xxvii. 45-50). Indeed he was not buried till the eventide of that day, Mark xv. 42; and he was not raised again within three hours. That was not the time he had named for his residence in the dust.

HE WAS IN THE DUST

three days, and during that time the perishing or *non*perishing of those asleep in the faith of Jesus was, humanly speaking, in suspense. Everything depended upon the resurrection of Christ. All the faithful perish if Christ be not raised; the thief is no exception. The thief would not take precedence of all the worthies who lived and died as martyrs to the truth.

SEVENTH, When the even was come, and the Sabbath about to commence the thieves were still living, and were expected to live for some time. But Jesus was dead already. As it was not lawful for criminals to hang on the cross on the Sabbath, their legs were broken to prevent their escape when taken down; and the strong presumption is that they lived on into the Sabbath as it was already eventide when their legs were broken. In this case as Christ; and on the popular hypothesis, could not have been with Jesus in Paradise the day he made the promise. Dr. Clark says men sometimes live for days on the cross, and die of sheer exhaustion at last.

THE THIEF DID NOT DIE ON THE SAME DAY

EIGHTH, Jesus died the day he made the promise; but where did he go? To Paradise? Nay; the answer is found in the second chapter of Acts, a quotation by Peter from the 16th Psalm. It says, "For David speaketh concerning him (Christ) I foresaw the Lord always before my face, for he is on my right hand, that I should not be moved, therefore did my heart rejoice, and my tongue was glad; moreover also

MY FLESH SHALL REST IN HOPE

(three days rest in hope). But why all this joy? Ans:—"Because thou wilt not leave my soul in sheol or hades, the grave, neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption. Paul tells us he was buried. The angels said he was risen, and invited the women to see when he had lain. And I want to impress upon your minds this important truth, that the Spirit of God in Acts ii. 26, 27, calls Christ's Body of flesh that rests in hope, the Soul that is not suffered to see corruption. This is not as clearly stated as I would like. I will try again. The Body of FLESH in the 26th verse, is styled MY SOUL in the 27th. That is his person—himself.

NINTH, The kingdom referred to by the thief is not to be given to Jesus till he comes with the Considerable space is given in this paper to the discourse by Brother Joblin on "The thief on the cross." As a rule we desire to avoid such long articles, but this question has excited so much discussion, and is a stumbling block o so many, that we thought best o give it all the space necessary.

Bro. Joblin writes for the encouragement of all co-workers that "the Church of God in Cleveland has been instrumental in bringing into the fold of the Good Shepherd during 1892 twenty-six; thirteen in the city, and thirteen in other parts of the state. This has been done without any compromise of the Truth. We thank God and take courage."

Renewals are coming in very well. Still there are more from whom we wish to hear soon. Brethren and Sisters, if you have a little extra to spare when sending, do not forget the poor. Supplying them with papers is quite an item of expense. So far we have been well supplied for this work, and return our thanks to those who have aided. Several of our foreign friends are not paid for this year. Who wants to send the paper to one of these workers in far off lands?

If man were to receive an installment of divine nature at conversion, it would partially enable him to evade the death which is appointed to all men.

"Man's Inhumanity to Man" was illustrated in Cleveland a few days ago. A woman caused a sick man and his family to be turned into the street at night for the lack of a paltry ten dollars to pay the rent.

Thousands of unemployed men attended St. Paul's Cathedral, London, on New Year's day. On leaving the hungry creatures marched through the streets singing the "Marseillaise Hymn," and "The Starving Poor of England."

Professor McSweeny of St. Mary's Theological Seminary in a "Christmas Meditation." said: "The second person of the Trinity emphatically dwelt amongst us. He selected his mother from what might be called the middle class of society."

Not only was the Lord Jesus a servant while on earth; he is now your servant, obedient ones. Yes; he serves you now. And that is not all; he will be your servant when he comes again, as well as your Lord. Read Luke xii. 37 and be satisfied.

"Bombaugh's Gleanings for the curious," furnishes double distilled foolishness for its readers, in comments on Rev. xxi. 16, by saying that heaven has capacity for 80,-321,843,750,000,000 rooms 16 feet square, after setting off half of the whole for the throne of God and the court of heaven, and half of the remainder for streets.

As a sign of the times we might call attention to the fact that the New York Presbytery has decided that Dr. Briggs is no heretic. Why [illegible] said that "many of the prediction of the Old Testament have been reversed by history;" and that "The great body of Messianic prediction has not only not been fulfilled, but cannot now be fulfilled, for the reason that its own time has passed forever;" and that "Nothing essential would be lost from the Miracles of the Bible if we could explain his unique authority over man and nature by the use of mind cure or hypnotism, or any other occult power;" and that "Moses did not write the Pentateuch," and other like trivial things. He is still in the Presbyterian fold, is Dr. Briggs; so it matters nothing whether the prophets spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit or not; it matters nothing whether Jesus actually performed miracles or was merely a conjuror. This is a finger-post on the coast of time that we neglect at our peril;—sea-weed floating on the water which shows we are nearing land.

We remember once reading the quaint remark that "Lukewarmness is the result of the mingling of extremes of heat and cold in the same vessel."

France is racked from centre to circumference over the Panama scandal, and news comes to us of a scandal in Germany which rivals that of France. Those in High Places are demonstrating the rottenness of human government and the need of a new administration. Would that we could reach the people with the glad tidings of a divine government in the near future.

What a comfort to know that the whole household of faith comprise the Christ the Anointed! This is something the very least can take hold of. "For as the (human) body is one, and in it are many members; and all those members of the body, though many, are one body; so also the Anointed: for, indeed by one spirit we were all immersed into One Body, whether Jews or Greeks, whether slaves or freemen; and were all made to drink One Spirit; for the body also is not one member, but many." "Comfort one another with these words, brethren and sisters."

Editor Restitution:

I hope that I have an increasing interest in our paper, as we see the day approaching, it seems right upon us.

I want to cleanse my way and be ready for the wonderful rapture and mighty impending events. We cannot serve two masters. Do not forget the distant isolated ones in your prayers.

I have been interesting myself by perusing an old history this cold weather. The first volume of Samuel Whepley's, M. A.

It is astonishing to read over and over again what monsters in human form have attempted to rule on the earth. I will make one quotation from this very able historian in respect to the "Restoration of Israel." "This event happened about 250 years after the separation of Israel from Judah. From this captivity the ten tribes never returned. The probability is that they soon mingled with other nations, lost all distinction of origin and will emerge to light no more.

Still allowing full weight and authority to ancient Scripture prophecy from which nothing certain on this subject can be discovered."

I would say comment is unnecessary, but is he consistent?

M. J. Mansfield.

Dear Restitution:

Enclosed please find $1.50 to pay on subscription for 1893. The paper comes to me once a week as a dear friend, bringing words of comfort and good cheer, for in these troublesome times we can look up and say our redemption draweth nigh. Dear brothers and sisters scattered abroad, let us be faithful to the one faith, that when the Master comes to gather in his sheaves, that we may be found among the gathered ones.

Yours, waiting.

Mrs. F. W. Chapin.

Dear Restitution:

I see by the paper that the time has expired, and it is high time for me to send in my subscription in order to get the paper right along. I cannot think of letting the weeks pass without it. I do love to read its good teachings. It is next to the Bible.

Your Sister in Christ.

Sarah Clark.

Editor Restitution:

I wish you a Happy New Year. As the time is nearly expired for your good paper I will send the money to renew my subscription for another year, for I cannot think of getting along without it. I love to read the precious truths its pages contain. The good letters of exhortation from the brothers and sisters scattered throughout the land, how cheering and encouraging they are. They make me feel more and more like running with patience the race that is set before us. Oh, that we all may be prepared to hail the coming King is my prayer. A little more patient waiting, a few more days of trial, and our Redeemer will come even as he went, in the clouds of heaven.

Your Sister in hope.

Mrs. G. P. Allard.

Editor Restitution:

You will please find $1.00 enclosed to pay for The Restitution another eight months. My time is up the 8th of this month, and I do not want to do without it. It is all the preacher I have. I have not heard a preacher of the "one faith" for more than twelve years.

It is the most welcome visitor that comes to see me. Wish it come twice a week.

Yours in hope of eternal life.

S. T. Garrett.

Dear Restitution:

Enclosed please find three dollars, for which send to my address the dear, grand, and noble Restitution. This is the fifth year that I have been a subscriber. Its enlightening pages have been a source of great comfort to myself, and my sister, Mrs. F. D. Hambrick, with whom I make my home.

Sue Taylor.

Dear Restitution:

I thought I would write a few lines to the dear ones of the one faith, to let you know that there are a few here in the far west.

We have an organization of twelve members, and a good Sunday-school. We do our own preaching. There has been three additions by baptism. We have a good Bible Class, and we are trying to scatter the seeds of truth as best we can. The Restitution is all the preacher we have had for a good many years. It is a welcome visitor. I have been a constant reader of its columns for twenty-two years. When we read the letters from brothers and sisters it strengthens us, and we feel encouraged to go on our pilgrimage while here in this world of care and sorrow. If we fight a little while longer, hold on to eternal life, and overcome the evil one, we will have a crown of life that fadeth not away.

Your Brother and Sister in Christ.

Alfred & Elizabeth Morris.

Editor Restitution:

I would like to say through your valuable paper, that it rejoices my heart to read of the interest taken in the evangelistic fund in the state of Indiana and elsewhere, and I wonder why the brethren in Kansas do not make a move in that direction. I have looked and longed for something of this kind, and I hope the brethren and sisters wont let another conference go by without making a desperate effort to put one or more preaching brethren in the Master's work. I have not been able to attend a conference for fifteen years, being so far from places of meetings of the Abrahamic faith, and I am starving for Gospel preaching. Now if the brethren of Kansas will start an evangelistic fund they may count on $5.00 per year from me whether I get to the meeting or not, and more if I can spare it. I hope if any of the preaching brethren can make it convenient they will come this way and preach a few sermons for this community, no matter where they are from.

Yours, in hope.

R. J. Richards.

Dear Brother Underwood:

Please find enclosed, $1.50 for my subscription. Would be glad to send more but at this time I can not. Hope I may be ready soon to do something more for the cause, and you have my thanks for your patience.

What saith the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life. This is the language of the Savior, the Lord, our Christ, spoken more than eighteen hundred years ago and this eternal life is vested with Christ in God, which life will be given to all who are worthy of the same at His (Christ's) appearing and kingdom. This brethren, pertains to us Gentiles as well as the house of Israel, for are we not all God's people if we do His will. He makes no difference between Jew and Gentile. He calls men everywhere to repent, that is reform your lives, for the time of all things is at hand. The times of the Gentiles are the last times of the world's age until the judgments of the Almighty begins to restore all things spoken by the mouth of his holy prophets since the world began, and then when he comes then is when all his holy people will get this eternal life that is offered to all that seek for it.

Then, brethren, let me exhort you all in the name of our God to be faithful, and earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints which were at Jerusalem.

Listen to Peter. What shall we have? We have left all and followed thee. Hear him. You which have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall sit upon the throne of His glory. When is it? When the Lord shall sit on the throne of His glory, you shall sit on thrones.

Brethren, how grand is the Word of God, who is able to build us up, and to give us an inheritance among them that are sanctified.

John Boyd.

Dear Brother Underwood:

I often think of you and hope you do the same of me. This leaves me about the same as when you and I last met, but I am going down slowly all the time, and hope I am prepared to meet whatever comes.

I arrived home in Southern Kansas without accident. I found all in usual health.

I often think of the enjoyment we had at the meetings at Antioch, Plymouth, Argos. If it was such a pleasure to meet there, what will it be to meet where there is no sickness, sorrow, pain and death? It was hard to part at that time, but what pleasure it will be to meet where there is no more parting.

I wish you to remember me to all the kind friends. I often think of the good instructions we received from those dear brethren. I wish that we might all live as we will wish we had done when Christ comes to establish His Kingdom. He says He will come, and will not tarry. Oh! what a happy day it will be. Farewell to all.

Mrs. H. L. Vickery.

Dear Restitution:

I once more take the privilege to say a few words in the columns of our dear paper. I see so many good letters from our brothers and sisters, and it does one so much good to read them. I never fail to read them first. How thankful we all ought to be for the privilege.

Oh, dear brothers and sisters, let us awake and get to work. The time is short. When we look around and see the condition of the world, death, affliction, weeping and crying all over the land, certainly the last days are upon us.

The thought has come to me many times of what Brother Foore said: "who will be the next?" Is it I? We all know that this life is short, and whether awake, or asleep when Jesus comes, it is my desire to be worthy of eternal life. God help us all to be worthy is my prayer. Yours in hope.

Mrs. Almus Adams.

Editor Restitution:

As I have been taking The Restitution for a few years and my subscription has run out, I will ask to have it renewed as I love to read its contents. It always has some comforting words which cheers my life as it drags slowly on. When I read the letters that are written by the brethren and sisters, I feel strengthened and more thoughtful. I have had a desire to write a letter to The Restitution for some time but have failed to do it. I hope this will not tire you as it has lengthened out somewhat. I will send $1.50 for the paper and 50 cents for other use.

Jas. Allard.

To Libbie Palmer:

In reply to your queries in December issue of The Restitution, would say first there is a well-known Greek letter notation somewhat similar to the Roman which was modeled after it and that is used as well as the Arabic numerals throughout the Greek Scriptures. Moreover that there is a numerical argument running through the Greek Scriptures as a whole. But it is not for novices and is something that must be studied very diligently and carefully to be understood. Secondly that the letters Alpha and Omega do not numerically stand for 1896, but for 1800 or for 801 according to their position and use in notation. Thirdly that the letters χξϛ—or Chi, Zi, Digamma, do not numerically spell Napoleon, nor Naponeoreti but do spell [illegible] which is an adverb meaning "the way of apostasy" which any one can see and always has been the way of "the natural man" about whom this writer is here speaking. Fourthly we are specifically told in the Scriptures that "the day and the hour knoweth no man not even the Son of Man," and that this is one of the secrets the Father hath kept reserved in his own knowledge, and while we can approximate the time in our calculations, and do not need to be taken entirely unawares as the wicked and unfaithful will be, yet it is not best for us to know any more than to know that the summer is coming when we see the figtree putting forth its leaves, etc.

Again our friend to whom you refer evidently takes the Common Version chronology dates for the basis of his calculations, and these are now acknowledged by all scholars to have been tinkered with by apostate hands, and those who "thought to change times and seasons" and are utterly unreliable. Using the "year-day interpretation" for instance the date given in Daniel 2300 there is a variation of a hundred years, as the same date in the Septuagint is 2400, and that apparently is correct too, as it harmonizes with other chronological periods given and proved so far as it can be by secular history.

Faith does not demand that we should know coming events, but to be prepared for anything that may come to us, even the consummation of this age, which is only the ushering in of a much more glorious one for humanity as well as this planet we call the earth.

Our business should be "to let our light so shine," etc., and attend to our own part of the work and let God attend to his own. The apostles and the early church heralded the swift coming and return of the Christ and we cannot do better than to follow in their footsteps; but we must not forget that "one day and a thousand years" in the estimation of God are not accounted as we account them. Our business is to keep oil in our lamps and to keep them trimmed and lighted, awaiting the return of the Bridegroom whether it be in the second, third or fourth watch of this moral night of darkness and apostasy.

Chas. Gardner.

Editor Restitution:

Enclosed find Money order for subscription to The Restitution, which is doing fairly well, with wholesome food for every cast of mind. Brothers Elton, Henn, Joblin, Wince, and B. Wilson, who I would go further to shake hands with than any other man, mainly for this reason, I have learned much truth from his writings. Yes Sister Wince keep your sword unsheathed. That article on Scripture Divorce was courageously and manly told if a woman did have to tell it. Bro. Dwiggins I believe you hit the nail on the head. My mind has been ruminating on that theme for several years. The idea noticeable is that the Bible settles the question.

In conclusion let me say to Restitution, brethren, and correspondents, "Cry aloud, spare not." The reward will be given to them that endure to the end.

Yours in hope.

J. P. Bitner.

Dear Restitution:

I think it must be time for me to renew again for our much loved paper, which we cannot or will not do without, as long as we can find the means to pay for it. It is a source of great comfort in our isolated condition, to read, and hear from the dear ones of the household of faith, who like us are striving for that dear home where sorrow and trouble can never enter, and oh, joyful thought, that we can see our dear Savior, and our precious loved ones whom that cruel enemy death has taken from us. Bless His Holy name, He is coming to bring them back. He has so promised, and He like the arm of flesh will not disappoint us.

With kind love and greeting to all the faithful ones, and God's blessing on you, who labor so faithfully to send the glad tidings abroad.

Yours, looking for the Master.

Lottie M. Bellows.

Dear Restitution:

You will find enclosed three dollars, one fifty for the well beloved paper The Restitution and one fifty for other use in spreading the gospel, for truly the harvests are great and laborers are few. Surely Jesus is near he will be here by and by. May we all be ready to meet him with lamps trimmed and burning, and oil in our vessels, may we go out and hear the well done good and faithful servant. I feel more determined to run and win the prize than ever before. Our paper is so good, it gives so many good lessons. The Pine Woods Bible Class is splendid, on prophecy. I feel sure our paper will be full of good instructions while Brother Joblin is writing for it, have so much spiritual food in them, and many other writers. Such warnings, the night is far spent, the day is at hand, may we all be kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time. Your Sister waiting for the great King for heaven.

It seems wonderful to me that any one should so distrust the goodness and the provident care of our heavenly Father as to say, "Take thought for yourself first, before you start out to preach."

O, Sister Woodward, I feel just as you do when you say, "if they all thought as I do, they would not wait for one dollar to be raised, if they had enough in their pockets to pay expenses!" There is not time to hold on to a job until enough is earned to lay something by in store, and pay for a home.

I wonder sometimes if we do trust in the Lord? Shall I tell you the story of my revered father's early ministry, just a little of it?

When I was a wee tot of five or six years, he was ordained by the Baptist church. He had secured a home in the thick woods of Indiana by the united efforts of himself and devoted wife. A rude cabin had been built, but no barns, nor no goodly stock of farm utensils. He had no horse or carriage. To help pay for the clearing of this farm the wife braided rye-straw into hats, and spun yarn to be woven into cloth and sold.

The furniture of the house was of the rudest kind. Our clothing was in the winter, jeans, flannel, and linsey, manufactured by my mother, grandmother and aunts. In the summer, it was tow, linen, or unbleached cotton.

Our corn crop had to be tended with the hoe. To eke out our meagre income, we dug ginsang in the woods, or dried peaches when they came into bearing.

Father worked until noon on Saturdays and then washed and dressed after eating his dinner, and then started on the run for his appointment, eleven, twelve, and fourteen miles distant. He waded mud and snow, crossed swamps and swollen streams, leaving the wife and little ones at home to battle as best they might with fierce storms, and biting cold. While preaching for the Baptist church, he received fifty cents in money, and perhaps a little clothing.

He set no money value upon his labors. God had called him to preach the Gospel,—men were dying, and at whatever cost,—he must go. Nothing could keep him from going. Neither persecution, nor peril, nor sword. The reward was at the end of the race. When the glad news of the nearing advent and its kindred doctrines was embraced it was the same. He went out by night and by day, that men might be saved.

The cabins of the settlers, were at many points the place of gathering. And what gatherings they were!

And all this time he worked to support himself and family, teaching school in the winter season, and farming in the summer—managing somehow to steadily pursue his studies as the days went by. And I can truthfully say that God provided for all our wants, we were clothed and fed, and rejoiced in the Truth.

Later on the dear bands of brethren to whom father preached, were very kind, giving him substantial and abundant aid. But I am glad that he went out when he did and that he endured the hardships and the perils of the way. He trusted God. Let us trust Him. But give now, dear ones of the household of faith, for it will not be long until the hoarded gold will be flung to the moles and bats, it may be flung away ere another autumn comes.

S. Roxana Wince.

DIED

Jenkins.—At Commerce, Texas, Nov. 15, 1892 at the home of her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. G. D. Fowler, Sister Mary Jane Jenkins, passed away from this life after ten weeks confinement to her bed in intense suffering.

She being a daughter of Augustin Jenkins and Barbara Minton his wife, was born Oct. 28, 1825, and reared in Madison Co., Ala. She professed faith in Christ and was immersed or baptized and joined the Methodists when quite young, and lived a true member in that church until about four years before her death. She had always been a worker in Sunday school and prayer-meeting, always ready to visit and wait on the sick. Being a constant reader of the Bible she saw that the Methodists did not teach the whole truth as is taught in the Scriptures. She was married to J. K. Jenkins, Sept. 1840. He died March 18, 1875. Mrs. Sue Taylor and myself (her sisters, are the only ones that survive her of seven daughters. Sent her The Restitution, the Unspeakable Gift by Petingell, the Gospel of the Kingdom by Wiley Jones and other valuable books and tracts. This being about five years ago. Thus by reading those she became a firm believer in the things written therein.

She moved to Texas three years ago where she has since lived. She leaves one son and four daughters, two of whom Mrs. Fowler and Mrs. Perkins nursed and cared for her in her last illness, and no daughters ever showed more devotion to a mother than they. The enemy death came and claimed her, but he cannot hold her long, for she peacefully fell asleep in Jesus with a firm hope of his soon coming to call his saints from their sleeping dust. She was well versed in Bible Truths and repeated much of it that was appropriate during her last sickness. Her wonderful never-failing patience amid her last suffering, her steady unwavering faith in her Savior, and her unwavering hope, were some of the features that characterized her well matured Christian life. Then she had such a spirit of kindness always manifested in her words and deeds. Indeed we can say with Paul, "We sorrow not as those that have no hope, for if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so they that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." We hope to meet our dear sister in the sweet by and by.

The Phrenological Journal and Science of health for January is out in a new cover and is an unusually interesting number. It starts off with a remarkably life-like portrait of Jay Gould and a description of his character by Prof. Sizer, followed by a pertinent biographical sketch. Mrs. Charlotte Fowler Wells adds another article to the list of her charming biographical sketches, this time discussing the careers of B. J. Gray and Prof. Stanley Grimes. Practical Phrenology stands out conspicuously in this issue. "Human Pursuits, and How to Study them Phrenologically," is to constitute a series of articles by one who has had an experience not equalled by any other phrenologist, Prof. Nelson Sizer, in this number the topic being The Lawyer. The same author writes about "Heads and Faces, and What They Indicate," amply illustrated, the first of a systematic series under this title which will add much to the interest of the Journal. The several departments of the Journal are well filled, as usual, with matter that is appropriate to the season and of special value to the reader. It is published at the popular price of $1.50 per annum, or 15c. a number. Address the Publishers, Fowler & Wells Co., 25 East Twenty-first Street, New York.

One Day at a Time.

One day at a time! That's all it can be;
No faster than that is the hardest fate;
And days have their limits, however we Begin them too early and stretch them too late.

One day at a time! Every heart that aches
Knows only too well how long it can seem.
But it's never to-day which the spirit breaks—
It's the darkened future, without a gleam.

One day at a time! When joy is at height—
Such joy as the heart can never forget—
And pulses are throbbing with wild delight,
How hard to remember that suns must set!

One day at a time! But a single day,
Whatever its load, whatever its length;
And [illegible] of precious Scripture to [illegible]
That, according to each, shall be our strength.

This Day Shalt Thou Be With Me in Paradise.

clouds of heaven (see Dan. vii. 13.) As he has not so come yet, how could he have granted the thief's request?

TENTH, Jesus plainly informed his disciples that they could not be with him till he comes again, and receives them, (see John xiv. 3). Is the thief to be honored and preferred before them?

ELEVENTH, Is heaven the popular Paradise? Heaven is God's throne, and we have the word of Jesus to Mary on the third day that he had not yet ascended.

TOUCH ME NOT

said he, for I have not yet ascended to my Father." Did he tell the truth? Not if he had been to Paradise with the thief in the meantime.

TWELFTH, The thief was a Jew, and he had told the Jews, and even his disciples that they could not go where he was going. Do you enquire why? I answer, He was a High Priest: they were not High Priests. It was death for any but the High Priest to enter even the TYPICAL holy of holies, to say nothing of heaven itself. Reason enough then why the thief could not go there!

THIRTEENTH, Paul says "Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures." What had the Scriptures predicted of his death? This is what they say; this in the 22nd Psalm is according to which he died. v. 14, "I am poured out like water,—and all my bones are out of joint; (suspended as he was on the tree) "My heart is like wax; it is melted in the midst of my bowels; my strength is dried up like a potsherd, and my tongue cleaveth to my jaws, and thou hast brought me into the dust of death." And Isaiah in his 53rd chapter says, he was cut off out of the land of the living—that his soul was made an offering for sin—poured out his soul unto death." This, dear friends, is the way he died—

ACCORDING TO THE SCRIPTURES.

The apostle adds that he was buried after he died; the proper thing by the way, to do with the dead; but he further adds: "That he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures."

Alas, my friends, if there be but one Jesus Christ, and that Jesus Christ did not really die—if he hied away to heaven the moment the breath left him, if it was all

A SHAM AND A MAKE-BELIEVE

we are in an awful plight! We have no Savior! It THRILLS me through and through to think that the religious world of to-day does not believe that Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures. They say his TENEMENT only, died. Friends, we are undone if CHRIST did not die for our sins! We cannot be redeemed from death by an irresponsible house that Christ lived in. And if the Christ on the cross went off to Paradise with the thief that day he is not the one Isaiah predicted should pour out his soul unto death, and

WE HAVE NO SAVIOR.

But bless and praise the name of our God for the testimony that CHRIST died for our sins, and was raised again for our justification. Yes, praise his holy name, we can read in Rom. xiv. 9, that he both died and rose, and revived; so that it WAS he who descended that ascended, and not another; this is why we read that he showed himself alive after his passion. This proves that himself had been dead! Will you tell me he was mistaken as to his own identity when he speaks from heaven saying, "I am He that liveth and was dead?" Rev. i. 18.

FOURTEENTH. Can any reasonable person who believes the Bible, imagine it to be true that the real man does not die, but goes to his reward or punishment at death,—can such imagine, I say, that the great and good God would allow the race to grope their way in ignorance of that great truth for four thousand years? Is it not most preposterous to think that it should be an essential article of faith now, while millions lived and died in ignorance of it, because the words of Jesus to the thief had never been spoken before?

FIFTEENTH. If the thief was justified by faith he will be blessed when all the blessed of the Father are blessed, viz: when the Son of Man shall come in his glory (see Matt. xxv. 31). This is WHEN they shall be blessed. And the 34th verse tells HOW they shall be blessed, by the words of the King, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world!" the very thing, at the very time the thief had reference to. Jesus in Luke xiv. 14, says of certain, "Thou shalt be blessed." . . . "For thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just. The eclectic resurrection that Paul sacrificed everything to attain to, (see Phil. iii. 10, 11.)

SIXTEENTH, The declaration of Jesus in Matt. v. 5, that "the meek shall inherit the earth" is in strict harmony with his promise to the thief. Paradise as abundantly proven, will be on the earth; and the idea that the thief should go to an everlasting in the face of this declaration is most ridiculous. He asked to be remembered when Jesus shall come into his kingdom. This in view of Daniel's prophetic announcement hundreds of years before, that the saints shall take and possess the kingdom forever even forever and ever, was according to truth. And, seeing Jesus is to come here and reign here, and as Daniel says, the kingdom and the dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven is to be given to the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, the prayer of the thief is in harmony with the truth as it is in Jesus.

SEVENTEENTH, The state of man in death as revealed in the Scriptures of truth, makes it impossible—absolutely impossible for the thief to have gone to Paradise or any other place than the grave at his death,—because Ecc. ix. 5, says and therefore it would be useless for him to go to Paradise: how could he enjoy anything if he knew nothing? If the thief went to the grave, and he did, for the words "whither thou goest" is said of every man, there is no work, nor device nor knowledge, nor wisdom there, (see v. 10.) And Psalm cxv. 17 says, "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence." This was, and is still, the condition of the thief and of all the human family that have fallen under the Power of Death, if God has spoken to us in his Word.

THE DEAD KNOW NOT ANYTHING;

LASTLY, As if to forever preclude the idea of reward at death. the coming of Christ at the time referred to by the thief is called the Christians' "Blessed Hope," (see Titus ii. 13;) because their life is for the time being, hid with Christ in God, and when he who is their life shall appear, then, (not before.) shall they appear with him in glory, (see Col. iii. 3, 4.)

In conclusion, I earnestly ask if there be any here who would like the Lord Jesus to remember them when he comes in his kingdom? A more important question than this was never submitted to you; never CAN be submitted to you. The effect of your final answer to this question will reach on and on through the endless cycles of eternity. We have been considering words uttered by Jesus when in the agonies of death. He was not dying on account of his own sin, but dying the just for the unjust—dying as an offering for sin. Not dying to appease the wrath of an angry God, but, because without the shedding of blood untainted by sin, there was no pardon for sin. He was that had appeared amongst men. His resurrection attested his spotlessness; attested his acceptance as an offering for sin. You will remember that time and again he said he would raise up at the last day all who would believe in him. This was said in anticipation of his own resurrection. Everything depended upon that:—He announced publicly that he had come that men might have life; announced that he was (to be) the resurrection and the life of others, even before he had attained to resurrection life himself. I have already shown that he grappled with the enemy death on his own territory and conquered him.

HE ROSE TRIUMPHANT

over death,—the power of an endless life took possession of him. He was constituted the Prince of Life, the depository of Eternal Life for all who will accept it as the gift of God through him on the conditions exacted by God—faith and obedience. Faith, repentance and baptism into the name for the remission of sins. My heart yearns to lead some one to the Lamb of God to-night. In accents of love and compassion he calls to you to-night by this unworthy dust, "come unto me, all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Will you come? Remember, no life beyond the grave was possible for any of Adam's race till he burst the bars of the tomb. If you do not fully realize how or why that is, I will try to give you in a nutshell. Man violated the law of God. The penalty was death; by sin he stamped himself with mortality. As a mortal he begat mortals. This is how death passed upon all men. Every one of us has to pay that debt, or penalty, because we inherit our father's nature. God has not,—could not devise a scheme that contravened his law. The scheme he has devised is a scheme of redemption from death after we have satisfied the claims of the law by death. We pay off the debt of nature; but we have nothing with which to pay off our own sinful account; so Christ died as an offering for these sins of our own, and by taking his name we are graciously pardoned, and so God's just law is honored, by the death of the victim, and if pardon of his own sin is secured before death he will live again, live always—have life like the eternal years of God. Oh, the glorious simplicity of the Gospel of God. By grace ye are saved, through faith. Can I persuade one perishing soul to come to Christ for life to-night? By all the love of God and of Christ I entreat you to come now. But perhaps some one present feels like taking me to task for what I said about the conditions of salvation. Perhaps some one thinks I have stultified myself by showing that while the thief was justified by faith and repentance alone, I have claimed that any one now must be baptized as well as to have faith and repentance. That is even so; that is exactly what I teach, but you have no cause of complaint against me. I never made the arrangements, nor prescribed the conditions. I am only reporting the exactions of the Spirit. And if you will be patient a minute or two I think you will have no cause of complaint against God. Just allow that it is the prerogative of God and Christ to grant Eternal Life in his kingdom on just what conditions he pleases, and then we shall get along satisfactorily; for Jesus relieves me of all responsibility when I have told you faithfully that he said, "he that believes the Gospel and is baptized shall be saved; and he that believeth not shall be condemned." But still you are not satisfied, because you do not see why you MUST be baptized, while the thief was not. True, the thief was not baptized, neither was Abraham, nor Isaac, nor Jacob, nor David, nor Isaiah, nor Jeremiah, nor Ezekiel, nor Daniel, nor any of the ancient worthies; and if you ask why? I answer, God did not exact it of them. His law of pardon did not read that way then, but it does now. Jesus is now the only name in which and by which men can be saved, that name is imparted in the ordinance of baptism. Remission of sin is only obtained in that name in baptism. Do you read that Christ has opened a new and living way by which men can be saved. THIS IS IT. There was an old way; this is the new. Do you want to know when the new began. I answer after his resurrection, and before his ascension, when he said "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to any creature, he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved. This law had not been promulgated when the thief was pardoned, therefore he was not amenable to it. Just and righteous are all his ways. I trust this will be satisfactory.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF THE PLAN OF SALVATION

I am glad to know that many of us have come and complied with the conditions: are content to be just what God describes us to be dust, and joyfully accept of life from the dead through Jesus, who says, because I live, ye shall live also;" have accepted the call to God's kingdom and glory, and are on tip-toe with expectation of soon seeing the Lord of Life and Glory and being made like unto him. I am persuaded that the night is far spent, the day is at hand. The blood-washed throng will soon be gathered from land and sea

TO MEET THE BRIDEGROOM.

Those who are ready will go in. God help us to be ready! Everything depends upon being ready. When he comes in his kingdom, never fear but he will remember all who are ready. His "verily I say unto thee to-day, shalt thou be with me in Paradise, includes all who are ready; and they will hear his sweet words of welcome, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. May we all hear it. Amen.

NOTE. Of course I am aware that in the opinion of some this passage is an interpolation, and others argue that the request of the thief was made in mockery. As to the opinion that the 43rd verse is an interpolation, I would say, I consider it to be duty to deal with it as it stands until proven to be an interpolation, and I believe the request of the thief to have been made in good faith, and therefore speak.

I will just add that I have been requested to print the above in tract form. I will do so, if enough ~~should—think—it calculated~~ to do good to order twenty dollars worth at one dollar per 100. The retail price will be three cents. Orders must be given shortly.

M. JOBLIN.

Matthew xxiv. 29.

Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken.

Some writers regard as symbolical the language of this verse: sun, moon, and stars, being they think but symbols of human rulers, chief and subordinate. This is manifestly an error. Jesus never used a symbol in all his teaching while on earth. He employed parables but no one will contend that this language is parabolic. Nor does he here use figures of speech. We are then shut up to the fact that this verse refers to physical phenomena, and this is settled beyond the possibility of a doubt by the parallel passage in Luke: "And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars, and upon the earth, distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; and men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken." Luke xxi. 25–26. As truly as one class of signs is confined to the earth, so is the other class confined to the heavens. Heaven and earth, in these passages are antithetical terms and as the latter term denotes the locality where "nations" and "men" exist and suffer "distress" and "fear," so the former term denotes the locality where the sun, moon and stars are, and in which the signs appear. No amount of figuring will destroy the literality of these passages.

These signs occur at the right time, between the termination of the great tribulation and the coming of the Lord, and were to be precursers of his advent and to mark its nearness (comparative time). The days run beyond the tribulation. The latter ceases and leaves room, or a period of time in which the signs appear. Suffering, distress and trouble will continue until the Lord comes, says one, and from this fact concludes that the signs spoken of by our Lord have not yet occurred.

The only conclusion that can be drawn from this assumption is that the signs must appear after the Lord comes. This is contrary to the order of events as foreshown in the prophecy. The signs come first. To say these signs are for the Jews does not remove the difficulty nor restore the order of events as observed by our Lord.

In Mark xiii. 24, it is written: In those days after that tribulation the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the powers that are in heaven shall be shaken. Here the four signs are mentioned in the same order as in Matthew and Luke, and in all three records the coming of Jesus follows these in point of time, is plainly a sequence. And here, as in Matthew, the signs occur after the tribulation; and here it is plainly taught that the days extend beyond the tribulation.

Daniel speaks of "a time of trouble such as there never was since there was a nation, even to that same time." Dan. xii. 1, but this trouble is not the same as the "great tribulation" of Matt. xxiv. 21, in Mark xiii. 19, called "affliction" and in Luke xxi. 22, "the days of vengeance." Daniel's unparalleled trouble is near the epoch of the resurrection and the standing up of Michael for the deliverance of God's people, and is identical with the "distress" of nations when men's hearts fail them for fear in view of things coming on the earth. This great trouble is on the nations. If a man should say there never was such trouble since there was a bank in Chicago, every one would understand that he meant bank and finance trouble; so the expression in Daniel means national trouble.

The national trouble begins this side, and no doubt, will extend beyond the coming of the Lord.

The signs are for the church or those called by the gospel. It was Christ's disciples, and not the Jews as a people or nation, who propounded the question which called out this chain of prophecy in answer to it. Tell us said they when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming and of the end of the age? 3 v.

The answer is addressed to them as the then living members of the Christ-body, which body was to have a continuous existence down to the Lord's coming. In this sense the church of this dispensation, like the King, never dies. The prophecy spoken to the disciples of that day was spoken to every generation of Christians, and especially to the living remnant for whom is reserved the deathless rapture instead of the pangs of dissolution. When ye shall see all these things come to pass. Mark—know that it (he) is near, even at the door. Luke—kingdom of God is nigh at hand. It is the church that is addressed by Christ in the words, lift up your heads for your redemption draweth nigh.

A mistake common to a large majority of the old commentators and interpreters was, to regard this whole prophecy as relating primarily to the destruction of Jerusalem and the overthrow of the Jewish commonwealth and that it only typically relates to the personal coming of the Lord at the close of this dispensation.

Nor is this the only mistake we find in the writings of these theologians of the past. They understood that this "great tribulation" was confined to the time of the siege and ended when the city fell into the hands of the Romans; and from this they concluded that the signs which are foretold by the Savior as occurring after the tribulation were not literal but figurative, and this conviction was confirmed by the fact that the history of the times immediately succeeding the siege mentions no such physical signs in the heavens. So they concluded erroneously, that Jesus, in speaking of the darkening of the sun, and moon, and the falling of the stars, used, either highly wrought figures of rhetoric such as was common to writers of the East at that day; or that his language is symbolical and denoted the utter dissolution of civil and ecclesiastical constitution of the Jewish nation. Another mistake I find, in these old writers, growing naturally and logically out of these erroneous views of the prophecy in question. Jesus says: "When ye shall see all these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." I will quote the paraphrase of these words, by Philip Doddridge, and the reader will see how far he has missed the truth. This quotation will serve as a sample of erroneous handling of the prophecy by men of his day, and I will say by men of the present day, for the same false notions of this prophecy still abound. Mr. Doddridge says, referring to these signs, "You may assuredly know that the destruction of the Jewish state and the advancement of the kingdom in all its glory, is just at hand: or that the time is coming when the desolation I have been speaking of shall come upon Jerusalem and the gospel shall be propagated all abroad." This presents a false view of the nature of the kingdom of God and of the time of its establishment. The truth in contradiction of the false views of commentators I here state categorically: The whole prophecy does not relate to the siege and fall of Jerusalem, nor does it relate in all its parts to the fortunes of the Jewish people.

The kingdom of God was not just at hand when Jerusalem was destroyed and the Jews scattered among all nations. The tribulation did not end when the city fell, but stretched on through weary centuries this side of that event. The redemption spoken of in Luke xxi. 28 was not the deliverance of the apostles from the toils and sorrows, temptations and infirmities of this calamitous life, by their dying at that time or about that time, and their going to heaven as Mr. Doddridge tries to show in his note on this passage.

The signs were not "strong figures," nor symbols of the passing away of the Jewish church and state, but literal, physical phenomena in the heavens, and are placed in contrast with absolutely literal signs upon the earth.

These signs did not occur just after the siege of Jerusalem, nor before it, nor during the time of the siege. They were not to occur after the Lord comes and all trouble ceases, for that is too late; the redemption of the church being then an accomplished fact instead of nigh as these signs were designed to foretoken, and also to foretoken the coming of the Redeemer. These signs occur simultaneously with the signs upon the earth, that is in the same general period. This being true the distress of nations with perplexity, the sea and waves roaring, and men's hearts failing them for fear, etc., can not be included in the great tribulation which ended before these signs appeared in the heavens.

To argue as some do that these signs in the sun, moon, and stars, have not yet appeared because there is trouble and affliction, and will be until the Lord comes and causes these to cease is to place them after the event of the Lord's coming, whereas in the prophecy they are to occur before. This is the inspired order. This reasoning is a far more serious matter than shifting a difficulty. It is a contradiction of the truth as here revealed. It is wresting, and disjointing the Scriptures. Yes, it shifts its difficulty and magnifies it tenfold. There is no place suitable and in harmony with the truth for these signs to appear except just where they did appear, between the beginning of the year 1780 and the present time. The church has witnessed these marvelous precursers of the advent, and have seen, also, the "powers of the heavens shaken as the fourth sign in the order of prophetic statement. This fulfilment in the exact order of statement of four prophetic events is not accidental but agreeable to the design of the great Prophet. If at the beginning of the fulfilment of this group of events the waiting church was exhorted to lift up her head in view of redemption nigh, then what tremendous force and solemn import gather about the exhortation; "Be ye also ready for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh." "It is high time to wake out of sleep" and make the necessary preparation to meet the descending Lord and share in the glory of his [illegible] as plan to work for the [illegible] the blessed cause of truth. It is too late in this dispensation to be heaping up wealth or buying farms, or extending our business enterprises, and to thus keep constantly employed all the means that come into our hands, while God's blessed cause of truth goes a begging, and preaching talent is left unemployed and thousands go on unwarned, and uninstructed in the things pertaining to the kingdom of God.

JOHN L. WIXON.

A Question Answered.

Bro. Corbaley, one of our faithful defenders of the ancient faith, asks an answer to the following question: Speaking of Babylon, Media Persia, Greece and Rome, represented in the image of Daniel says: "Thus far we have a connected line of kingdoms, each one commencing its reign immediately upon the overthrow of the one preceding it, thereby making no break whatever in the image. In the image the toes are joined directly to the feet; sustaining as close relationship to them as the thighs to the legs, or the head to the beast. Why then should there be a break of many centuries between the overthrow of the Roman Empire by the northern barbarians in the fourth or fifth century, and the development of the kingdoms represented by the ten toes of the image?"

The "break" our Brother speaks of is specifically mentioned in prophecy.

The book of Revelation deals more particularly with the fourth beast in its revived aspect. We are told that this beast received a "deadly wound with a sword and did live," and all the world wondered at its revival, except those whose names were in the Lamb's book of life. When it revives it will combine all the elements of the previous beasts, thus presenting the image complete. See Rev. xiii. 2: "And the beast which I saw was like unto a leopard (Greece) and his feet were as the feet of a bear (Media-Persia) and his mouth as the mouth of a lion," (Babylon).

There are three periods in the career of the fourth beast. Rev. xvii. 8, speaks of the world wondering, "when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is." The "was" period is past. We are now in the period of the (break) or "is not" period, and on the verge of the "yet is" period. So, Bro. Corbaley it is necessary that the break you speak of should occur, or the "is not" period would fail.

Many writers err by failing to observe that the "ten horns," representing "ten kingdoms," always act as a confederacy and never singly. It is the ten kingdoms which do this and that. History furnishes no example of the existence of such a confederacy in the past accomplishing the work allotted by prophecy to the confederacy. Take for example, Rev. xvii. 16, says the confederacy of "ten" will accomplish the last judgments upon the "whore"—popery, "make her desolate and naked, and eat her flesh, and burn her with fire." It is also certain the judgments which have already fallen upon the papacy have not come from that source.

When the "little horn" tears up three of the "ten" by the roots there will be only seven in the confederacy, but there are "ten" in the confederacy when this judgment is executed. Most of their work is accomplished during the last seven years of the time, while the Bride is safe within the "chambers."

Pine Woods Bible Class.
No. 37.

Leader. "The blessed hope" believed in from the heart, will generate a pure life. Its joyous promises are soul-inspiring. It raises the mind to loftier aspirations than anything of an earthly nature can possibly do.

Please sing hymn 92.

"Shout ye loud winds, the universal triumph!
Sing to the world, thy Lord, thy Lord descendeth!
Lifts his high hand, and swears, 'I live forever,'
Live thy Redeemer!"

In Hebrews we frequently read of "types," "figures" "patterns" and "shadow of good things to come." In fact we find nearly all prophetic topics shadowed beforehand. I would like the different members of the class to call attention to shadows they have observed. Elias I will ask you to lead.

Elias. I find a notable one in Joseph. His brethren were envious of him, and said: "Shalt thou indeed reign over us." "And they hated him." Christ's brethren were envious of him, and said: "Shalt thou indeed reign over us." "And they hated him." "They conspired against him to slay him." Christ's brethren, (the Jews) would not have him to reign over them, and said, "this is the heir, come let us kill him, and let us seize on his inheritance."

Arlos. They cast Joseph into the pit and reported him dead. Christ's brethren slew him and cast him into the pit.

Albert. Joseph was delivered from the pit and journeyed into a "far country," and sat down with Pharaoh on his throne.

Christ was delivered from the pit and went into a far country and sat down with his Father on his throne.

Albert. While Joseph sat with Pharaoh on his throne, a seven year period of distress and grievous famine took place.

Before Christ leaves his Father's throne, during the seventieth week, a time of trouble lasting seven years, "Such as never was since there was a nation," will take place.

Lucy. During that seven years of trouble an affectionate meeting between Joseph and his brethren took place.

And some time during the last seven years of this age, an affectionate meeting will take place between Christ and his redeemed brethren.

Carrie. During that seven years of distress Joseph sent for all his brethren to come to him, and provided for them a safe retreat in a goodly land.

During "the great tribulation," Christ will send his angels and gather together his elect, and provide for them a safe retreat in his chambers, until the indignation be over-past.

Lud. "Pharaoh said unto Joseph, I am Pharaoh, and without thee shall no man lift up his hand or foot in all the land of Egypt."

The Father has made the Son Supreme, and shall reign from the rivers unto the ends of the earth.

Charlottie. They cried before Joseph: "Bow the knee: and he made him ruler over all the land of Egypt."

It is said of Jesus to him "every knee shall bow," he will also reign as "King of kings, and Lord of lords."

Agnes. We all perceive that Joseph shadows Christ from the pit to the throne.

Leader. I wish to ask if any one has found the ten kings symbolized by the ten horns on the fourth beast foreshadowed?

Elias. We have a remarkable one. It is related in Joshua how ten kings confederated together to hinder the "Captain of the Lord's host," from taking possession of the promised land, "but the Lord discomfited them before Israel, and slew them with a great slaughter at Gibeon and chased them along the way that goeth up to Beth-horon, and smote them to Azekah, and unto Makkedah; and it came to pass as they fled from before Israel, and were in the going down to Beth-horon, that the Lord cast down great stones from heaven upon them unto Azekah, and they died; they were more which died with hailstones than they whom the children of Israel slew with the sword."

This is typical of the mighty overthrow of antichrist, the ten kings, and the great hosts allied with them. When the Lord will open the arsenal of heaven upon them, and give their flesh as food to the ravenous birds and wild beasts.

Leader. Have we other types which exhibit the grand and sublime truths taught by the life of Joseph?

Arlos. Oh yes! We have "rain" given to us as an apt and beautiful type of the coming Lord, and the great events which ushers in that happy event. See Hosea vi. 3: "Then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord; his going forth is prepared as the morning; and he shall come unto us as the rain, as the latter and former rain unto the earth."

Leader. To whom will he come as the "rain?"

Albert. The text says: "Unto us." those who "follow on to know the Lord."

Leader. The text says "he shall come" "as the latter and former rain," in what sense can we understand the words "former" and "latter."

Lucy. His coming as the "former" "rain" has undoubted reference to his first advent. Those of us who have "followed on to know the Lord," can testify with hearts full of gratitude how he has come to us with showers of blessing! Praise the Lord for his refreshing showers!

Leader. Carrie tell us something about the "latter rain."

Carrie. I will refer you to the beautiful language of the "Rock of Israel," as found in Sam. xxiii. 34; "The Rock of Israel spake unto me. He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God. And he shall be as the light of the morning, when the sun riseth, even a morning without clouds; as the tender grass springing out of the earth by clear shining after rain."

The "latter rain" will be when the Just One comes to reign. Oh, what a beautiful clear morning, so enchanting, and lovely, the clouds will have all passed away, as is beautifully typified in nature, when the sun rises after a refreshing rain causing all nature to rejoice. "He shall come down like rain upon the mown grass: as showers that water the earth." Psa. lxxii. 6.

Leader. Charlottie, what portion of Scripture typifies God's people watching for the return of the "latter rain?"

Charlottie. We find that beautifully typified in Elijah's servant watching the clouds for rain. It was a time of great drouth: it had not rained for three and a-half years. Great suffering was in the land, there was a feverish anxiety for rain.

Elijah says to his servant: "There is a sound of abundance of rain," "Go up, look." Watch the servant as he rushes up the dividing ridge of Carmel, eagerly scanning the horizon for signs of coming rain. He comes back sad and dejected, is disappointed. How often have God's servants climbed the mount as it were, eagerly looking for the coming of Jesus as the "latter rain" and been bitterly disappointed!

The prophet sends him again and again, until he has climbed the mount seven times looking for rain. At last it comes in copious showers to refresh the earth.

It is a choice joke with scoffers who love to remind the watchers how they have climbed the mount so many times in vain looking so eagerly for the coming Jesus. Poor fools, who has not gone to the door, window, or depot repeatedly in vain looking for the coming of some loved one?

Leader. Does the lack of rain typify the last half of the seventieth week when antichrist shall reign?

Agnes. It does. The lack of rain we have been speaking of was during the reign of Ahab, (a fit type of antichrist) when Elijah prayed that it might not rain for three years and a-half, (a time, times and a dividing of time) and was a period of great distress.

In Rev. x., we are told that the two witnesses will prophesy for "a thousand two hundred and three score days," (three years and a half) during the reign of antichrist. "These have power to shut heaven that it rain not in the days of their prophecy."

"Let the heavens rejoice, and let the earth be glad; let the sea roar and the fulness thereof. Let the field be joyful, and all that is therein, then shall all the trees of the wood rejoice before the Lord, for he cometh, for he cometh to judge the earth."

We will conclude our services by singing hymn No. 16.

"Speak, seers prophetic—cheerfully fore-telling
The happy coming of a brighter day—
When shall the trumpet on life's ocean swelling,
With all its angry tumults pass away?"

WM. H. WILSON.

Dear Restitution:

Many of your readers have made suggestions: will you grant me the privilege of doing the same?

Is there one subscriber of THE RESTITUTION that destroys or uses the paper in the way other papers are utilized? or lays one number after another away until there are so many one scarcely knows what to do with them? If there is, let me implore you not to do it. "The Master wants workers" in his vineyard, and there are ways in which we all can work for him. "There is work for the wise and eloquent tongue.

There is work for the old. There is work for the young."

Some can and will win souls for Christ through preaching the word. We cannot all do this, but we can give our mites to aid others in the work; we can scatter our papers when we have read them, and also buy tracts and send them here and there, until, as one has said, the country is fairly flooded with them.

We will not have to answer for those torn and burned, or perhaps read only to be laid down with a smile and the remark that it is all bosh, as I once heard a young woman say of immersion. We will have done our part of the work; God will care for the rest. If it prove a "cup of cold water" to one thirsty soul, we will not lose our reward. "The least we do for Jesus will be precious in his sight."

"O that each in the day
Of his coming may say
I have fought my way through,
I have finished the work
Thou didst give me to do!
O that each from his Lord
May receive the glad word,
Well and faithfully done!
Enter into my joy
And sit down on my throne."

LILLIE HENRY.

Jacob's Dream.

And he dreamed and behold a ladder set upon the earth and the top of it reached unto heaven, and behold the angels of God ascending and descending upon it. I think this dream was a prophetic dream indicating the restoration of communication between the heavenly and the earthly.

The book of Esdras or Ezra Apochrypha takes this view—

"And Jesus said to Nathaniel hereafter ye shall see heaven opened and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of Man."

Precisely what Jacob saw in his dream. This leads me to suppose it to be a prophetic scene of the coming dispensation and that spiritualism is a pretended new dispensation in which this is accomplished. In fact a leading spiritualist said to me your Millerites was right on time, and we have got the New Dispensation you expected, and it came on your time.

The author has supplied us with a large quantity of these pamphlets, which we will be pleased to mail to all who desire them, at 3 cents each. The usual price of tracts this size is 10 cents. In this case the desire of the Author is to secure a wide circulation for these works and so do good, hence the price is put at the cost of the postage and handling them. No better opportunity can be given to secure good solid reading to hand to the uninstructed. Don't let these works remain long on our shelves, but send them out on their mission of love.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN.

VOL. XLII. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA. JANUARY 25, 1893. NO. 4.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

SOMETIME.

Sometime I'll know why the [illegible],
Why when of the [illegible] and chill;
Sometime I'll know why life was shadowed
And the voice of laughter grew sad and still.

Sometime I'll know why the hands I pressed
To help on my journey [illegible]
Sometime I'll know why the voice I loved
Can never again stir gladness' thrill.

Sometime I'll know why familiar faces
Passed from our presence out of sight,
Haunting still the familiar places
[illegible]

Sometime I'll know why the things were given,
And evil permitted to rule the world.
Sometime I'll know why o'er the heavens
The storms' dark banners have been unfurled.

Myriad things are dark to my reason,
O'er many things I have thought in vain;
But this I know: In the Lord's good season,
Every purpose will be made plain.

L. D. SANTEE.

Make Childhood Sweet.

Wait not till the little hands are at rest
Ere you fill them full of flowers;
Wait not for the crowning tuberose
To make sweet the last sad hours;
But while in the busy household band
Your darlings still need your guiding hand,
O, fill their lives with sweetness.

Wait not till the little hearts are still
For the loving look or praise,
But while you gently chide a fault,
The good deed kindly praise.
The word you would speak beside the bier
Falls sweeter far on the living ear;
Oh, fill young lives with sweetness!

Ah, what are kisses on cold, clay lips
To the rosy mouth we press,
When our wee one flies to her mother's arms
For love's tenderest caress!
Let never a worldly bauble keep
Your heart from the joy each day should reap,
Circling young lives with sweetness.

Give thanks each morn for the sturdy boys,
Give thanks for the fairy girls;
With a dower of wealth like this at home
Would you rifle the earth for pearls?
Wait not for death to gem love's crown,
But daily shower life's blessings down,
And fill young hearts with sweetness.

Remember the homes where the light has fled,
Where the rose has faded away;
And the love that glows in youthful hearts,
Oh, cherish it while you may!
And make your home a garden of flowers,
Where joy shall bloom through childhood's hours,
And fill young hearts with sweetness.

Going to Jerusalem.

JAFFA, Dec. 10, 1892.—If any one, either in Europe or America, cares to know what the folks who live in this ordinarily quiet part of the world think of nineteenth century civilization and progress he would find right here in this old part of Palestine a most emphatic and unanimous answer. For many months Jaffa has been in a state of suppressed excitement. From the window of my lodging—called by the wildest stretch of courtesy a hotel—I have seen the narrow streets of the old sea-girt town swarming with agitated crowds, broken up into compact little groups, all energetically discussing, in a multiplicity of tongues the wonderful events that are now taking place under their very eyes and, I might add, their noses also, for your Eastern cosmopolite has a rare faculty for ferreting out strange odors, in spite of the fact that he has an abundance to contend with at home. Even the usually imperturable olive-skinned caffgeh, who serves my breakfast, betrays his excitement as he brings a bit of red hot charcoal for my morning narghileh, by calling my attention to a chattering party of new arrivals in the street below, who have evidently halted to discuss the universal topic. It is the same everywhere; in the larger cafes as in those little wooden affairs where the muleteers and camel drivers resort, among dervishes, merchants, strangers, pilgrims, and fellaheen, the one absorbing subject of which they speak with awe and wonderment, incredulity and apprehension, is the railroad.

As for the citizens of Jaffa themselves many of them stoutly declare that a section of the millennium has come with the locomotive's whistle, and they are delighted beyond expression at the new prospect of a revival of the ancient prosperity of their old town, which for dogs, sand, and dirt stands without a rival this side of Egypt. It would be an insignificant place were it not for its commanding sea front, which gives it advantages over any port east of Alexandria. It crowns the crest of a hill formed by shelving limestone, rock, and sand, and its environs are attractive enough, with their hedges of prickly pears, their orange and olive groves and fruit gardens. But the streets are like so many narrow tunnels and steep stairways—an old, packing-box of a town, full of alleys, corners, and cul-de-sacs, the threading of which is done at the risk of breaking one's limbs.

But the real life of Jaffa is in the public square or common, just outside the town proper. There the donkey boys, the booths, the pilgrims, the fruit venders, and the long strings of loaded camels belonging to some caravans on the road to Egypt are to be found. In the immediate vicinity stands the pride of Jaffa, the new railroad depot, which was formally opened lately with imposing ceremonies by the Governor of Jerusalem, Ibrahim Hakki Pasha. A grand banquet followed the opening and the Sultan's special envoy, who had been sent on with an eye to business and to see that the terms of the concession were observed, was a leading guest. The engineers of the new road who made the surveys and directed the building operations are nearly all Europeans, of course. Not in generations has Jaffa seen a day such as that upon which the new railroad was officially opened for passenger traffic. It was curious to observe with what different eyes the various nationalities regarded the enterprise. The Turkish officials, somewhat accustomed to contact with Western ideas, looked at it as a source of prospective revenues—and perquisites, of course—for your Oriental functionary is continually watchful of opportunities to improve his finances at the expense of travelers and strangers. The townsmen, Syrians, Moslems and others, went in crowds to the depot and there inspected with wondering eyes the puffing engine and its tender, and remarked in superstitious amazement how the machine moved apparently of its own accord and drew the heavy cars after it. As it moved off at gradually increasing speed and with a shrill blast of the whistle, the women who stood at a respectful distance drew their veils tighter and shrieked in alarm, while the Arabs who stood by the engine scampered off in alarm. The Jews of Jaffa held the thing to be a creature of the devil and would not come near it.

From Jaffa to Jerusalem, by rail, the distance is a little over thirty-five miles, and the trip occupies nearly three hours and a half. Through a lovely open country the road enters the famous Plain of Sharon, and as the train rushes along the herds of sheep, goats, and camels are seen scattering on every side. In the distance the little Village of Beth-Dagon is barely visible; it is not of sufficient importance to warrant a depot. As we pass it one can't help thinking of the fish-god of the ancient Philistines which once had its headquarters there. Past gardens and groves we ride smoothly till Ramleh comes into view, nestling among its olive plantations and with its one prominent structure—"the Tower of the Forty Martyrs"—standing out boldly against the pale blue sky. Ramleh is an old Crusader stronghold with a crowded history of war, slaughter, and conquest. Its lofty tower tradition declares to have been the scene of a massacre, but whether of Christians or Moslems is uncertain, since both claim to have been the victims of a dark and bloody tragedy there. The tide of battle has rolled about its base from the days of Joshua to those of Richard the Lion-hearted and of Napoleon. Out on the plain from Ramleh the country is still infested with robbers, but the advent of the railroad will make the ancient and honorable occupation of highwayman, like that of dragoman also, much less remunerative than before. The next stop is at Lydda, or, as it is now commonly called, Ludd, where the Apostle Peter and his friends once lived. We reach it through sand dunes and find it a dirty little place surrounded with orange groves. From the car windows one can descry the ruins of the church erected ages since in honor of St. George, only the arch and the pillars now remaining of the once fine structure. A few passengers step off for a moment at the little wooden depot, but their artistic contemplation of the heights of Ajalon and the distant Judean mountains is cut short by the whistle and snort of the restless locomotive.

Puffing past Lydda and scattering in terror the group of villagers who came out to look at the train much after the fashion of countrymen gaping at a menagerie for the first time in their lives—we pull out once more into the plain. A few miles farther on a knot of Bedouin horsemen boldly stand waiting our advance. Their fine, warlike figures are silhouetted between the white sand and the blue overhead; but their statuesque pose is spoiled a moment later as we reach them, for the European engineer lets out from his engine an ear-splitting whistle which so demoralizes them that they flee in afright, their Arab cobs bolting in all directions, while the riders cling with difficulty to their saddles.

On, past solitary ruins, picturesque and otherwise; past villages little larger than mere hamlets and miserable in appearance, like nearly all such places in Palestine; past Samson's old fighting ground, and battlefields now nearly forgotten, till the hills of Judea loom up right ahead, then Artouf and we are at the gates of Jerusalem. Nowhere in the world can more of history be crowded into three hours of travel. The trains run from Jaffa to Jerusalem twice a day.

But this road is merely the precursor to the great railway system that is now preparing to girdle the Holy Land from north to south. A French company has secured a concession for a line from Beyrout to Damascus and has already begun operations for the construction of a narrow guage road. An English sydicate is now building a railway from Haifa to Damascus, and this will be the most important section of the system. The distance as surveyed is about seventy-five miles. Starting from Haifa, with a short eight-mile branch round the famous Bay of Acre to Akka, this road will run along the northern base of the long elevated range of Carmel; thence to the Plain of Esdraelon, and, proceeding northeasterly the valley east of Nazareth, and passing the Villages of Nein, Jezreel, and Beisan. It is quite probable that a branch will be run to Nazareth, which is a favorite resort of Pilgrims. Leaving Mount Tabor it will traverse the Plain of Butthauf and cross the River Jordan on a trestle near the point known as Majameh, the Brige of Meeting, where the Little Jordan joins the greater river. The line will here skirt the southren shore of the Sea of Galilee for a brief distance and then run almost without a curve along the western border of the famous wheat region, called in Bible times the Plains of Bashan and now known as the Hauran, to the southern gate of Damascus. It will be about 120 miles long and must prove of the greatest advantage to the commercial and agricultural interests of the country, opening these vast wheat fields to the markets of the seaboard and develop a section of Syria rich in mines and in grain, cotton, wool, silk, aloes, and tropical fruits, and which only awaits such an enterprise to become an important factor in the food supply of the East.

The cost of this Damascus road will be about $10,000,000. As a supplement to this new road and a prospective feeder both to it and to the Beyrout line a Belgian company is pushing work on a road from Damascus a distance of seventy-five miles into the heart of the grain district of the Hauran. These roads will ultimately be extended to the Valley of the Euphrates, and thus before the century dies civilization and commerce will have pushed their resistless way into that mystical land so long neglected as to be well-nigh forgotten, and which is believed to have been the cradle of the human race.

But there is still another part of the Holy Land, further south than any yet mentioned, where the pick-ax of the navvy and hammer of the iron-worker are waking the echoes of the historic hills and vales. The Jaffa road is to have a branch to Gaza, in ancient Philistia, and this will continue down to Egypt, with its probable terminus at Port Said. This latter road will tap the great grain producing region of Southern Palestine and Upper Egypt.

As a result of all this railroad building the whole of Syria is now experiencing such a "boom" as has never before been felt in the East. A new life is beginning for Palestine, and this fact is being recognized in a most practical way by many Europeans who are making investments in land there. Building schemes on a large scale are talked of and there is in prospect an early and literal fulfillment of the prophecies relative to the restoration of the waste places and the building up of Jerusalem, for with such a network of railways on every hand the ancient capital of the Jewish Kings is already giving signs of feeling the impetus of modern enterprise and progress.

The harvests of the Hauran—where the finest wheat and barley in the world are raised—now exceed 200,000 tons of cereals, of which five-eighths are exported, being carried on camel-back to Damascus, which adds 50 per cent to the cost. Caravans from Damascus, which, with its population of 300,000, is the commercial center of Syria, travel through Mesopotamia, by the Tigris and Euphrates, to Mosul, Bagdad, and Hilleh and to the most distant parts of Arabia, Africa, and Egypt.

It is impossible to foreshadow, even in the faintest degree, the great changes that must follow the new regime in these ancient countries. Damascus, "the Pearl of the East," hitherto difficult of access to travelers, will become an Asiatic counterpart of Paris or London. Old as history itself, its re-birth will diffuse new life and energy into the surrounding peoples with whom its merchants have relations. The West, which drew its life and intellect from the East, is now repaying the debt of the ages by a vivifying transfusion that sets the future of these Oriental lands aglow with hope. One recalls the poetical idea of Matthew Arnold, who pictures the East as a sage holding himself superior to the young and bustling West and who, tired of the rush and roar of the tempest that comes to disturb his peace from that quarter, shuts his ears and with bowed head returns to his contemplative mood. But, alas! the sage, now that he has listened to the seductive rattle of the rail-train of civilization and commerce, can never more hope to dwell in his ancient peace. He, too, has caught the infection and the spirit of the new East dominates the old.

The foregoing from the Chicago Tribune will be of intense interest to every lover of the "Blessed Hope." Yes, it surely must cause the heart to sing for joy! The Lord doth build Jerusalem! Praise ye the Lord! Life and energy are manifest on every hand. The people of Jaffa stoutly affirm that "a section of the millennium has come."

It means something when secular papers like the Chicago Tribune, chronicles the glad news that "the whole of Syria is now experiencing such a boom as never before felt in the East. A new life is beginning for Palestine." It is something more than remarkable when the secular newspapers of our day directs our attention to the fact that God is now fulfilling his prophetic Word. The Tribune says: "Building schemes on a large scale are talked of, and there is in prospect an early and literal fulfillment of prophecies relative to the restoration of the waste places and the building up of Jerusalem."

W. H. WILSON.

[We had clipped this article, and besides the one sent by Bro. Wilson, two others have been received. We thank you, friends. Glad to have you send all such items of interest.—ED.]

Be Perfect—Be of Good Comfort.

Do we not feel at once that if ever we are going to be that which in our best moments we want to be, it must begin in self lost, self forgotten; self not so much denied as self ignored, unheeded. And this is exactly what is meant by the word which the Lord Jesus used when he bade the disciple deny himself. Be perfect. My faith in perfection is very weak when I look at others, it is extinguished altogether when I look at myself; but when I look at Jesus I can believe in nothing else. He is perfect in all his works, and no other aim than this can ever satisfy him. The work which he had undertaken to do for us would not bear his stamp if it stopped anywhere short of perfection; and for such a vast expenditure and cost I dare not think of anything less than this. Be perfect. Here it is that my faith in holiness and my hope for it begin to live, as I see him, as I linger in his presence and sit at his feet. When he cometh, what limit shall I set to his grace? What failing shall he tolerate? What sin shall baffle his skill? So, as I stand looking up that slippery height, wondering how its summit is to be reached, he cometh with his gracious words; "My child, fear not! That which thou seekest is not in thy climbing up; it is in my coming down. Be perfect."

Then doth my timid heart make answer: "Yes, my Lord; since Thou comest to do it all, what else can I hope for?"

"Be of good comfort."

"Yes, my Lord; what else can I be, since Thou art mine!"

The only perfection of which I can think is spelt with five letters—J, E, S, U, S. This, and this only, is holiness: Jesus received, Jesus communed with, Jesus welcomed, Jesus served, Jesus pleased in all the temper and spirit of the life. It is not in my understanding theories or theologies, not in my perfection of methods, not in my experience of raptures or agonies, but in Jesus Christ received into the heart that he may do his own work in his own way. Look up to him now. Claim him and welcome him as your own, able and eager to do as much for you as he ever did for any. Constrain him to abide within the heart in which he seeks to make his home.

Be of good comfort. It is good to get in at the root meaning of our English word comfort; very different from the meaning which has come to be associated with it. The word has come to be suggestive of a cosy seat beside the fire on some winter's night, when bleak winds howl and bitter rains beat on the window-pane; and within the light and warmth one sits, with the charm of some entertaining book completing the enjoyment. But the word itself finds its true meaning illustrated rather outside in the darkness and storm, where is some poor woman with heavy basket on her arm, and a long and dreary way before her. She is not quite sure as to the road which leads to her home amongst the hills, and many fears add to the loneliness and weariness. Now comes one who speaks with such a kindliness that she cannot but trust him. "You seem very tired," he saith; "may I help you? Do let me carry your burden for a little while. I am going past your house, and I shall be happy to show you the way." And as he talks with her the heart grows light, and the way is easy, and the loneliness and fear are all gone. That is comfort. Co, that is together with, or company; and fort, that is strength. To strengthen by company. That is it precisely. The moment we set out to live a better life, the gracious Master is ever going that way; and with a gentle love, winning at once our trust, he cometh to carry our burden for us, and to lead us on our way, bringing us thither where he would have us to be, and where we would dwell. Be perfect, be of good comfort.

Far up against the deep blue sky, lightly passing on the summer breeze, was a pure, white, fleecy, cloud; a thing so utterly un-soiled it seemed to belong to heaven much more than to earth. The great sea lay and looked at it, and whispered to itself: "They say that thing of beauty was once down here where I am," and the sea sighed within itself, "How fair a thing it is, how peaceful, right up there amongst the stars, in the very bosom of God!" And then the sea grew vexed. "It is nonsense. How could I ever get up there, heavy and clumsy as I am? And if I got there how could I stay there? Besides" and the sea was silent. It thought of the fierce passions that slept within it, the cruel storms; and it shuddered as it thought of the dreadful things that dwell in its depths, of the wrecked ships and the dead men. Then it sighed again: "Not for me; indeed, I could never be like that!"

And yet the sea could not rest. Still it looked and wondered and longed. Then it roused itself and said; "I will try." And it gathered its strength, and it borrowed the force of the wind. I saw it as it rose up in the strength of its purpose, arched in its pride, on in its desperate resoluteness, till it hurled itself against the rocks, and leapt high up a quivering column of spray, and it seemed to snatch at the height. Then it fell baffled, beaten, and as a hundred rivulets of foam it hastened to hide itself in the depths, as it hissed: "I know it was not for me."

Reader, has my parable any meaning for you? Is it not the story of longings and struggles and failure? Come then, and it shall teach us the secret of success.

At last the great sea lay quite still in the silvery light of the morning, and it looked up at the sun. "Canst thou not help me?" it cried. "The moon draws me hither and thither across the earth, but it cannot uplift and transform me. Canst thou?"

"Yes," said the sun, "indeed I can, if thou wilt let me." And the sun sent down a noiseless ray that shown upon it, and warmed it, and loosened it, and uplifted it. And, lo! the sea knew not how, nor cared to know, but it cried: "I am there?" And there it was, a pure white fleecy cloud against the heaven's blue.

He that hath ears to hear, let him hear. With eye and heart and hope and longing fixed upon Jesus Christ our Lord, he himself bendeth over us, he shineth upon us, he looseth, he uplifteth. How, it is not for us to know or care, but this we do know—We are transformed by beholding.—Mark Guy Pearse.

Fuel on Large Ocean Steamers.

Ocean steamships consume much more fuel than the average person is aware of. Take for an instance the vessels of the Orient line, which make regular trips between Australia and Great Britain. The fastest steamer of that line is the Austral, which makes the voyage from London to Sydney in thirty-five days. During the "trip out" she never uses less than 3,050 tons of coal, and on the return voyage often as much as 4,000 tons. She has three coaling stations, and bunkers that will hold 2,750 tons without overcrowding. English-American "liners" like the Oregon consume 330 tons of coal per day for everyday between Liverpool and New York. The Sterling Castle went to China for a load of tea. It brought back a cargo of 2,200 tons of that staple Chinese commodity, but consumed 5,000 tons of coal in making the round trip from Liverpool. Immense stocks of coal are constantly kept on hand at St. Vincent, Maderia, Port Said, Singapore, and other Oriental coaling stations, there being often as much as 200,000 tons in store at the last named place.—St. Louis Republic.

The First Complete Bible.

The first complete Bible printed in England was issued in 1535 without any publisher's name. It was the work of the celebrated Miles Coverdale, who incorporated, with revisions, Tyndale's books of the New Testament, as well as his Pentateuch and Book of Jonah. It was thus only partially original as far as Coverdale was concerned, the remaining portion being a translation of a translation. No perfect copy of this edition is known to be in existence. A copy sold a few years ago in London for a sum equal to $600 had the title, nineteen leaves, and the map missing. The Coverdale Bible is the one mentioned in these notes heretofore as the "Bug Bible" and the "Treacle-Bible," on account of two curious passages found therein. The passage in Jeremiah which we now read as "Is there no balm in Gilead?" is made by Coverdale to read "Is there no more treacle at Gahalad?" The psalm which says "Thou shalt not be afraid of the terror by night" read', "Thou shalt not need to be afraid for any bugs by night." The ninth psalm, in that portion which should say "Put them in fear, O Lord," Coverdale makes to say "Set a schoolmaster over them."—St. Louis Republic.

Rutherford B. Hayes, ex-President of the United States, died at Fremont, O. Jan. 18, 1893.

Renewals are coming in very well. Still there are more from whom we wish to hear soon. Brethren and Sisters, if you have a little extra to spare when sending, do not forget the poor. Supplying them with papers is quite an item of expense. So far we have been well supplied for this work, and return our thanks to those who have aided. Several of our foreign friends are not paid for this year. Who wants to send the paper to one of these workers in far off lands?

"Behold I stand at the door and knock." Great God! what amazing love and condescension! Thy glorious Son a humble suppliant!

Life and glory and honor is offered without money and without price—without any equivalent whatever; but not without faith; not without repentance; not without baptism; not without a godly life.

We may form a faint conception of the work to be done by the Lord when he comes in majesty and power, by the fact that six thousand years have been spent in preparation for it. His work is still before him when he comes. Is. xi. 10.

"Hold fast till I come," says Jesus. This could only be addressed to those who had taken hold. These words supplement those of the Spirit in Heb. ii. 1: where we are admonished to give earnest heed, lest we let slip what we have heard. The danger is not that it will all leave us at once, but that it will leak out as the world seeps in.

To us Isaiah xxviii. 16, 17, is one of the precious morsels: "Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation; he that believeth shall not make haste; probably meaning that no panic shall sieze them, nothing shall confound them. This is said of Him who believes in the tried stone, the precious corner stone of the redemptive superstructure, Jesus, no other. No others, we say; for the next verse, continues: "Judgment also will I lay to the line, and righteousness to the plummet." God draws the line between believers and unbelievers, and between righteousness and unrighteousness. Justification by faith is clearly taught; and the righteousness of God by faith in the Anointed plainly indicated. Without faith it is impossible to please God; and the object of faith must be He in whom all the promises center, and around whom all Jehovah's purposes revolve; for "the hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies, and the waters shall overflow the hiding place" [of unbelief].

Brethren and Sisters, the stone has been tried, but it has not yet been laid in Zion, but it will be; and when so laid, it is a foundation that shall not be removed. The indications are that the time is drawing near. Let us make it the chief business of life to be ready when he comes.

Baptism is called a very trivial thing; and yet it is an act of obedience the flesh objects to more than to any other. Talmage says, "Even Richard Baxter lost his balance on the subject." He said, "the Baptists were as bad as murderers, because they put people under the water, and they caught their death of cold;" adding that "the ordinary practice of baptizing over head in winter and in cold water as necessary, is a plain breach of the 6th commandment, and therefore is not an ordinance of God, but a heinous sin; and, as Craddock shows in his book of Gospel Liberty, the magistrate ought to restrain it and save the lives of his subjects. In a word, it is good for nothing but to despatch men out of the world that are burdensome, and to ranken church yards. I consider if murder be a sin, then dipping ordinary over head in England is a sin; and if those who make it men's religion to murder themselves and urge it upon their conscience as their duty, are not to be suffered in a community any more than highway murderers—then judge now these anabaptists that teach the necessity of such dipping are to be suffered!"

Bro. Baxter! Evidently he did not know that man was sentenced to death by law, and can only be pardoned by law. Evidently he did not know that immersion was one clause of the law of pardon.

The New Birth a Present Blessing!

A short time ago an article, with the above caption, found its way into The Restitution. To endorse the positions assumed there would be to progress backward. The idea that "actual spiritual birth" takes place at the resurrection is called "a great error." It is claimed that spirit birth takes place at conversion; although it is afterward stated that Paul's body will not become the subject of regeneration till the second coming of Christ; so Paul himself is born of spirit and is spirit at conversion, but his body is not born of spirit till the resurrection. This would have passed current with us when we professed a paganized Christianity, but not since we have been content to be what God says we are—dust.

He well enough shows that conversion is the renewal of the mind, not the body, but we think it would puzzle him to show how one's thoughts can become immortal, or how a renewed mind can be the depository of divine nature, when we have the Word of the Spirit for it that man's thoughts perish the day his breath goes forth. We suspect that the Italian theory from over the water is concealed in this article; which can only make a show of proof by confounding a renewed mind, or character, or disposition, with divine nature. Divine nature of existence is immortality; divine character or disposition is something we can cultivate, and must cultivate, but the life of God is hid with Christ in God, and is not obtainable till he who is our life shall appear, see Col. iii. 3, 4, our author to the contrary notwithstanding.

Our Lord borrows, in his wonderfully apt way, a figure from nature, in his conversation with Nicodemus in the 3rd chapter of John, saying, "Except a man be born again, (another time) he cannot enter the kingdom of God." There are just two births in the series. To be born is to be brought forth. Each of these births ushers into life in the sense of existence, not merely a state of mind. May we know why a man must be born again before he can enter the kingdom? Yes, 1 Cor. xv. 50 says: "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God, neither doth corruption inherit incorruption." Preceding this is the explanation that the first Adam was made a living soul, while the last Adam was made a quickening spirit; and in the 49th verse the apostle says: "As we have borne the image of the earthy, we SHALL also bear the image of the heavenly." He and his brethren had certainly been converted, but the heavenly image was something future. When would the change be made? Verses 51-52 explain: "We (converted ones) shall all be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump, for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." If this was the finishing touch of a process commenced at conversion, evidently Paul was ignorant of it. Flesh and blood is not gotten rid of at conversion. The case of Jesus illustrates when the Adamic nature is exchanged for the divine nature of existence. This same Paul in the 6th of Romans tells us that "he died unto sin once, but in that he liveth, he liveth by God;" and, "being raised from the dead, dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him. He was no longer lower than the angels; he lived by God; and be it observed that it is a resurrection like his that is assured us, providing we be planted in the likeness of his death. Our author needs to learn what it is to be DEAD with Christ, Col. iii. 3, now, and then he will say no more about divine nature being given at conversion.

Having seen that obedient believers are to have a resurrection like Christ's, it is interesting to know that Christ's resurrection is called a birth. This was left out of our author's argument; but it is true, nevertheless, for in Rom. viii. 20, he is said to be the first born among many brethren. This could not refer to his natural birth, because many of his brethren were in that way born before him; it could not refer to a new birth at his conversion, for he never was converted—he needed no conversion, and therefore we should be prepared to believe just what is said of him in Col. i. 18, that he is the "first born from the dead;" implying a like birth for others; and we ascertain these others are those who are his at his coming, by 1 Cor. xv. 23. Jesus shows two births essential before one can enter the Kingdom of God. One is natural, and the other spiritual. Our author has one birth too many, unless he ignores the birth from the dead. But Acts xxvi., in connection with Col. i. 18, shows that being raised from the dead is what is meant by being born from the dead; and this is further confirmed by Heb. xiii. 20, where we are told that the God of peace brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus. It will be remembered that he said, "I am the way," and he has shown us the way we shall be born again by example.

In the first chapter of Eph., and the 5th verse we are told that Paul and the Ephesians had been "predestined unto the adoption of children." For this adoption Christians have to wait, but they receive the Spirit of Adoption, which entitles them to call God their Father, see Rom. viii. 15, but the adoption itself is the redemption of the body, see v. 23. Just as the same Paul describes in 1 Cor. xv. "For, says he, we are saved by hope, but hope that is seen is not hope; for what a man hath (or possesses) why doth he yet hope for it?" Our author is not like Paul who was in hope of eternal life. He imagines he has received the first installment of it.

Another unwarrantable assertion is, that, "This being begotten is a birth from heaven, and is the commencement of the new life." Here we have something new. Begettal and Birth one thing and at one time! What a monstrosity! The exigencies of his theory cause him to dispense with the gestatory period altogether. Not so Paul, who said, "For in Christ Jesus, I have begotten you through the gospel." 1 Cor. iv. 15. "I beseech thee for my son Onesimus, whom I have begotten in my bonds." Philemon x. "Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth," James i. 18. If being born and begotten are only one event, the terms may be used interchangeably, and an attempt to so use them in the passages may teach a salutary lesson. Besides, is not the gestatory period clearly recognized when the sincere milk of the word is first prescribed for growth and development, with strong meat to follow, as it could be assimilated;—and last of all the birth?

But it is claimed in opposition to this that 1 John v. 12 says: "He that hath the Son hath life." We admit that, for his name is in the Lamb's Book of Life. It is assigned him; it is his, but according to what we have seen in Col. iii. 3, he does not possess it, because it is hid with Christ, and not bestowed till he appears.

Again it is asked, if it does not somewhere say we are now the children of God? Yes, it does; but, in harmony with all our findings thus far, the Scripture which teaches that, also explains that we are children of God by faith in the Anointed Jesus. We submit that if we had come to the birth we would possess divine nature of existence, and could die no more. The redemption of the body being an accomplished fact, faith would no longer be a factor. It is a factor now. We are sons of God by faith, in the same sense that we are saved by hope. We walk by faith, not by sight; the just live by faith, not by divine nature; we are justified by faith; we stand by faith; we wait for the hope of righteousness by faith, we are kept by the gospel, through faith, unto salvation,—faith is the confidence of things not seen; the patriarchs died in faith, not in realization, see Heb. xi. 30. It distinctly says they received not the promise. What great promise of God is it that includes all others? By the Word of the Spirit in Rom. vi. 23, we find it is Eternal Life—Just what Peter calls the divine nature, to which we can attain by means of "exceeding great and precious promises," see his second epistle first chapter and fourth verse; and which Paul, (not privileged as our author claims to be,) was merely in hope of, see Titus i. 2, as we may also learn from Heb. iii. 14, where we are taught that we are NOT MADE partakers of Christ who is our life, at conversion, but after we have held the beginning of our confidence—that we shall ultimately partake of him steadfast unto the end of this probationary state.

Only those blinded by tradition could fail to see that ONE MAN COULD NOT in the nature of things, possess two natures, the human and the divine—be at once liable to die and not liable to die. Only tradition could prevent one from seeing that if man once partook of divine nature he could never be deprived of it, so that Paul was altogether in the dark with his groundless fears of being a cast away, if our author be correct. But if man be a unit, possessed of intellectual and moral faculties, and animal propensities, we can be in full sympathy with him when he speaks of the war in his members, and of evil being present with him when he wished to do good, after his conversion. Rom. vii. 19-23. The love of God as displayed in the gospel of the Anointed, when believed, was the motive that induced him to repent and become obedient. His moral or religious faculties under the guidance of the truth as it is in Jesus gained ascendency over the mind of the flesh, and the war in his members was on one part to maintain the ascendency gained, and on the other to regain the ascendency lost.

Since writing the above we have been reading a work by our author, entitled "Truth set free, or a concise view of the Scripture doctrines of Immortality and future Punishment," and another on "Pulpit Earnestness," etc. In the first named work he makes a powerful plea for life only in Christ, and plainly says on page 20, "If you do not seek immortality, and obtain it as God's special gift through his Son, you will never possess it." But to our astonishment and sorrow we find on another page, this language: "Our views of religious truth, though they may differ from those of others should not separate us as Christians." And "There are none of us, perhaps but may be, in error on some point, and therefore, we should bear with brethren who may differ from us." We despair of doing justice to this, but, our position is this: The gospel is God's converting and saving power; it is good news of life from the dead through Jesus, to inherit God's kingdom on earth. The conditions imposed are (1) faith in the things promised—not vague faith that Jesus will gather all who wish it, to heaven. There is no gospel in that, because not promised. (2) Repentance toward God; by which we understand reformation of life, or change of mind and conduct toward God—conversion! (3) Baptism for the remission of past sin. With all the powers of the mind we believe this to be the law of pardon, and govern ourselves accordingly. (4) A godly life till Jesus come. We want to save men; and these are the means we employ.

The other work referred to appears to recognize preachers of all denominations as Christian Ministers, although utter strangers to the gospel of the kingdom Jesus preached, and which he said should be preached in all the world for a witness. On the cover of this Book was the advertisements of two pamphlets of his, one of which is entitled "The Kernel of Truth stripped of the Husk; or the soul and the spirit of man and their conscious existence in the intermediate state;" and the other, "The Survival of the Soul in Death." This more than confirms the suspicions expressed by us, and accounts for the errors of the article in question. We are sorry indeed to learn that one who has written so much of God's grand purpose in the future cannot see that the exceeding great and precious promises concerning that future are the veritable gospel; and clings to an idea that would prevent Jesus from raising him, or bringing him forth from the grave at his call, (John v. 28, 29) to life. Trusting that he may yet see the error of his way, we for the present bid him farewell.

God Pity the Churches.

How do you like living in was asked of a young lady recently who was home on a vacation. O. I like it very much indeed, was the reply. It is just a lovely place to live. There is so much going on all the time, and all one has to do to belong to the churches is to attend morning and evening services, and go to all the Methodist socials, and you can do what you like the rest of the time; dance, play cards, attend the theater or anything you please, it is all right. Who says it is all right; or who says they are Christians. Not the Lord, for he says, Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing and I will receive you. And will be a father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty. We could not wish higher authority, or higher honors, sons and daughters of the Most High, if we separate ourselves from the world. How is it possible then to be a Christian and drink in all the pleasures of the world. It is a very easy thing to belong to a church, and quite another thing to be a Christian. God pity the churches whose pastors are nothing but paid worldlings, and bolstering their churches up with such theology. Where are you to-night, professed Christian, are you too drinking deep of the pleasures that satisfy only for a moment. Stop, O stop, and drink no longer at sin's fountain, but take one long draught of the water of life and quench forever your desires for such pleasures. Are you at the dance, or card-table, or gazing with rapt attention upon some stirring scene at the theatre, or wasting these beautiful evenings with loud boisterous companions. Hark! is there no voice within that is speaking to you, pleading with you that you have lost the way, for O God, help us, the way to the King's palace is so very narrow. Did you not see on the sign-board when first you started on the road, these words, written in gilt and signed, Jesus of Nazareth. Enter ye in at the straight gate: for wide is the gate and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat. Because straight is the gate and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it. But O, I fear, I am sure you have lost the road, and where could you have made the awful mistake. Yes! I remember now, that first broad path I came to soon after starting on the King's highway. My companions laughed at me for trying to keep so very narrow and difficult a path, for there were ever and anon rocks, and thickets, thorns and deep places to step over. Their road was so much easier they said, for it was wide enough to allow them to step aside when encountering any of these difficulties. So I turned and walked with them. Every thing was so beautiful for awhile, and our time was all spent in telling pleasing stories and occasionally some one more rough than the rest would add words that at first I shrank from listening too, but very soon enjoyed them and helped to add my own wit and mirthfulness to the scene, and so our day was spent, I thinking before the night should come to go back, for I began to tire of it, and wonder if my Christ would not be grieved with me. But suddenly the sun was clouded, darkness gathered in and I could not find my way back and none would help me. I sat down tired and depressed. Where had my joy of yesterday flown to. I tried to find in prayer some comfort, but alas, my Father's smile was gone, and I could only hear these words "be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God." Then I cried out, God be merciful to me a sinner, and then a helping hand was held out to me. Eagerly I grasped it, and soon was in the narrow path again, and over what seemed to be a difficult thicket to pass, were these blessed words, "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee, because he trusteth in thee." I kneeled down and passionately implored my Savior to forgive, and keep me so close to him, I could not stray again. Is it hard, dear lambs of the flock, to see these pleasures all pass by and you not allowed to touch them. Yes, but that is your cross, your sacrifice. Cannot you carry it, when one so long ago, bore his alone for you, for me, thank God, and are we not willing to forego the pleasures of sin for a season, for the glory and joy just ahead of the faithful ones? Oh! may we all search for a deeper, clearer walk with he who alone can purify our lives and fit us for his kingdom. Yours striving for the mastery over self.

That Macedonian Cry.

Never perhaps in the history of the race has there been such an upheaval in the religious world. We seem to have entered a period of unusual disturbance in religious thought. Amid the uncertainties produced by the shifting sands of human tradition, here and there hearts hungering and thirsting after something that is more satisfactory than the vague ideas around them, call piteously for the truth. These calls like the cry from Macedonia are not limited by State lines. A short time ago a call from Iowa rang out in earnest pleading tones for some one to come that way and hold forth the word of life, and assist four willing souls to put on Christ through the holy adopting ordinance. Then from our own State comes the cry from an earnest brother saying, "Can you come and give us a few discourses on the truth? I am too poor to help much, but will pay your carfare," to this call the writer has responded and am now giving lessons to eager listeners. God help us to set saving truth before them. Then comes a touching appeal from the wilds of Arkansas saying "Can you come here and preach awhile? I believe you could accomplish a good work here, and I am anxious to be baptized into the faith of the gospel. Can you not come or send some one who can defend the truth here?" Scarcely had this plaintive appeal cease to vibrate, when another call is heard from the land where blooms the magnolia and the orange, and this call is accompanied by a promise to pay expenses but nothing for time necessarily consumed. This will require about thirty days. These repeated appeals have started a train of anxious thought. Is there no way by which these requests can be complied with? If honest willing souls who have learned the truth, desire baptism into the all-saving name of the Christ and have no one of the faith to assist them, and also to instruct others in saving truth, shall we not at least make an effort to reach at least the most urgent cases? Only the lack of the necessary means prevents the writer from responding to some of these calls. But through ill health a bare subsistence only has been possible and now with returning health comes the imperative necessity of providing for the wants of life. But in the silent watches of the night while the brain has been busily planning some way by which help can reach the perishing ones, the thought suggested itself thus: why not establish a fund to be called a "Contingent Fund" to be used only in response to such calls. We have a fund for evangelizing purposes in the State, then there is a special fund being set apart to induce young men to engage in the cause of proclaiming the truth. These funds ought not to be diverted from the purpose for which they are created. Hence the necessity of establishing a fund that shall be available only for the purpose of answering calls when no funds can be raised by the persons who make the calls. Shall we not then by voluntary free-will offering establish a fund that can be drawn upon at short notice and thus enable those who can respond to such calls to do so. To this fund the writer subscribes $5.00.

Editor Restitution:

I will try and scribble a few lines to express my thanks for The Restitution free thus far. May the Lord bless the doners with the best of heavenly gifts—here and hereafter.

Myself and companion are still alive, but very feeble. This is the twenty-fifth winter I have been laid by (or aside) unable to do any manual labor, or other work, and but little in summer, so at the present time am unable to renew my subscription for The Restitution. I still enjoy reading its contents, as I have for the last 21 yrs. Have suffered much bodily pain during the past fifty years, but I can truly say with One of Old, "It is good for me that I have been afflicted." Psa. cxix. 71, also cxviii. 17-18. "The Lord hath chastened me sore; but he has not given me over to death."

I am now reading the blessed Book of Life the 52nd time by course in the past 21 years. I have a system in reading that Book, dividing it into three parts. The historical part for the first lesson in the morning, the prophets for the second lesson, and in the evening the New Testament, (or Covenant.) Thus connecting, and keeping in mind the Old and the New. I do this not to boast how many times I have read the Book, but for the food I daily need to sustain the inner or new man, while the old man is wasting or perishing in pain and weakness.

My disease is of the spine, with a complication of other troubles.

Pray for me, that my faith fail not, and may the Lord help me so to live that I may enter that "better country." Yours in the one hope.

Dear Restitution:

I have thought frequently the past year that I would write you to stop my paper, but have had so much sickness and other cares that I never took time, and now I am laid up with the rheumatism and am not able to renew. I will pay my indebtedness as soon as I can. I know I shall miss the welcome visits of the paper, but it cannot be helped. Last year for fourteen weeks in succession there was some of our family sick, and one member died.

Mrs. B——.

[Will some one who is able, and willing to sacrifice a little, come forward with the means to send this Sister the paper? The name can be given to any one who wishes it, but we do not publish for obvious reasons. Ed.]

Dear Restitution:

I am much pleased with your works of faith and labors of love. It is cheering to the wayworn pilgrim along the path of life. May you become more useful as time flies swiftly by. Your work will soon end and then you will enter your reward. May the brothers and sisters practice more self denial and put away all ungodly and hurtful lusts, and be as servants waiting for their Lord, whom the heavens must soon reveal. Then, yes, then, how glad we will be that we have done right. Dear brothers and sisters, pray for me. Your brother in Christ.

S. V. Grim.

Dear Restitution:

A series of meetings under the supervision of Bro. Conner, just closed at this place with two additions. The preaching was excellent and the interest good. The church is greatly revived and strengthened in the hope that causes God's people to walk by faith.

We have a fair Sunday-school in which we use the Bible and our own literature. Hence we make no calculation that our youth shall be taught the common errors of the day.

For nearly one year there has been no meeting here except the monthly preaching of Bro. Conner. But we feel to renew our energy and double our diligence, looking unto the coming of the Lord Jesus. We calculate to have service every Lord's day. Brethren pray for us. Yours in the faith of the one hope.

THE SPECIAL EVANGELIST FUND.

This fund is raised and controlled by the Sisters, for the purpose of placing some young man in the field as a proclaimer of truth. Hereafter in making donations to this fund please say whether or not you intend to give a stated amount regularly each quarter. This work is continuous, and quarterly contributions are asked for, though single time gifts are very welcome. Send all monies for this fund to Mrs. Eva L. Underwood, Plymouth, Ind.

A Prayer.

Lead me gently in thy footsteps
When I fain would go astray.
Teach me to fulfill my mission
Patiently—day after day.

Singing ever thy sweet praises,
Longing not for earthly power
That will fade, for time is fleeting,
Like the light at sunset hour.

Guide me when the way is thorny,
And my bleeding feet would slip,
Reach to me thy cleansing waters,
That my parched lips may slip

Of that never failing fountain—
Keep me neath thy chastening rod
Daily may I pray for patience
Unto Thee, our Father, God.

The Soul of Man.

As the saving of immortal souls is receiving so much attention, and praying, and we may safely say many hours of hard preaching, I would call the attention of the readers of The Restitution, first, on what the Bible says concerning the soul, and secondly the views of philosophers and the origin of the term immortal soul.

1. The word (Heb. nephesh) occurs 752 times in the Old Testament and is translated soul 471 times. The remainder is rendered life, living, man, person, mind, breath, heart, and is applied to beasts about 28 times, also to creeping things. It is translated in 44 different ways, and if the word meant an immortal soul this could hardly be done.

The first place where the word is found in the Bible is in Gen. i. 20, and it is there applied to beasts. "And God said, let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creatures that hath life" Heb. nephesh chaiyah. (Soul living,) verse 21 "And God created great whales and every living thing." Heb. nephesh chaiyah (soul living), verse 24 "And God said, let the earth bring forth the living creature. Heb. nephesh chaiyah (soul living) after his kind, cattle and creeping things and beasts of the earth after his kind." Verse 30 "And to every beast of the earth, and to every fowl of the air, and to every thing that creepeth upon the earth wherein there is life." Heb. nephesh chaiyah (soul living) "I have given every green herb for meat." To all of these countless creatures the word living soul is applied in the original.

In Gen. ii. 7, we read, "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life" and man became what? an immortal soul, no he became by this action of the creator "a living soul" Heb. nephesh chaiyah. The word nephesh (soul) means the life of the whole animal creation, and is not an immortal or spiritual entity separate from animal life. It denotes the vital principle of animal bodies, no more, nor less.

The word psuchee the Greek equivalent of nephesh occurs about 105 times in the New Testament and is rendered the same way as is nephesh in the Old Testament. Jesus nor His apostles said nothing of the inherent immortality of the human soul, or that it survives the body in a conscious condition after physical death.

We will adduce a few opinions of the early church fathers and of modern commentators concerning the nature of the soul.

Tatian who wrote about 170 A. D. says, "The soul is not in itself immortal."

Tertullian who wrote about 200 A. D. says, "The soul of man like the root of a tree is drawn out into a physical progeny from Adam the parent stock."

Dr. Clark says "nephesh chaiyah a general term to express all creatures endued with animal life in any of its infinitely varied gradations."

McCulloch says, "There is no word in the Hebrew language that signifies in the technical sense in which we use it, as implying something distinct from the body."

2. The philosophical view of the soul Chamber's Encyclopaedia says, "The Egyptian doctrine of the soul is one of the most important, as it is the most ancient, for this nation appears to have been the first to declare that the soul was immortal. The genesis of the soul itself, however is not defined by the monuments" but "the traditions handed down by the classical writers, is that the soul once separated from the cosmic, or mundane soul, was supposed to undergo numerous transmigrations, passing from one animated body to another till its cycle of existence was fulfilled. It was represented in the hieroglyphics by several signs, as a basket of fire, a heron, a hawk and a ram with a human face. Its nature was divine, but after death, it passed to the great judgment in the hall of the Two Truths, where it was tried before Osiris an Egyptian deity and before the forty-two assessors or demons of the dead, whose verdict determined its future destiny."

The transmigration of souls from one place, state, or condition after death was taught by Indian and other Philosophers and was at first very crude.

The Budhists believe that the soul has existed from the beginning and that sin is the cause of transmigration.

The Brahmins believe that the soul is a portion of the universal spirit.

The Old Mexicans taught that the god Ometeuctli and Omecihuatl create in heaven the soul of a child destined to be born, and it will be judged by the acts it does on earth.

The transmigration of souls also found its adherents among the Jews.

The Gilgul neshamoth, was taught in the mystical systems of the Kabbala.

"All souls" the Sohar (book of light) the spiritual code of this system says "are subject to the trials of transmigration" and "they do not know how many transformations and mysterious trials they must undergo."

The Druids believed in the immortality of the soul and looked upon transmigration as a means to purify and make them fit for eternal life.

The Metempsychosis of the Greeks did not become the belief of the people in general, but was confined to the teaching of the mysteries and tenets of philosophers and was directly or indirectly received from Egypt or India. Thales was probably the first Greek philosopher who propounded it, but its importance in Grecian philosophy was first obtained through Pythagoras, who no doubt became acquainted with it through Egyptian sources. But it remained for Plato who borrowed largely from Heracleitus and Pythagorus, to permanently establish the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, much in the same way as it is now so prominently taught by nearly all sects in Christendom.

Much more evidence could be produced as to the true signification of this important doctrine, both from the Bible—God's Book of truth—and from ancient classical writers, but enough has been shown that it had its origin in Egypt and not the Bible.

The word Egypt means dark, consequently the light of truth cannot be found in Egypt, and the warning of the Lord to Israel may be good to-day and for us, viz. "woe to them that go down to Egypt for help," Isa. xxxi. 1, "and after the doings of the land of Egypt ye shall not do." Lev. xviii. 3.

Egypt is also a type of the world, and our Lord says, "woe unto the world because of offences! (displeasure, sin) for it must needs be that offences come; but woe to that man by whom the offence cometh." Matt. xviii. 7, and Paul warns us by saying, "be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God." Rom. xii. 2.

An Epistle to Hebrews. Chapter 11.

1. Now faith is a hypostasis of those who hope, a conviction of realities not in sight.

2. In this (state) the elders received testimony.

3. In faith we perceive the ages to have been readjusted by the oracular word of God, so that the thing in sight hath not come to pass from things that are apparent.

4. In faith Abel offered unto God more of a sacrifice than Cain, whereby he received the testimony that he was justified, God testifying to his votive gifts, and thereby, though he died, judicially he still speaketh.

5. In faith Enoch was translated so as not to know death, and was not found, because God had translated him. For before his translation he received the testimony that he had pleased God.

6. Indeed apart from faith it is impossible to have pleased. For the one who cometh unto God must have put faith in the fact that he is and that he is a wages-payor of those who seek him out (or find him).

7. In faith Noe, when he had been oracularly told about the things not yet in sight, and moved with reverent fear, prepared an ark for the saving of his household, whereby he condemned the cosmos (or world of his day) and became an heir at-law of the righteousness that is according to faith.

8. In faith Habraam when called obeyed to go out into a place which he was destined to receive in the way of an inheritance; and he went out not fully knowing where he was going.

9. In faith he sojourned in a land of the promise as in another's, dwelling in tents along with Isaak and Jacob joint-heirs at-law of the same promise.

10. For he looked expectantly for the city which hath the foundations, whose architect and builder is God.

11. In faith also Sarra herself received ability to cast down seed even beyond the appointed period of life, when she had accounted Him faithful who had promised it.

12. Therefore there were begotten from one person and that too a dead one even as the stars of the heavens in their multitude and as the land that is beside the shore of the sea that cannot be numbered.

13. These all died judicially not having realized the promises, but having seen them afar off and welcomed them and confessed that they were strangers and away from home upon the earth.

14. For those who say such things make it manifest that they are seeking a father-land.

15. And if they had been mindful of the one from which they had come out, they might have held onto an opportunity to return.

16. But now they long for a more efficient one, that is a heavenly. Therefore God is not ashamed to be called their God. For he hath prepared for them a city.

17. In faith Habraam offered Isaac after he had been tried and the one to whom had been committed the promises offered his only-born (the same word used by John in the 1st chap. of his Gospel.)

18. In respect to whom it had been said, In Isaak will thy seed have been called.

19. He having reasoned that among the dead, whence he did realize him in a parable.

20. In faith also Isaak bespoke a blessing on Jacob and Hesau concerning things destined to be.

21. In faith Jacob when condemned to die bespoke a blessing on each of the sons of Joseph; and bowed in worship upon the top of his sceptre.

22. In faith Joseph when coming to his end made mention of the exodus of the sons of Israel and gave directions concerning his bones.

23. In faith Mouses when begotten was hid for a three-month period by his parents, because they saw that he was a promising child and they were not afraid of the king.

24. In faith Mouses when he had become great refused to be called a son of Pharao's daughter,

25. Preferring rather to suffer calamity along with God's royal people than have a lavish enjoyment of sin for the time being.

26. Having accounted the reproach of the Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt.

27. In faith he forsook Egypt not fearing the anger of the king. For he persevered as though he saw the Invisible One.

28. In faith he observed the pascha and the pouring on of the blood, that the destroyer might not touch their first-born ones.

29. In faith he crossed the Red Sea as though across dry land, in making which attempt the Egyptians were drowned in the sea.

30. In faith the walls of Jericho fell down when they had been encompassed for seven days.

31. In faith Hraab the harlot did not perish along with those who showed distrust, after she had received the spies with peace.

32. And what more do I say? For time would fail me to discourse of Gedeon, Barak, Samson, of Jephthae, and of David and Samouel and the prophets;

33. Who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions,

34. Quenched the force of fire, escaped the mouths of the sword, were enabled from weakness, became strong in war, turned away camps of aliens;

35. Women received their dead by a resurrection; while others were beaten to death with clubs not accepting their redemption offered, that they might attain a more efficient resurrection.

36. And others took a trial of mockings and scourgings, yea more, of bonds and imprisonment;

37. Were stoned to death, sawn asunder, tried, were condemned to die with the slaughter of the sword. Went about in sheepskins in goatskins, in want, in tribulation, in a durance of calamities;

38. Of whom the kosmos was not worthy; wanderers in desert places and mountains and caves and holes of the earth.

39. And all these, when they had received testimony through their faith, did not realize the promises,

40. God having had in view something more efficient for us, that they might not be perfected without us.

COMMENT.

The reader is requested to make a study of this definition of faith as here given oracularly. It is the only one given in the whole range of the inspired word, and is singularly concise and perspicuous to the Greek mind at least. The translators do not somehow seem to have apprehended the thought. The word hypostasis is an anglicised Greek word, but of very little use since the time of the early English translators, who undertook to convey the idea it contains by the Eng. word "substance" which of course is very misleading now, because we do not use it at all in the metaphysical sense in which they meant to use it. To the Greek mind a hypostasis was just the opposite of a hypothesis, or in other words while a hypothesis is an unreal state of things, a hypostasis is a real state of things. A moot-court is a hypothetical proceeding, while a real court is a hypostatical proceeding; a novel is a hypothetical state of things while history is a real state of things. Credulity is a hypothetical state of mind and heart, while faith is a real or hypostatical state of mind and heart. As long as you or I have faith in regard to any person or thing we will have hope in respect to this person or thing. Therefore this true definition here says that faith is a hypostasis of hoper—that is their state of mind and heart which enables them to be hopers in the true sense of the word, and not mere idealists or credulists. Such people have convictions always, as the phase is "the courage of their convictions," and so we have the other half of this definition here stating this fact, which is perhaps the greatest fact in the world, namely that such hopers have "a conviction of realities not in sight." This is one of the differences between genius and mediocrity. The great inventor has it, the great poet, the great statesman, the great patriot, the great humanitarian; the Christian is not a Christian without it. Success in any direction depends in the first instance upon whether the hope or hopes are well based, whether they rest upon a hypothetical state of things, which are mere ideal vagaries or hypothetical realities in accordance with common sense and well attested facts, however sublimated or idealized. Whenever your common sense is violated in your search after truth, beware, go slow. Yes, stop where you are in this particular line of thinking. It is better to wait for light than to grope, and remember that the light of the moral world is illuminated reason.

"Not in sight" more nearly conveys the idea contained in the Greek word —βλεπω— which means to have within the scope of the phisical vision, and excludes mental perception entirely. It is generally best translated by our English word "look" and I think "in sight" idiomatically conveys the thought of the writer here.

"In this" (state) is in this actual condition of heart and mind summed up in the one word "faith."

"We perceive the ages to have been readjusted, etc." instead of "we understand that the worlds have been framed by the word of God, etc." R. V. By no stretch of the imagination or assumption of derived meaning can the Greek word meaning "ages" here be supposed to mean "worlds," nor can the Greek word in the last clause meaning "to come to pass" by any similar process be made to do service for another Greek word meaning "to make" or "create," nor does the word translated "readjusted" mean "framed" in the sense of an original constitution of things. "More of a sacrifice" instead of "a better sacrifice," important to the true thought of the author.

"He was justified" instead of "just" R. V. and C. V., an important difference in theology I think. The word is a common legal term in the Greek for a person who has been arraigned and acquitted.

"Indeed apart from faith it is impossible to have pleased" is equally applicable to all the affairs of life as well as to our relation to God as a person. All the ties that hold us together, whether in society or the state, rest upon this subfoundation of faith.

"Oracularly told" is the usual way of communication between God and man, and the word here used is the word used all through the Scriptures of the Old and New to express this idea.

"Destined to" instead of "about to" which is too ambiguous.

"Not fully knowing" instead of "not knowing" merely. The word in the Greek here is our word for "positive science."

"Architect and builder" instead of "maker and builder" R. V. and C. V. which is a mere repetition when the two words are used of the same predicate.

"The city" and "the foundations" makes this a specific city and the foundations specific.

"See the narrative of Sarra" in order to fully understand the allusion here suggested by the adverb "where." "And that too a dead one" refers to Habraam and not Sarra."

"Welcomed" instead of "embraced" C. V. or "greeted." R. V.

"Away from home upon the earth" instead of "strangers and pilgrims."

"A father-land" instead of "a country."

"A more efficient one" instead of merely "a better one" R. V. and C. V.

"Only born" instead of "only begotten" C. V. and R. V. is the same word that is translated "only-begotten" in the first chap. of John's gospel 13th verse, where the reference is to the Christ's birth from among the dead or resurrection, and not to his begetting according to the flesh at all.

"Realized him" instead of "received him" much more significant as the context shows.

"Bowed in worship on the top of his sceptre" not "staff" C. V. and R. V.

Jacob was "a prince" and this was his emblem of authority.

"A promising child" instead of "proper" or "goodly C. V. and R. V. for obvious reasons.

"When he had become great" not "grown up" C. V. and R. V. Read the history of Mouses and you will learn that he had shown himself a great military leader before this offer was made him, and that he must have been about forty years of age when he fled from Egypt.

"A lavish enjoyment of sin for the time being" instead of the reading in the C. V. and R. V. for obvious reasons.

"The pouring on of the blood" instead of "the sprinkling." The blood was poured upon the threshhold; and the door-post, not upon "the lintel" as you will discover if you look the matter up thoroughly.

"Did not realize the promises" instead of "received not the promise" C. V. and R. V. There is a vast difference between receiving a note which is a promise to pay and realizing upon it, I have found in my experience, and there is the same difference in the Greek as in the English.

"That they might not be perfected without us" teaches us that none of this list had at this writing been "perfected," and, as the first step in the organic perfection is the obtaining of a spiritual body through the resurrection, these people had not thus far been raised, or in other words were still dead at this writing. Moreover the opening sentence of the next chapter does not contradict this statement as it is made to do in the C. V. and the R. V.

Pine Woods Bible Class. No. 38.

Leader. As a powerful electro-magnet comes in contact with matter, it will attract to itself that to which it has affinity. So Christ, the great heavenly magnet, is about to come so close to the earth, that he will in an instant attract to himself from among the mass of earth's inhabitants all those that are in harmony with the great Heavenly Magnet.

Please sing hymn 271:

"Thou art coming, Thou art coming,
We shall meet thee on thy way.
Thou art coming, we shall see thee,
And be like thee on that day."

Much confusion has occurred by a careless reading of the Prophetic Word, and a consequent failure to discern between symbols which differ. This is not the case with all however. I have brought with me some extracts from the writings and speeches of these advanced students which I will ask the Class to read aloud. Elias, will I ask you read this one.

Elias. With pleasure: "I would remark how important it is to avoid confusion of thought in our endeavors to interpret the wonderfully varied imagery set before us in the prophetic Scriptures. It has been very common with expositors to explain almost all prophetic symbols of evil as meaning popery. How often do we hear it said: This beast means popery; the woman on its back means popery; the little horn that grew on its head means popery; the two-horned beast means popery. Now, surely, there must be some strange confusion here. These differing in some cases, even contrasted symbols, cannot be rightly interpreted of one and the same system. Surely the woman must denote something else than the beast which carries her! Surely the woman on the back of the beast must mean something else than that which is intended by the horn upon this beast's head!"

Leader. Arlos, please read this extract.

Arlos. Yes sir: "The power of the woman is something distinct from the power of the beast, we may further learn from this important consideration, that the beast is seen in supreme power after the woman is destroyed. There are ten horns that give their power unto the beast, and destroy the woman. The power of the beast is ultimately the destruction of the woman. How, then, can the two be but one? It is said that the beast is popery, and that the woman also is popery. Then popery destroys itself, and exists in full power after its own self-destruction. This interpretation surely cannot stand! The woman symbolizes an ecclesiastical power, and the beast a secular power.

The one rides upon the other until the beast wearied out by the extortions, will bear her hated weight no longer. The woman is then thrown down, and trampled on, and gored to death. Yet still the beast is seen in all its strength."

Leader. Albert please read this extract.

Albert. "Ten kings arise, and power is given them for one hour with the beast purposely to destroy the woman. The beast is wearied out by the rapacity and treachery of the woman. The woman's impudence at last brings on her own destruction. The ten kings leagued with the beast, will strip the system of its wealth and honors, and of all its vested rights. They will break up their establishments and appropriate its revenues. She now cries out, Come home my children, come to the peaceful bosom of your holy mother. Yet in the estimation of the Spirit of God, she is a mother indeed, a mother of harlots and abominations of the earth."

Leader. Now Lucy, read this, please.

Lucy. "Revelation presents the present state of the beast, or Roman Empire as folllows: The beast that thou sawest was, and is not; and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit and shall go into perdition. The Roman Empire "was," but now "is not," yet it "shall ascend" once more. As an empire it "is not," yet the materials still exist, and shall be re-united in the crisis which hastens greatly. The beast which thou sawest even he is the eighth, and is of the seven. When ascended, he will be the eighth: that is under his eighth head or form of government. Still he is "of the seven." For, although newly ascended to power, it is only an old and previous form of power revived.

Leader. I will ask Carrie to read this interesting extract.

Carrie. I will, with pleasure: "When Rome secular revives, Rome papal will disappear. When the beast has throw the woman from off its back then shall it arise once more, and stand upon its brazen feet in more than human—in Satanic power. But the ten kings will be the agents of the woman's destruction. They do not yet exist. They are still future. They are to grow on one of the heads—the eighth, I believe—of the beast: they are not portions of its divided body. Besides they have power for "one hour" only; that is, for a short period, and that just at the period of the final crisis.

But another horn still an eleventh horn—is to arise "after" the ten. We submit that this eleventh horn denotes a person, a single individual, a king. A variety of reasons conspire to prove that the common notion cannot be the correct one. This little horn prevailed against the saints till the Ancient of days came; and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High, and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom. Now, popery will not continue till then. The ten horns will destroy the woman. But this blasphemous horn falls only when the judgment sits, and the books are opened. Again the horn we are contemplating arose after the ten. Now, the ten did not arise till the woman had well nigh finished her long career of crime and blood. How, then, can the horn that came up after them be the woman."

Leader. I will request Lud to read this.

Lud. I will: "This little horn is to destroy three of the ten. Before it were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots." Now, the woman was destroyed before this; for in Rev. xvii; we find that the ten horns were to destroy her, consequently these three had not then fallen. Further still is there not a manifest difference of character between a woman on the back of the beast, and a horn growing out of its head? We submit, therefore that this horn is not popery, but a political potentate of most blasphemous pretensions, and of satanic energy. He is, in fact, the antichrist. It is of him, we believe, that this same prophet Daniel speaks, in chapter xi. (Read verses 30-45; then compare with both 2 Thess. ii. 3-12.) In Dan. xi. 36, we learn that he shall prosper until the "indignation be accomplished." This will not be the case with popery.

Leader. I will request Charlottie to read this extract with regard to the time of the little horn's power.

Charlottie. "The time of the full power of antichrist is said to be a time, times, and a half a time. This is expressed both in Dan. vii. 25, and Dan. xii. 7. This signifies, I apprehend, three and a half literal years. This period is yet future. It is a short and tremendous crisis, or the time of trouble. "Times" always denotes literal years, I believe. In Dan. iv. 32: "Seven times shall pass over thee;" in Dan. xi. 13 (margin). At the end of times, even years, in these cases the term certainly means not prophetic but literal years.

Leader. We will conclude by singing hymn 391:

"Sound the alarm! Let the watchman cry!
Up! For the day of the Lord is nigh!
Who will escape from the wrath to come?
Who have a place in the saints' bright home?"

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Bro. N. H. Geiselman has about completed arrangements to do some work as an evangelist soon. Any church, or isolated brother who wishes him to hold meetings, will please address him at Argos, Indiana, and arrange for the same.

[illegible]
Viewed [illegible] by hope in tears.
"[illegible]" faith's reply
[illegible] doubts and fears.
"Will He come?" It is the groan
Of creation in her pangs.
"Will He come?" on this alone
Earth her expectation hangs.
"Will He come?" the words return
Echoing from the world again,
Where the weary nations yearn
For a righteous King to reign.
Thus for man and earth we pray,
"Hasten, Lord, the joyful day."

Are These the Fulfillment?

On the 19th of May, 1780 the sun was darkened, and on the night of the same date the moon withheld her light; and on the 13th of November 1833 the stars fell from heaven. These three events I honestly believe were the fulfillment of the Savior's language in Matt. xxiv. 29, and the parallel passages in Mark and Luke. This conviction is shared by many thousands of earnest souls in the United States. At the time of their occurrence simple minded folks, who believed in the inspiration of the Bible, and who were eyewitnesses of these startling and awe-inspiring phenomena in the heavens, looked upon them as the historic counterpart of the prophecy in the above passages.

How natural was this: it was taking the Lord at his word: and though I was born too late to see any of these signs, I believe the testimony of the witnesses who wrote, and gave us such graphic descriptions of these wonders of the heavens. I have conversed with many persons who saw the stars fall and might have heard from the lips of credible witnesses the story of the dark day and dark night of 1780, had I been interested in prophetic themes in early youth, as I am now. These signs appearing just when they did could not fail to produce the conviction in the mind of observers that what the Lord predicted on the Mount of Olives seventeen centuries before was actually materializing before their eyes. Nor can we today, who read the story from the pens of these witnesses who wrote in such a solemn and reverential style, avoid feeling deeply and solemnly that God threw out these visible signs to impress the students of his word that the day of the Lord was near. Nor can we think of them as "insignificant occurrences" until we begin to imagine that it will require something vastly more stupendous to fulfill the language of Jesus.

ARE THEY SUFFICIENT?

The "futurist" says "no, they are too tame." But how does he know that these events of the past do not meet the requirements of the prophecy? To say that they are not, is only to state a conjecture. The prophecy does not mention the extent of the darkness, nor the country to be enshrouded in gloom, nor the number of persons to be cognizant of the fact. It is not at all essential [illegible] that it should be universal, [illegible] nearly so. I can see no go[od] reason why the darkness in [illegible] more extensiv[e] [illegible] order to constitute [illegible] make it suitable to fulfill the prophecy. Though it was confined principally to New England: this I think was sufficient for God's purpose to warn the church of the approaching end of the age. It was not necessary for every body to witness the darkness. While all or nearly all observed the dark day in that portion of the earth where the sun was darkened, not nearly so many saw the darkness caused by the moon withholding her light, and comparatively few saw the great star-shower of 1833, yet they were signs all the same to those who saw them, and to those who did not see them. The latter believing the facts on the testimony of credible witnesses. Believing is seeing in an important sense when the eyes of our understanding are enlightened, Eph. i. 18. Nearly everything in this world has to be accepted on the [ground] of faith; even events that transpire today must come to our minds through the reports of others. Many important prophecies have been fulfilled in the brief period of my own life, but these I did not see fulfilled. The events occurred in the East in the great field covered by God's prophetic chart. I must read the history of the East relating to the times in which I live in order to see the fulfillment of God's word. The signs under discussion appeared in the West. I was too young to witness even the last in the series, yet I believe they all occurred and in the order as predicted, at the right time, after the tribulation of Matt. xxiv., and as unmistakable foretokens to the church of the advent of the Redeemer. Believing this, I must believe that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand, even at the door; and my attitude in view of this must be one of constant expectancy not of a future antichrist, but of the Christ, the Son of God. I am thoroughly convinced by the facts of the history of the past that Paul's Man of Sin, or Lawless One, and the little horn of Dan. vii. 8, that spake great words against the Most High, have played the devilish part in every thing ascribed to them by the pen of inspiration and played it, as I conceive, vastly better than it is possible for a future antichrist to play it in one brief week of years. It is impossible for me to believe that the little horn power, which I have made reference, is yet to arise and enact what I find already exactly enacted in the history of past centuries. Every line, every salient point, and every shading has been faithfully photographed on the pages of profane history. The intelligent student may read the description given by the pen of the prophet and turn to history and read its counterpart, its fulfillment in language that sounds like the echo of that of Paul and John and Daniel. It pleased Catholic writers and especially so the Papal hierarchy, when Protestant authors and theologians began to look to the future for the Man of Sin. This theory was first advocated by Romanists to ward off the well directed and effective blows aimed by the Reformers at the head of the Papacy. It is strange that Protestant interpreters should adopt their theory.

JOHN L. WINCE.

Obituary.

Bro. Joel A. Simonds died of pneumonia Dec. 21, 1892 at Mrs. Fletcher's, his daughter, in Grand Rapids.

He was born in Pawlet, Vt. July 21, 1812. The family moved to Genessee, N. Y. 1813, and to Alexander, Genesee Co., N. Y. 1821, where he lived 30 years, working at farming. During this time he taught school several winters with much suc[cess]. He was an apt scholar especially in Mathematics. Having a literary turn of mind, he spent his leisure time in study, rather than in pleasure. It was said he read a large public library through before he was 21 years old. He was an early worker in the anti-slavery, and temperance reform.

When young he made a profession of religion and joined the Baptist church. He was an active member and a diligent Bible student. Many thought that it was his [duty] to preach, but he had no convictions, that he was thus called.

In 1848, when the question of condition immortality was beginning to be discussed by Storrs and others, he gave it a thorough investigation, and it revolutionized his Bible views very much, and he immediately commenced sounding the cry "Behold the Bridegroom cometh." He preached immortality only through Christ and the resurrection.

In 1854 he moved to Grand Rapids, Michigan, and took this spirit of progressive and aggressive reform with him, which he faithfully carried out, through a long consistent life.

He still made farming his business, and studied to know the best practical ways to make it a success.

He spent much time and means, by voice and pen, to publish and spread the gospel of the kingdom.

He made special effort to search out present and future dispensational truths so covered up by the fog of mysticism, such as Christ's soon personal coming, and a future life only by a resurrection, and the restitution of the earth as the kingdom, also the blessing of the nations by Christ and his seed after his second coming.

His life has been one constant scene of activity, both physically and mentally. He never lost time nor let it run to waste. His gift to analize simply, and explain problems in science, or questions of truth in morals or religion, was superior. He was competent as a teacher, cheerful, social and kind, a man of honor and integrity. The last twelve years he has lived in Chicago.

He was married in 1833 to Emily Toby of Pawlet, Vt. She died in 1851 leaving three living children one died at birth. He was married again to Harriett Garfield of Alexander, N. Y., in 1852 whom he leaves a widow. They had three children one dying at birth. He leaves four living children.

A BROTHER IN CHRIST.

Fell asleep Dec. 21, 1892, at her home in Clarksville, Butler Co., Iowa, Sister Marie Comley, wife of Benjamin Comley, aged 71 years 3 months and 27 days.

The subject of this obituary was born in Pennsylvania, Aug. 27, 1821. Her maiden name was Maria Johnson. She was married to Benjamin Comley, March 4, 1842. In 1860 she united with the Baptist Church at Juda, Wis. Subsequently she moved to Iowa, where she became identified with the Adventists, heartily endorsing the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus. She was personally known to the writer as a plain Christian woman, one who despised cant and hypocrisy, but ever ready to share the blessings of her home with God's children. She loved the glorious doctrine of a coming Savior to raise the sleeping saints. She suffered extremely from heart disease which finally terminated her mortal life. She longed to be at rest and often repeated "Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep, from which none ever wake to weep." She leaves a crippled husband to mourn her absence, he too is looking for the dawning of the bright and glorious day, when the lame will leap as an hart, and when the tongue of the dumb will sing. May it be their portion to join in glad refrain, "Thou hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, tongue, and people, and nation, and hast made us unto our God, kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth.

The funeral was held at the residence. Elder Graham officiated. As the writer was formerly intimate with the family he willingly complies with a request to write this obituary.

Two Curious Burials.

After the death of Alaric, the conqueror of Rome, history says a river was turned aside to make a place in its bed for his grave; when he was buried the water was again turned into its old channel, and the men who buried him were slain, "that no one might find out where the conqueror of Rome was buried." The river mentioned was the Busento, near Cosenza, in Calabria Citra, Italy. The persons who buried him, and were afterwards slain by Alaric's ferocious followers, were native prisoners.

Of Attila, King of the Huns, it is said: "His body was placed in three coffins—the first of gold, the second of silver, and the third of iron. The trappings of his horses, consisting of bridles with gold bits and silver buckles, and saddles with buckles and rivets of the same precious metals, were buried with him, as were also his arms and ornaments. All of the captains and troopers who were employed either in making his grave or in burying the monarch were put to death, so that none might betray the last resting place of Attila, King of the Huns.

Just The Thing.

This is an expression the traveling public generally use when they find something that is exactly what they want. This expression applies directly to the Wisconsin Central Lines, which is now admitted by all to be "The Route" from Chicago to St. Paul, Minneapolis, Ashland, Duluth and all points in the Northwest. Their double daily train service and fine equipment offers inducement which cannot be surpassed.

This is the only line running both through Pullman First Class and Tourist Sleepers from Chicago to Pacific Coast Points without change.

The Lulling Times.

The times in which we live are lulling times, both individually and nationally, both spiritually and morally, both religiously and worldly. How it will continue we are not able to say, for certain it is for the last nearly one hundred years the Christain course has been easily maintained. That is they are not persecuted for Christ's sake. They are not hunted down and imprisoned for Christ's sake and the Gospel. No not at all. Hence there is a lull, and right in these most easy times we would throw in a word of caution. Be careful that you are not lulled to sleep, and forget the duties of the hour that lie upon you. When things go easy we are liable to take it easy, and thus miss the mark of the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Phil. iii. 14.

We have not resisted unto blood, striving against sin, Heb. xii. 4. That is it has not cost us the shedding of blood, or the sacrifice of life to be a true saint of God like it has others, but we are allowed to a considerable extent to worship God according to the dictates of his truth.

Again we look out upon the world of nations. Hardly a single war is going on among them. Here again is a lull, but see how mightily they are preparing for war. It seems to me that there is a mighty conflict right on the heels of all this, because the greater the power the mightier the conflict will be when once engaged.

Again more people are on pleasant terms. You hardly ever hear of a dozen men on a side having a quarrel or fight, or regular drag out.

Again there is a lull. Worldly minded people are getting along quite easy on business terms. You do not hear of one set of business men quarreling and fighting with another set. Here again is a lull. Why is all this? It is said that there is a calm after the storm, but it looks to me that there is a storm after the calm.

May we who are looking for Jesus to come and reign on the earth, look up and lift up our heads for our redemption draweth nigh. Luke xxi. 28.

California.

California is the most attractive and delightful section of the United States, if not of the world, and its many beautiful resorts will be crowded with the best families of the East during the entire winter. It offers to the investor the best open opportunity for safe and large returns from its fruit lands. It offers the kindest climate in the world to the feeble and debilitated; and it is reached in the most comfortable manner over the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad. Pullman Vestibule Sleeping Cars leave Chicago by this line every day in the year and go without change or transfer through to San Francisco, Los Angeles and San Diego. This is a feature not offered by any other line.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN.

VOL. XLII. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, FEBRUARY 1, 1893. NO. 5.

The Restitution [illegible] tion of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets, since the world began." As a means [illegible] the Christ as [illegible] of the nations; the [illegible] or resurrection of the dead; the [illegible] tion of the [illegible] the wicked; eternal life only through [illegible] every other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Somehow or Other.

Life has a burden for everyone's shoulder,
None may escape from its troubles and care;
Miss it in youth, and 'twill come when we're older,
And fit us as close as the garments we wear.

Sorrow comes into our homes uninvited,
Robbing our hearts of its treasures of song;
Lovers grow cold and our friendships are slighted,
Yet somehow or other we worry along.

Midst the sweet blossoms that smile in our faces,
Grow the rank weeds that would poison and blight;
And e'en in the midst of earth's beautiful places,
There always is something that isn't quite right.

Somehow or other the pathway grows brighter,
Just when we mourn there was none to befriend;
Hope in the heart makes the burden grow lighter,
And somehow or other we get to the end.

Original.

The New Covenant.

A covenant is an agreement between two parties. The object of the covenant is to bring the parties into harmonious relation and action. The word is from the Latin con, together, and venis, to come; a covenant then is a coming together; or the instrument that brings parties together; or the witness that they have been brought together.

In the letter to the Hebrews we have two covenants spoken of. One is called the "first" the other, the "second." The second is also called a "new covenant." Right here I will quote from C. Gardner's translation of the 8th chapter of Hebrews. "But just now he hath attained unto a public service that differeth by as much as he is a mediator of a more efficient covenant which hath been based upon more efficient promises. For if that first (covenant) had been faultless a place would not have been sought for a second. Moreover finding fault with it he addresses them as follows: "Lo days are coming, saith the Lord, and I am going to consummate over the house of Israel, and over the house of Juda, a new covenant not according to the covenant which I made with their fahter, on the day ~~when~~ I took them by their hand to lead them out of a land of Egypt; because they did not abide in my covenant, and I disregarded them saith the Lord.

Because this is the covenant which I shall have made after those days, saith the Lord, giving my laws in their thought, I will write them even upon their heart and I will be unto them for a God and each they shall be unto me for a royal people. And they shall not teach each one his fellow citizen and each one his brother, saying, know the Lord; because all will know (perceive) me from their small to their great. Because I shall be favorable to their iniquities and sins, and their transgressions I will no longer have remembered.

In saying new he hath accounted the first old; and that which is getting ancient and old is nigh to vanishing away." God made the first covenant with Israel when he took their hand to lead them out of Egypt.

He afterward found fault with that covenant, and announced his intention of making a new one with them, a covenant based upon more efficient promises. The first covenant then was based on "promises." The promises were made by both parties. God promised on his part, that if they would obey his voice, and keep his covenant, he would make them a peculiar treasure to him above all people, a kingdom of priests, a holy nation.

God's promise was based on a condition. The people on their part promised to meet the condition, to obey God's voice, and keep his covenant. Ex. xix. 3-8. They did not abide in his covenant, they failed to keep their promise, and so the covenant failed to bring the parties into harmony. God's promise in the old covenant was based on man's promise. Man's promise was a promise to keep God's law. Through the sinfulness of human nature man failed to keep his promise, and the covenant was broken.

Israel did not abide in the covenant, but broke out of it. That made it impossible for God to keep his promise according to the terms of the covenant. While they were sinful and disobedient, they could not be "a holy nation."

Worshipping idols they could not be a "kingdom of priests." The new covenant is based on "more efficient promises." Then it is not based on man's promises, but entirely on God's promises. Consequently there will be no failure. "Giving his laws in their thoughts he will even write them upon their hearts." By what agency will God write his laws upon the hearts of his people? I answer, by his spirit. Paul, in the second epistle to the Corinthians, says, "For as much as ye are manifestly declared to be the epistle of Christ ministered by us, written not with ink, but with the spirit of the living God; not in tables of stone but in fleshly tables of the heart. And such confidence have we through Christ to God-ward: not that we are sufficient of ourselves to account anything as from ourselves; but our sufficiency is of God; who also made us sufficient as ministers of a new covenant; not of the letter, but of the spirit: for the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life. R. V.

Paul was a qualified "minister of a new covenant;" yet he was an apostle to the Gentiles. How could this be seeing the new covenant was to be made with the house of Israel? To answer this it will be necessary to consider the promises made to Abraham: for all God's dealings with Israel and with the nations must be in harmony with the promises which he made to that patriarch.

He promised to give to Abraham and to his seed the land of Canaan. And he gave to Abraham the covenant of circumcision. Gen. xvii. Circumcision had relation to righteousness, and without righteousness no one is qualified for the eternal inheritance. According to Paul's explanation in Rom. iv. 11, the circumcision of Abraham was a "seal of righteousness" which he had before his circumcision.

The promises of God in the old covenant were to be fulfilled on condition of the righteousness of the people: and the righteousness required was the righteousness of keeping the law. Had they kept the law they would have inherited the land forever; and would have been a kingdom of priests. But they failed to meet the requirements of the covenent. They were circumcised in flesh, but not in heart. God called upon them to circumcise the foreskin of their heart, and not to be stiff-necked. Deut. x. 16; Jer. iv. 4. Doubtless the foreskin of their heart stood for their impure, unholy, desires, which caused them to transgress his law. To circumcise the foreskin of the heart is the same as to "put off the old man with his deeds." The old man was too strong for them and they never put him off. Sin was their master, and brought them into condemnation: brought them into worse bondage than their bondage in Egypt.

God foreknew that they would not keep his covenant; and declared to them in the wilderness the curses that would come upon them; and that they would be scattered among the nations; and in that prophecy he made a gracious promise of final deliverance. "And the Lord thy God will bring thee into the land which thy fathers possessed, and thou shalt possess it; and he will do thee good, and multiply thee above thy fathers. And the Lord thy God will circumcise thine heart, and the heart of thy seed, to love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and all thy soul, that thou mayest live." Deut. xxx. 5, 6. To circumcise the heart of that people so that they will love Yahveh their God with all their heart is doubtless the same as to write the law upon their heart.

That is what God promised to do in the making of the new covenant. God also promised to Abraham that in his seed all the nations should be blessed. Gen. xxii. 18. Concerning this Paul in the letter to the Galatians says, "The Scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the nations by faith, previously announced glad tidings to Abraham, that in thy seed shall all the nations be blessed." Gal. iii. 8.

From this we see that it was God's purpose before the covenant was made with Israel at Sinai, to extend the blessings of the new covenant to the Gentiles: for justification is a blessing of the new covenant. But the blessing of justification comes through faith. This blessing comes upon sinners. Sinners cannot be justified without a putting away of their sins in some way. Under their "first" covenant sins were put away by the sacrifice of animals. The sinner brought the proper animal to the door of the tabernacle, laid his hand upon the "victim's" head, and killed it. The priest took some of the blood and put it upon the horns of the altar, and poured out the blood at the base of the altar. A portion of the body was burnt upon the altar. An "atonement" was made and the sin forgiven. Lev. iv. 27-31. All those sacrifices foreshadowed the great sacrifices of the Christ. The one sacrifice of the antitypical "lamb" is sufficient to make "atonement"—a sin-covering, for all God's people. And this one sacrifice confirmed, made "sure," the new covenant.

The epistle to Hebrews says "For where there is a covenant it is necessary that the death of the one covenanted be brought about: For a covenant over dead (victims) is sure, while it has not full power when the one covenanted is living. C. Gardner's translation. Heb. ix. 16, 17. We know that Christ was the "covenanted" victim. By the mouth of Isaiah God said concerning the Christ, "I, Yahveh, have called thee in righteousness, and will hold thine hand, and will keep thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, for a light of the Gentiles, to open the blind eyes, to bring out the prisoners from the prison, and them that sit in darkness out of the prison-house." Isa. xl. 6. 7. Again, Isa. xliv. 8, 9. "Thus saith Yahveh, In an acceptable time have I heard thee, in a day of salvation have I helped thee: and I will preserve thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, to raise up the earth (land) Marg. to cause to inherit the desolate heritages; that thou mayest say to the prisoners, Go forth, to them that are in darkness, Show yourselves. They shall feed in the ways, and their pastores shall be in all high places.

From these two prophecies we see that the Christ was to be "a covenant" to the Gentiles, and a covenant to Israel. God gives the Christ for a covenant of the people. The people must accept the Christ as a covenant, otherwise they do not become a party to the covenant. This implies faith in God's word concerning the Christ, and faith in the Christ as the covenanted one. God's word concerning the Christ is the Gospel. The Gospel preached by the apostles declared Jesus to be the Christ of the promises and of the prophecies; the covenanted victim whose death made sure the covenanted blessings; whose resurrection was necessary in order that as the seed of Abraham he might inherit the land, and as the seed of David he might inherit the throne of David and be king over Israel; and might as the "first-born" from among the dead bestow the life everlasting upon the covenant people. Hearing the Gospel, the people, if they believed it, were in a position to accept Jesus as the covenanted victim whose life was given up for their sins; and to signify their acceptance by being baptized into his name, thus putting him on as their sin-covering. This done they were in covenant relation with God, and entitled to all the blessings of the covenant; and there was no difference between Jew and Gentile. They were all sons of God through faith in the Anointed Jesus. For as many as had been baptized into Christ had put on Christ: and being Christ's people were Abraham's seed, heirs according to the promise. Gal. iii. 26-29. Was this the fulfillment of God's promise through Jeremiah to Israel, recorded in the 31st chapter, 31-34? No: it was not. It was the taking out from the nations a people for God's name, an anointed body called the "fulness" of the Christ, a royal priesthood to serve between God and the nations in the economy of the fulness of the times. Eph. i. 10, 22, 23; 1 Pet. ii. 5-9; Acts xv. 13-17. Meanwhile "blindness in part has happened to Israel till the fulness of, or, from the Gentiles shall have come in." Then "the Deliverer will come out of Sion and, turn away ungodliness from Jacob." For this is God's covenant unto them when he shall take away their sins, Rom. ii. 26, 27. To take away their sins is what God promised through the mouth of Jeremiah. The new covenant cannot be made with the house of Israel until they accept Jesus as the Messiah. Before they will accept Jesus, their blindness must be removed. This will not be done until he comes out of Sion as their Deliverer. Before he can come out of Sion he must come to Sion. When he comes to Sion "the fulness," the body, the saints, will be with him. Zech. xiv. 5. He will be manifested to the house of Judah before he will be to the house of Israel. Zech. xii 7. Every event in its time.

Now to recapitulate: God promised to give the land of Canaan to Abraham and his seed; and promised that in Abraham's seed all nations should be blessed. He intended to establish a righteous nation in the land—a kingdom of priests to bless the nations. He entered into a covenant with Israel. Abraham's descendants, to make them a kingdom of priests if they would be righteous. They promised to be righteous, but through the sinfulness of their nature failed to bring forth the fruit of righteousness. God made a promise of a new covenant in which he engages to make them righteous. This righteousness must come through his Son—the "victim" of the new covenant whose blood is for the covering of their sins, and whose righteousness is to be imputed to them. They enter into covenant with God through faith in the Son and taking him as the covenanted one.

In this age a covenant people from all nations is being selected for royal priestly service in the age to come. The house of Israel will accept Jesus as the Son of God and their covenanted Messiah, and be made righteous, in the coming age. All nations will accept him as the covenanted one in that age, and be blessed. Whence it appears that the new covenant has special relation to the righteousness which qualifies for "the eternal inheritance." This righteousness we will more fully consider hereafter.

Current Events and Sundry Thoughts.

There is great lamentation upon the part of the clergy over the declension of faith in and adherence to the established creeds of the church. The foundation of Ecclesiastical things are out of course, but really not more so than the social and political system of human affairs. It is certainly quite discouraging to those who look an labor for the world's conversion to Christianity. But after all has been said and done the world today is upon a higher plane than ever before, so far as intelligence, comfort and the general well being of its inhabitants are concerned.

Knowledge is more widely diffused among the masses,—the heavy load of extreme ignorance, poverty, and brutality is not more oppressive in our day than in ages past. In fact the restless and inconstant condition of things so threatening in our time is the legitimate result of the spirit of intelligence and liberality that is abroad in the world. Men are beginning to learn that human beings are not responsible for their differences in faith and religion, and are less inclined to quarrel and wrangle over matters for which they are not responsible, and in the making of which they had no hand.

Everything is working all right in the way of preparing the world for the great crisis now approaching;—this is true intellectually and physically. We must however, discern the difference between knowledge and wisdom. A man may have knowledge and yet be not truly wise. The fear of God is the beginning of wisdom, an element wholly lacking in the erudition of naturalism. Intellectual profundity, and spiritual perception must go hand in hand where true wisdom is found. The former divorced from the latter, doubts everything, disputes everything, criticises and rejects the genuine and spurious together.

We see an illustration of this in the tendency of modern thought and scholarship. When they discover flaws in their church creeds, they begin to criticise and expose them, showing up how unreasonable but not how unscriptural they are, for reason with them is greater and higher than Scripture. Human reason is both proud and vain, and greatly dignifies itself in its own conceit. It is coldly and cruelly critical, but not very teachable, save in the direction of what is conclusive to its own vanity and exaltation. It condemns the creed, doubts the Scriptures, and disparages their authority and questions their divinity. Doubtless human creeds will receive a great shaking up until they are revised to please the taste of modern thought and criticism. After revision however they may be no more Scriptural than before.

It is a good thing that men of ripe scholarship are beginning to assault the creed, and for that matter the Bible too. Truth never suffers from the assaults of profound learning and searching criticism. We are on the eve of learning that we have taken many things for granted, without knowing the why and wherefore.

It is not impossible that we believe and accept something as Scripture, that is not Scripture. I for one welcome the searching fire, the unrelenting persistency of the "higher critics."

Let them demolish the idols and pull down their temples; let the light of truth and reason come in and chase the shadows of superstition away. Let them set all the world to doubting, even to doubt the Scriptures. Men who never doubt, never think.

If doubt must precede thought, then hasten the day when pious zealots are made to doubt and forced to think a little.

In religious matters very little, if any thinking is done. Everything is taken second handed by the masses of the people, and they do not know and care not to know whether it is reasonable and Scriptural or otherwise.

I say reasonable, because I cannot believe what baffles enlightened reason to comprehend. I cannot comprehend the doctrine of the trinity—three gods in one, and yet only one God. I refer to the trinity only as an illustration, for there are a goodly number of theological dogmas, burdensome to faith, as this, and why should a man burden his faith with the unreasonable, and stultifying his reason with the impossible.

The time has come, when the man who preaches the gospel will have something more to do than simply quote or read the Scriptures to prove his proclamation. Intelligent men are doubting, reading and thinking. Your theology will be examined in detail, to see how much of pagan superstition is in it, and you will be subjected to the fiery ordeal of advanced thought and the light of modern research and learning. It will be necessary to show that your proof is competent and reliable, that his words are fairly translated and interpreted, that you are not resting upon an interpolation instead of the genuine text, in fact you will be compelled to defend the Scriptures. I for one rejoice to see this time at hand, the servants of Christ will breathe a purer mental atmosphere as the result.

Oh Why Wait?

My heart was made sad this morning while I read the obituaries. And read the notice of the death of Brother and Sister Tillman's daughter. I remember her so well when they lived near where Gospel Grove meeting house now stands. I often preached there before the house was built, and often since. I remember that little bright eyed girl was so full of life, and was so kind and pleasant. Brethren, are we not at fault for not teaching our brethren that are isolated, not to wait for a preacher to come and immerse their children, but as soon as they are convinced, for father at once to go and immerse them? We want to get out of the notion that there can be nothing done without a preacher. What? Let our dear children die without being immersed into the Christ, when they are ready and willing and waiting. Dear brethren don't wait, if your children are instructed and want to be adopted into the family of God's dear children; take them and bury them in baptism, that they arise from the liquid grave and walk in a new life. When I read the sad news of her death, I said to my wife, if some one would bear my expenses I would go out to Brother Tillman's and hold some meeting and immerse those children. But dear Brother Henry, don't wait for any one. I believe where there are no male members to attend to the ordinance of baptism, sisters can attend upon the occasion and see them immersed into Christ. What ever you do, don't wait. I hope some others of our brethren will speak out on this all-important subject. There is so much at stake in those matters. Oh, how thankful we are that we have so many dear ones of like precious faith that can give us so much good instruction. I read so many good things in our dear RESTITUTION. May we all be alive to the truth.

J. S. HATCH.

Dear Restitution:

For some time I have been thinking I would like to have a little talk with the brethren through the paper that I esteem so highly, but man is a curious being, and loves to procrastinate. Seems to love to complain and fault find, and criticise almost everybody and everything, and is scarcely ever satisfied with his surroundings. It is too cold or too hot, too wet or too dry, and generally very impatient.

Paul says: "Whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning," and I have been thinking considerable of late of Israel as a people. After all that the Lord had done for them they were generally dissatisfied, in other words wanted to be like other people. When they were under Judges and in a very prosperous condition, they got clamorous for a king, yes wanted to be like other people. God gave them Saul to be king over them, and told them, dont you take any captives. You must slay all the Amalekites, and you must not take any spoil. But it seems that Saul [illegible] could improve on the Lord's command, for he reserved Agag for a triumph and some of the animals for a special sacrifice to God, but Samuel taught him that obedience was better than sacrifice and he lost his throne for his pains. Yes he wanted to be like other people. And so, all along the line of Israel's history they would wander from the Lord, and want to be like other people, till finally, they were scattered among the nations of earth. So here we will leave Israel and see if there is not a lesson in this for us, for these things were written for our learning. How often is it that we see people who have believed and obeyed the truth, fail to meet with the household of faith and meet with the sects. We suppose they like Israel want to be like other people.

It occurs to my mind that some of THE RESTITUTION writers call this holding the truth in unrighteousness. If so, brethren beware! We remember some time ago that one of our brothers wrote about sitting on beer kegs, and going in saloons, notwithstanding the command to shun every appearance of evil. Brother, we suppose they wanted to be like other people. How often do we ask in our prayers our Heavenly Father to guide us by His Word, and then do we go to jesting, and engaging in foolish and vain talks? If so, we must want to be like other people, and will be like other people when the great day comes, will have our portion with the hypocrites, and unbelievers, there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

Brethren, let us improve the time, seeing the days are evil. Inasmuch as we have taken upon us the name of Jesus, let us walk worthy of that name.

Being fully persuaded that the end of Gentile times is close at hand, and the soon coming of the Mighty One. Pray for me, brethren, that in that great day I may be found with the people of God.

This age of sin is closing,
And the new is coming in,
O brother, let's be ready,
When that glorious age begins.

Your Brother in hope.

Is the "Man of Sin" and the Antichrist the same personage?

Questions.

To Bro. J. L. Wince:

1. When did the "tribulation," mentioned in Matt. xxiv. 29, cease? and what is the force of the word "immediately," as used in that verse?

2. Are not the events mentioned in the 29th 30th and 31st verses in very close connection, in point of time, in their fulfillment?

3. Is not the "tribulation" of Matt. xxiv. 29 the same as that expressed in Luke xxi. 24 in these words, "And they (the Jews) shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations, and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled?

4. Is it not a fact that, excepting the first century immediately following the destruction of Jerusalem, the "tribulation" has been greater since 1790 than at any other period of this dispensation, and if so do we not look for the signs of Matt. xxiv. 29, as yet future?

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, FEB. 1, 1893.

WE have failed to receive the usual items from Bro. Joblin, and must go to press without them this week.

BRO. JOBLIN struck the key note when he appealed to the wide-awake among the brethren and sisters. One brother has sent us seventeen new names: and others are doing nobly.

"What the Truth Must do for Us."

In further elucidating this subject, we would remark that no revelation from God was ever made to Gentiles. His oracles were committed to the Jews. And from the promise that in Abraham and his seed all the families of the earth shall be blessed, till the closing words of the book of the Revelation to John, no change of Jehovah's programme was made. What we mean to say, is, that there is no later gospel to or for Gentiles; only one set of promises has been made: —only one hope has been set before men; there is no heaven above for Gentiles and a heaven below for Jews. Paul's statement in Gal. iii. 14 that Christ was made a curse for us that the blessing of Abraham might come upon the Gentiles, forever settles that matter. Will our readers bear this fact in mind while we show from the 14th verse of the 15th chapter of Acts that the Truth must take us out from the rest of mankind, and bestow upon us God's name. After Peter had spoken at the Jerusalem Conference, James said: "Simeon (Simon Peter) hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles to take out of them a people for his name." And we learn by what means God had commenced to do this, by the words of Peter in the 7th verse. He says: "Men and brethren, ye know how that a good while ago God made choice among us, that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the gospel and believe." James says they were to be taken out for his (God's) name, and Peter shows us the condition of election to this favor, viz.: belief of the Gospel; but the commission under which Peter visited them, shows that he was only speaking in general terms now, for the Lord himself makes both belief and baptism conditions. Said he. "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature: he that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved;" while Matthew's report is still more explicit, and more explanatory of the statement of James that the Gentiles were visited to take out of them a people for God's name. It says: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." This shows that the name is obtained when this act of obedience to the faith of the gospel is rendered. To be saved is to be redeemed from death and crowned with life—eternal, incorruptible, immortal, divine life,—God's life; so that those who attain to that most exalted state will possess both divine nature and the divine name. Believers- obedient believers, are graciously permitted to take the name in the adopting ordinance, when the old man is put off and the new man put on. This is, as it were, a pledge that as surely as the character and disposition is now changed, the nature shall be changed, if faithful to the end.

The Gentiles are visited with the gospel to take out of them a people for God's name. When thus taken out of the Gentiles, in one sense they are Gentiles no longer. They are still flesh and blood Gentiles as they were born; but their MINDS being renewed, were not fleshly. When in Eph. ii. 11 the Spirit speaks of the past history of the saints at that place as "Gentiles in the flesh," it thus speaks of the mind, because the verses following show the difference between their past and present condition to be one of an intellectual, moral and legal character, as follows: "That at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world; but now, in Christ Jesus, ye who sometimes were far off, are made nigh by the blood of Christ." To what had the Gentiles been brought nigh by the blood of Christ? Nigh to the covenants of promise, nigh to the commonwealth of Israel.

But what was it that excluded Gentiles from the benefits offered in the covenants of promise? The answer is given by Paul in the second chapter of Ephesians and verses 14-22, and reads as follows: "For he is our peace who hath made both (Jews and Gentiles) one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us, having abolished in his flesh the enmity (between Jews and Gentiles) even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain (Jews and Gentiles,) one new man, so making peace; and that he might reconcile both unto God in one body by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby;" and came and preached peace to you which were afar off, and to them that were nigh; for through him we both (Jews and Gentiles) have access by one Spirit unto the Father; now, therefore, ye are no more strangers (to the covenants of promise) and foreigners (aliens from the commonwealth of Israel), but fellowcitizens with the saints, and of the household of God, and are built upon the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone, in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord; in whom ye are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit."

This was the happy condition of the Ephesians when the letter was addressed to them. What a contrast between their past and present. They had been taken out from among the rest of mankind to bear God's name. They had been brought into covenant relation to him, had been adopted into his family, and had access to him by one Spirit; were members of his household—the household of faith (Gal. vi. 10,) at the head of which is Abraham, called the father of all them that believe; and named in the original will as joint-heir with the Anointed, Gal. iii. 16; heir of the world, Rom. iv. 13. is the way his blessing is expressed; and when we recall the fact that Christ was made a curse for us, that the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ, that we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith. Abraham's blessing is invested with an awful importance for us.

It is only from this point of view that we can realize why God visits us with the gospel to take us out of the Gentiles for his name. All the blessings stored up for man flow through, and are dispensed by Abraham and his seed. Tens of thousands read the promise that all the families of the earth are to be blessed in Abraham and his seed, with a veil over their eyes; but there stands the promise of him who cannot lie, and who changes not. Up to the advent of the seed, the offer to be blessed by Abraham and his seed was confined to the literal descendants of Abraham. The law fenced them in as a nation, beyond which the invitation did not extend. As we have learned from the second chapter of Ephesians, that the wall of partition between Jews and Gentiles was broken down by Christ, the cause of the enmity was slain, and the Gentiles were invited to share the blessing of Abraham.

To accept the offered blessing of Abraham is to leave the Gentile camp for that of the Jews. Jesus was born to be King of the Jews; the angel of God said he should have the throne of David and reign over the house of Jacob forever; and it is by means of this divine government that Abraham and his seed are to bless all the families of the earth. Is it any wonder that men and women have to be taken OUT of the Gentiles before they can become HEIRS OF A JEWISH KINGDOM? And is it not clear that all who reject the blessing of Abraham, or who are ignorant of it, comprise the Gentiles?

Romans ii. 29 shows that even a literal descendant of Abraham is not a Jew in the sense we are now speaking of Jews. Their descent from Abraham fleshwise does not entitle them to this blessing of Abraham. Like him they must believe the covenanted blessing, and live in reference to it; and this helps us to understand what Paul means by being Jews inwardly, Rom. ii. 28; and also in what sense some in the church at Smyrna claimed to be Jews, but were not. See Rev. ii. 9.

Be it remembered that the Ephesians in the past were without the Anointed One, because they knew nothing of the covenanted kingdom he was Anointed to be King of, and hence were aliens to Israel's commonwealth, and had nothing to hope for, and were without God in the world, because ignorant of his redemptive scheme; and that scheme could only be embraced by them when it was disclosed to them, and it could not be disclosed to them as Gentiles, till the law was abolished. The law was a provisional addition to the covenants made to Abraham. Abraham needed no law because he had faith, and lived a life of faith. His descendants 430 years later, did not have faith, and yet it was necessary to keep them from mixing with Gentiles, because that would have frustrated God's promise concerning the seed. So Paul says the law was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come, and having answered its purpose it was abolished. The abolition of the law left the covenants just as they were before there was any law; the sole source of future life and glory. The law, Paul tells us, did not interfere with the covenants while it did exist. The law was not given for salvation purposes, but to secure national and temporal benefits. There were some among the Israelites all down through the law period who believed the covenants of God to the fathers, and they composed the household of God; they were Jews inwardly who hoped for what God had promised—expected to share the blessing of Abraham.

It is a solemn truth that only those who believe what God covenants to give will share the blessing of Abraham. It most clearly says that the blessing of Abraham comes on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ, that we might receive the annunciation (Diaglott) of the Spirit through faith through faith. Receive what annunciation of the Spirit through faith? Why the announcement that has just been made by the Spirit in Paul, that Christ was made a curse for us, "that the blessing of Abraham might come upon the Gentiles;" not heaven, or anything else.

People who do not receive that annunciation of the Spirit remain Gentiles. They are not taken out for God's name; they do not become fellowcitizens with the saints, to whom the faith was once delivered; and in view of this it is no wonder that Paul ceased not to warn every one night and day with tears for three years at Ephesus, because he foresaw that after his departure some would lower the standard of truth. How would our conduct comport with his if knowing the truth of God we condoned unbelief, and treated Gentiles in the flesh as if they were Jews inwardly. If, in addition to love for God and his truth, our senses be exercised by reason of use, we shall visit people with the gospel that takes out of the Gentiles a people for God's name. "He that hath my Word, let him speak my word faithfully." was said long ages ago, but it is binding still.

An Epistle to Hebrews. Chapter 12.

Therefore since we have also so great a cloud of testifiers (not eye-witnesses) lying around us, let us lay aside every hinderance and the sin that most easily besets us and run the contest that lies before us;

2. Looking away unto Jesous the chief-leader and finisher of our faith, who for the sake of the joy that lay before him, endured a cross and despised shame, and hath sat down at the right hand of the throne of God.

3. Consider moreover who he is who endured such a contradiction against himself at the instigation of obdurate sinners, that ye may not become weary and faint in your souls.

4. Ye have not yet withstood unto blood in your struggle against sin,

5. And ye have ignored the exhortation which is addressed to you as sons. My Son, Do not belittle the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when convicted by him:

6. For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and he scourgeth every son whom he accepteth.

7. If ye are under-going chastening God is bringing it unto you as sons. For what son is there whom a father doth not chasten?

8. But if ye be without chastening of which they all have become partakers, surely ye are bastards and not sons.

9. If then we have had our fathers of the flesh as chasteners and have given heed, shall we not much more subject ourselves to the Father of our spirits and live?

10. For they chastened us for a few days according to their way of thinking, but he for our profit, that we might become partakers of his sanctity.

11. No chastening for the time being seems joyous but grievous; but afterward it yieldeth a peaceable fruit of righteousness for those who have been exercised thereby.

12. Therefore straighten up your hands that hang down, and your knees that have become relaxed; and make correct circuits for your feet, that the lame may not be turned aside but healed.

14. Pursue after peace and the sanctification, without which no one will see the Lord.

15. Making it your care that no one is falling short of the grace of God, and that no root of bitterness is springing up and hindering, and many become polluted thereby;

16. That no one be a harlot nor an unconsecrated person, as was Hesau, who for once eating sold his birthright privileges.

17. For ye know that even when he desired to inherit the blessing afterwards, he was rejected as one that had been tried. For he found no place for repentance though he sought it with tears.

18. Moreover ye have not come unto a mountain that one must grope after, and that hath been burned with fire, and unto thick darkness and gloom and a tempest,

19. And an echo of a trumpet, and unto a sound of spoken words (oracular words) unto which those who had heard them asked that not a word should be added.

20. For they did not bear th which was being sent through, namely "And if a wild beast shall touch the mountain he shall be stoned to death."

21. And so fearful was the appearance of things that Mouses said, I am undone with fear and trembling;

22. But ye have come unto Mount Sion and a city of a living God, a heavenly Hierousalem and unto myriads of angels;

23. Unto a panagora (an assembly of the whole nation) and church of first-born ones written off in heaven, and unto God a judge of all, and unto spirits of justified ones who have been perfected,

24. And unto Jesous a mediator of a new covenant, and unto a blood of sprinkling that speaketh more efficiently than doth Abel.

25. See to it that ye do not ask the one who speaketh to be excused. For if they escape not who asked to be excused of the one who was speaking oracularly upon the earth, much more we who are turning away the one from heaven,

26. Whose voice then shook the earth, but who now hath announced saying yet once for all again I am going to shake not only the earth but the heavens also.

27. And this yet once for all again denoteth the translation (metathesis) of the things shaken as of things that have been made (or created) that are not being shaken may remain.

28. Therefore since we are receiving a kingdom that cannot be shaken we have grace, whereby we may serve God for hire in an acceptable way with respect and reverent fear,

29. Even though our God is a lavishly consuming fire.

COMMENT.

"Testifiers" or "martyrs" not eye-witnesses as one would infer from the C. V. and R. V.

"Lying around" (in their graves) not sitting around in a sky-amphitheatre looking down at the saints running a race, as this passage is commonly interpreted to mean.

"The sin that most easily besets us" instead of "so easily" C. V. and R. V.

"The contest that lies before us" instead of "the race that is set before us" C. V. and R. V.

"That lay before him" instead of "that was set before him." It lay and still lies before the whole human race, this struggle for the mastery namely. "Partakers of his sanctity" not "holiness" C. V. and R. V.

"Pursue" instead of "follow." The same word is frequently translated "persecute" and properly too. There is another word for "follow" in the ordinary sense.

"For once eating" instead of "for one mess of meat" R. V. for various reasons. In the first place it is literal, and true to the historical fact. Then what he ate was not "meat" in the strict sense of the word, but "soup" and the literal statement is much more significant and emphatic.

"His birth-right privileges" instead of "birth-right" merely, C. V. and R. V. as this word in the plural as it is here always has this signification in the scriptures.

"He was rejected as one that had been tried" instead of merely "rejected" C. V. and R. V. This word is used of rejecting a spurious coin, and always implies a test applied before rejection or "rejected for want of value."

"That one must grope after" instead of "that might be touched" R. V. more significant of the fact and literal.

"Wild beast" instead of "beast" merely which would include the domestic animals C. V. and R. V.

"Myriads" instead of "an innumerable host" R. V. Myriads can be numbered.

"A panagora" instead of "the general assembly" which is too suggestive of Presbyterianism R. V. and C. V. A panagora under the "law" was an assembly of the whole nation as a church, called for some specific or general, purpose, as the regular recurring "pascha" celebration.

"Written off" that is off the records in heaven or copied, not "enrolled in" heaven R. V. It was customary to have the local records copied and taken to the capital city of a kingdom in those days, when a tax was to be levied or a levy of men to be made in war. This is the basis of the figure here used.

Sion or the New Hierousalem becomes the capitol of this kingdom and this a preliminary to a final levy for the purposes of the kingdom.

"Justified ones" instead of "just men" C. V. and R. V. If they were already "just" they would not have had to be "made perfect." Then Christ says he didn't come to call just people but sinners to repentance, and such people after they have accepted the call are properly understood to be and are justified persons.

"More efficiently" instead of "better" than Abel C. V. and R. V.

"Ask to be excused" instead of "refuse" C. V. and R. V.—more graphic and true to fact moreover.

"Turning away him" instead of "turning away from him" C. V. and R. V.

"Yet once for all again" instead of "yet once more" C. V. and R. V. also true to fact and the "for all" a very important part of it.

"Translation" instead of "remove" R. V. not the same idea by any means.

"We have grace" instead of "let us have grace" R. V. one a statement of a fact, the other an exhortation, a very important difference; I think "Even though one God is" etc. instead of "For one God is," etc., a very different conclusion drawn it seems to me by the C. V. and R. V.

Dear Restitution:

I received your note, and had long been sorry that I could not send you some money. Times with us are very close. I have had very poor health for three years but this fall I was taken down with pneumonia, and for weeks my life was despaired of, and that made a great many additions to our expenses.

I cannot bear the thought of giving up my dear paper. If you can wait on me a little longer I will send you the money as soon as I can, and be thankful to you for the favor, and pray God to reward you for your kindness. I will close with good wishes to you and your work. May God's blessing rest upon you.

M. E. W.

[Here is an opportunity for some one who is able to spare a little. Of course the paper will be sent. Who will have the honor of paying for it?—ED.]

Dear Brethren and Sisters, of like precious faith:

This beautiful first day of the year. I let you know that I am still firm in the faith of the Gospel as preached to Abraham. Dear RESTITUTION, I cannot think of doing without you. Inclosed please find one dollar and fifty cents subscription for the year 1893. We are quite isolated, not hearing any preaching of the one faith, only what I do from time to time, and through THE RESTITUTION.

I publicly reviewed a Spiritual lecturer in our village of some 1500 inhabitants. Had a good hearing. I tried to show the people that Modern Spiritualism was a delusion and one of the latter day signs.

Oh, what a treat it is get our dear paper and hear from those of like faith. I am very much interested in the Bible Class, although I do not agree with all the conclusions arrived at.

Will some of the old ones in the faith, write a few articles on who will constitute the Bride of Christ. I like Brother Joblins views on the "Seed of the Woman." It has been my views for these many years. I am about twenty-six years old in the faith, and am still trying to grow in knowledge, and I trust in favor. May God's blessing be upon all those who are trying to spread the truth.

G. W. SMITH.

Dear Restitution:

I have been thinking today of Sister Harlan's letter, and oh, how true it is. We never fail to see good advice and words of encouragement in every one. How often resolves have been made and broken, just as our dear sister said. When we make resolves don't let us break them. Oh, let us be careful. I was just thinking today if the Lord would come tomorrow how many would be ready. Let us ask ourselves the question, are we trying to get ready? We ought to live every day as though we expected he would come the next. If we would do this would we not be ready? I was thinking today when I was lonely that the time was going to come, and not very far in the future, when parting and sad farewells will be known no more. Dear brothers and sisters, that is the time I long to see. When we will all be gathered together in one great family, never to be separated. Eternal life is worth striving for. We know it is promised to all those that prove faithful. Let us all try and be ready, for we know not what hour our Lord will come.

Yours in hope.

MRS. ALMUS ADAMS.

Dear Restitution:

Please find enclosed $1.50 to pay on my subscription for 1893, and 25 cents for Bro. Joblin's tract, which I will distribute among those not of our faith, or Abraham's faith. I have taken THE RESTITUTION nearly seven years, and shall continue to take it just as long as God furnishes me the means to pay for it. That with my Bible I prize above all other reading matter. I feel that I could not get along without it, as it is a source of great strength and comfort to me, situated as I am here away from all those of like precious faith. How I do wish that some one would come here to preach the Gospel as revealed in the Word of God, which Paul preached and shunned not to declare the whole council of God. Such sermons as Paul preached was compared to meat in due season to such as are of divine origin. How my soul longs to listen to one of that kind, or a "thus saith the Lord."

I have been to a few meetings whose preacher was a Free Methodist. I could hardly sit still and listen to such hollow mockery and vain repetitions. It made me think of the Heathen whom Elijah mocked when he said to them "to cry aloud, for he is a god, either he is talking, or he is pursuing, or on a journey, or peradventure he sleepeth, and must be awakened. I Kings xviii. 27.

O, how I felt to appreciate the goodness of God to me in revealing His Truth, and could only pray that he would open their blind eyes that they might see and understand the Scriptures and rightly divide the Word of Truth, and find rest unto their souls.

O, Brother and sister, when I listen to such false teaching, my soul is stirred within me, and I feel like crying out to one and all who have enlisted in this warfare, whose Captain is Christ the Lord, to arm yourselves, for the battle is mighty.

I feel that what we do must be done quickly. Let us all be watchmen on the walls of Zion, on the lookout for the enemy, lest he come unawares. I for one feel like waking up and trying to be more watchful and prayerful.

Asking the Lord to keep me that Satan tempt me not, and having my loins girt about with truth, having on the whole armor, with my lamp trimmed and burning, ready to meet my Lord at His soon coming and kingdom, is the prayer of your Sister,

MRS. E. D. W. CHURCH.

Dear Restitution:

Please find enclosed $2.25 for subscription for THE RESTITUTION. We like our paper too well to ever let it stop. We love so well to hear from our brothers and sisters scattered over the land. We often feel encouraged and built up from those letters. We have felt so isolated, for ten years we never heard a gospel sermon. All this time the so called churches, arguing and pleading for us to come to them and find homes, but we could find no foundation among them except that which was built upon the sand, but the Bible tells us that will not stand. Our little body has stood upon the rock of truth, and no one could push us off. Thanks to Him who even notes the sparrows' fall we now have a good preacher, Bro. John L. Winningham, who preaches for us once a month. We hope now to build up a congregation that can help to do the work till the Master comes.

Yours Sister in Christ,

MRS. SAMUEL HUFFMON.

Dear Restitution:

I think my time for THE RESTITUTION expired the first of this month; herewith I enclose draft for $1.50 to pay for 1893. I am glad you have got the harness on Bro. Joblin, hope he will not tire under it. There is point to his writings that suits me. I have taken THE RESTITUTION ever since it first started under the name of "Voice of Truth" edited by Elder Joseph Marsh.

Your Brother, in hope of eternal life when Jesus comes.

L. W. PAGE.

To all lovers of truth, Let us secure in tract form Bro. Joblin's excellent article on "Thief on the Cross." It will prove to be the best missionary work that can be put in the field. I have secured six names at 25 cents each. Do not miss this golden opportunity to demolish the "Gibraltar" of orthodoxy.

MARRIED

MARRIED, By Evangelist Joblin, at the home of the Bride's parents, 101 Sowtell Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio, Jan. 12th, 1893, Mr. Andrew H. Muson and Miss Addie Beardsley. The profusion of useful presents, together with a great number of cheerful faces, showed that the young couple were held in high esteem by a large circle of acquaintances.

Having decided to take the Word of God as the Man of their counsel, and to travel hand in hand to the goodly land we can hopefully commend them to God, and pray that heavens' choicest blessings may attend them through this life, and that they may finally reach the haven of everlasting rest and joy and peace.

Seeing Him Who is Invisable.

"As countless stars in midnight sky,
So shall thy seed unnumbered be:"
The heirless patriarch's upturned eye
No starry ray of hope could see.
Yet hopefully the path of faith he trod;
God spoke, and Abraham had faith in God.

That my Redeemer lives I know.
What though I never saw him yet?
If need be through the grave I go.
The glorifying glimpse to get
And still I'll gaze until my eyes grow dim;
Although He slay me, will I trust in Him.

Error's Productive Power.

Thoughts, like men, are intimately related and mutually dependent. As in both the organic and inorganic worlds things are related, so in the mental realm there is, as it were, between thoughts a tie of blood. The tree does not exist independent and alone, but bears a close relation to the congenial soil, and a relationship more remote to the placid stream. Neither do the dominating thoughts of life exist alone—they are the product of previous thoughts and mental conditions.

Now, relation presupposes production. To illustrate: the relation between the plant, and water, soil and sunshine suggests to our minds the idea of production, just as effect carries with it the thought of cause. Thoughts therefore, being related, have a certain producing or propagating power. How often the evil thought of imaginative youth is the venerable father of a host of corrupt thoughts rendering the moral nature of manhood a hideous deformity. But the analogy does not cease here; for we find that thoughts, as men, like congenial company; that is, good thoughts cannot live save in the company of good thoughts: and bad thoughts flee from the presence of noble thoughts. With error 'tis precisely the same. It possesses all the attributes peculiar to the things of which we have been speaking; that is, error likes congenial company: and if it cannot find it, it produces it by its natural law of increase. In this it bears a striking analogy to sin and disease. That both, if not rooted up, propagate with marvellous rapidity, stands unquestioned by any thoughtful man: yet the statement that error (and particularly religious error) has the same destructive tendency as these banes of humanity would be vigorously denied by that host of persons who, ruled by the spirit of the age, consider religious error a matter of trifling moment. Yet we deem this statement capable of the clearest proof: but at present are to confine ourselves to that particular attribute of error so manifest in these days, viz: its wonderful productive power.

The times furnish us a splendid, though sorrowful, illustration of this one of error's laws or tendencies. Well nigh one half of the Presbyterian Church, following Dr. Briggs and the Higher Criticism, have declared in favor of the progressive sanctification of the soul after death: and have denied to the Bible the dignity of being the only true authority for faith. For many years the error of believing in the soul's immortality seemed inactive, so to speak: but suddenly, under the warmth of Dr. Brigg's keen observing mind, it has become thrifty, bearing its own noxious fruit (progressive sanctification, etc.) But this is not at all unnatural when you consider the situation presented by the old error, An earnest thoughtful man believes in the soul's immortality; as the years wear away he sees that there are persons, who, owing to heredity, training and environment, have blunted sensibilities and dwarfed capabilities: whose souls, in this world, never reach that completeness essential to the enjoyment of heaven. He says within himself, it would be unfair to condemn such to eternal torments; and it is inconceivable that such a soul should be at once ushered into a realm without capacity for enjoying its spiritual pleasures. Hence this observer is led to think there must be an intermediate state for the soul's education and development. Could any conclusion be more natural or more inevitable for a thoughtful man. Its reasonableness was forced upon me the other day upon seeing a criminal on trial for his life. He was a forbidding looking negro, whose countenance indicated the predominance of the brute. The story of his life developed the fact that there was a taint of insanity in his family; that he was raised among the criminal and vicious: and that poverty, the most prolific cause of crime, had haunted him from birth. As I looked I found myself saying: "Depraved and wretched though you are, theology dignifies you with an immortal spirit. What will be done with you at death? Can it be possible that, handicapped by nature from birth, you will be condemned to eternal torments (man's sense of justice, to say nothing of God's would not permit this) or that you will be immediately taken to heaven, a place, they say, for perfected natures, where the enjoyments are of a spiritual sort? Thus it is that the thoughtful man, who harbors that venerable parent error, when confronted with cases of this character, is forced to accept the doctrine of progressive sanctification. Such an one must believe that doctrine, as taught Briggs, et al, for which he confesses he can find but little warrant in Scripture, or go through life with his sense of justice and fitness outraged. Accept the parent error and you are obliged to harbor its progeny. We may be assured that growth is the law of error's life just as it is the law of all abnormal things. The combined voices of nature, men and history, testify that error produces error as naturally as evil produces evil; yet as great and as fundamental as this error is, fancy with what majestic disdain a herald of our faith would be treated who approached Dr. Briggs and his followers with the message that man is entirely mortal in every department of his being; and that immortality, if attained, must come from some higher power. The treatment he would receive would certainly suggest another attribute which error and disease hold in common, viz: both may become chronic, that is, even error may be of such long standing that truth is powerless to affect it.

God having given us the truth, together with the glorious capability of receiving it, offers, in his Word no comfort to error—no haven, no repose. And pursuing in his Word his plan as seen in nature, he has decreed that truth alone shall "Sanctify" and make "free."

The Model Prayer—Commonly Called the Lord's Prayer.

The first, and most prominent feature is its comprehensiveness, although it does not go into the minutia of every thing, to be sought for, or to be invoked; but it is a general outline map. (so to speak) of what we need—what we really desire, and what is necessary, in order to secure eternal life in the kingdom of God, and of his dear Son.

Secondly; we notice its brevity. The Latin scholar would call it, "multum in parvo" or in plain English; much in little, or much in a small place. It would not, (as I should think) occupy more than one minute to read, or repeat it, and yet it comprehends more than many prayers we hear daily, which occupy, on an average perhaps fifteen or twenty minutes time. The Lord's prayer has nothing redundant is it; perfectly free from ostentation or show, or rhetorical flourishes, which are foreign to the very nature and province of prayer. Before proceeding further, it would be well to define what prayer is? for what was it instituted? It is in short, invoking aid from a superior power, for what we stand in need—invocation to a higher power, for blessings desired, but not yet received, closely allied to thanksgiving, for mercies and benefits received. Dependence is implied in this invocation; and faith also to be of any avail; for he that cometh to God, (through the medium of prayer) "must believe that He, (Jehovah) is, and that he is the rewarder of all those who put their trust in him." Children exemplify this principle, so that Christ has well said, that in order for one to enter, or inherit the Kingdom of Heaven, or Kingdom of God, we must be as little children, i. e., possess the characteristics which inhere in children. Children of larger growth would do well to imitate, and cultivate the principle of docility, of forgiveness, and all the lovely characteristics possessed by little children. It is an old adage—that "children and fools tell the truth." Falsehood does not appear to be an innate principle; it must be acquired by, or from older children, who took lessons from "the father of lies." Parents would do well to teach their children that our Heavenly Father abhors lying. Every avenue should be guarded with vigilence against the encroachments of the lying tongue.

Lying is one of the greatest crimes known in the criminal calander, and incurs one of the severest punishments, viz., non-inheritance in the Kingdom of God: also, the liar incurs the death the second death; from which there is no resurrection; therefore shun lying as you would the viper—the plague, or death. Let truth be interwoven into every fiber of our physical, mental and moral being—ingrained, so to speak, into our very nature. If it is not our original nature, let it become, as it were, a second nature. We never can possibly become assimilated to God our heavenly Father, to Jesus Christ, our elder brother, without truth, being or constituting part and parcel of our very being. "Pray without ceasing," and in every thing give thanks: this would seem to many rather paradoxical: but when we study closely "The Word of Truth," (the Bible) and more fully understand human nature, we are then prepared to give full faith and confidence in the same.

Secret prayer is more fully recognized and emphasized by Christ, than public prayer. Not by any means is the latter to be discarded: but the secret, silent prayer, is the key that unlocks Jehovah's storehouse, and the choicest blessings are diffused. Christ has enjoined upon us to use words in order to express our desires. "Say, (vocally express in words) "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." Thus we can see, that in one, or in both of the two ways prescribed, the praying without ceasing, can be carried out to the very letter of the command; without any clashing. Prayer the expression of desire. In the model or Lord's prayer, the answer, the bestowal of the gifts as an answer to the prayers of the people, are commensurate with their needs. We can not inform Jehovah of our needs or wants, for he knows them well, but he will be enquired of by his people to do those things for them, for which they stand in need, and it would seem to be almost unreasonable to expect his blessing without our first asking for it, although "he is good to the evil, and to be unthankful," and sendeth rain upon the just, and unjust, alike.

It is an axiom, and one of common sense too, that if a gift is good for any thing, it is certainly worth the asking for the same; and should not the desire be intensified for the kingdom of God to come, and his will to be done on earth as it is done in heaven? Let one read the xxiv. chapter of Matthew's Gospel, —the xiii. chapter of Mark, together with the xxi. chapter of Luke's Gospel, where in each of these narratives is the account of the overthrow of the Jewish commonwealth by the Romans, the destruction of their city and temple, and the continuation of the narrative down to the closing scene in the great drama of six thousand years. The history of the ante-deluvians and the repetition of their history in this closing scene of the drama; more particularly the signs of Christ's coming, are more graphically delineated. In the 25-28 verses Christ speaks of the signs in the sun, in the moon, and in the stars, and upon the earth, distress of nations with perplexity, the sea and the waves roaring (the new phenomena of the tidal waves). Man's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which shall come upon the earth. And the heavens shall be shaken, (the new discovery of the dynamite and other explosives) causing the distress of nations with perplexity. And then shall they see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh.

Until that auspicious day shall dawn, the desire will and must be intensified for Christ to come and the kingdom to be inaugurated. Then "the wicked will cease from troubling and the weary be at rest." "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly."

M. I. Lewis.

Youth's Column.

Scatter Seeds of Kindness.

There was never a golden sunbeam
That fell in a desolate place,
But left some trace of its presence
That time could never efface.
Not a song of ineffable sweetness
That ravished the listening ear,
Then slumbered in silence forgotten,
For many and many a year—

But a word or a tone might awaken
Its magical power anew,
Long after the sweet-voiced singer
Had faded from earthly view.
Nor a heart that was ever so weary,
Or tainted with sin and despair,
But a word of tender compassion
Might find an abiding-place there.

Yet countless thousands are yearning
For sympathy, kindness and love,
And souls are groping in darkness
Without one gleam from above.
There was never a sunbeam wasted,
Nor a song that was sung in vain,
And souls that seem lost in the shadows
A Savior's love may reclaim.

Then scatter the sunbeams of kindness,
Though your deeds may never be known,
The harvest will ripen in glory
If the seed be faithfully sown;
And life will close with a blessing,
And fade into endless day;
Like the golden hues of the sunbeam
That fade in the twilight gray.

The Broken Saw.

A boy went to live with a man who was accounted a hard master. He never kept his boys—they ran away or gave notice they meant to quit: so he was half his time without or in search of a boy. The work was not very hard, opening and sweeping out the shop, chopping wood, going errands, and helping round. At last Sam Fisher went to live with him.

"Sam's a good boy," said his mother.

"I should like to see a boy nowadays that had a spark of goodness in him," growled the new master.

It is always bad to begin with a man that has no confidence in you, because, do your best, you are likely to have little credit for it. However, Sam thought he would try. The wages were good and his mother wanted him to go. Sam had been there but three days before, in sawing a cross-grained stick of wood, he broke the saw. He was a little frightened. He knew he was careful, and he knew he was a pretty good sawyer, too, for a boy of his age; nevertheless, the saw broke in his hands.

"Mr. Jones will thrash you for it," said another boy who was in the wood-house with him.

"Why, of course, I didn't mean it; and accidents will happen to the best of folks," said Sam, looking with a very sorrowful air on the broken saw.

"Mr. Jones never makes allowances," said the other boy. "I never saw anything like him. That Bill might have stayed, only he jumped into a hen's nest and broke her eggs. He daren't tell it, but Mr. Jones kept suspecting and suspecting, and laid everything out of the way to Bill, whether Bill was to blame or not, till Bill couldn't stand it, and wouldn't."

"Did he tell Mr. Jones about the eggs?" asked Sam.

"No," said the boy; "he was afraid, Mr. Jones has got such a temper."

"I think he had better have owned up at once," said Sam.

"I suspect you'll find it better to preach than to practice," said the boy. "I'd run away before I'd tell him." And he soon turned on his heel and left poor Sam alone with his broken saw.

The poor boy did not feel very comfortable or happy. He shut up the wood house, walked out into the garden and went up to his little room under the eaves. He wished he could tell Mrs. Jones, but she wasn't sociable.

When Mr. Jones came into the house the boy heard him. He got up, crept downstairs and met Mr. Jones in the kitchen.

"Sir," said Sam, "I broke your saw, and I thought I'd come and tell you before you saw it in the morning."

"What did you get up to tell me for?" asked Mr. Jones. "I should think morning would be time enough to tell of your carelessness."

"Because," said Sam, "I was afraid if I put it off I might be tempted to lie about it. I am sorry I broke it, but I tried to be careful."

Mr. Jones looked at the boy from head to foot, then stretching out his hand, he said heartily:

"Sam, give me your hand; shake hands. I'll trust you, Sam. That's right, that's right. Go to bed, boy. Never fear. I'm glad the saw broke; it shows the mettle's in you. Go to bed."

Mr. Jones was fairly won. Never were better friends after that than Sam and he. Sam thinks justice had not been done Mr. Jones. If the boys had treated him honestly and "above board," he would have been a good man to deal with. It was their conduct which soured and made him suspicious. I do not know how that is. I only know that Sam Fisher finds in Mr. Jones a kind master and a faithful friend.

How We Love Life.

It is a true saying, "that all a man hath, he will give in exchange for his life." We see this fact demonstrated every day. If sickness lays hold upon us or our friends, and their life is in danger, we never fail to call the most skilled physician to be had, and try if possible to save the life of our dear ones.

Wealth is nothing to be compared with life and health. We would gladly give all earthly possessions for the precious boon of life. Why is this true? Simply because we love life. We dread death. Death is an enemy, a cruel enemy. He snatches the innocent babe from its mother's arms. He takes the young in the springtime of life. The rose tint upon the cheek he changes to the lily's hue. Death separates husbands and wives, parents and children, and one by one we lay them in the silent tomb. Young and old alike must give up their life, and take up their abode in the "Land of darkness, as darkness itself" "where there is no device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, for the dead know not anything."

Young friends, this is a sad dark picture is it not? Is there no hope? No ray of light shining through the darkness? Yes, listen! "God gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him might not perish but have everlasting life." Blessed thought, "God in his love and mercy has made a way whereby we may be saved," may attain unto a higher life, an everlasting life. By believing and and obeying his dear Son! My dear young friends, have you ever thought at what a great price everlasting life was purchased for us? The price paid was the life of God's dear Son. See him at the Mount of Olives, where he was in such agony, and prayed so earnestly that his sweat was as it were great drops of blood, falling to the ground. Hear him say: "Father, if thou be willing remove this cup, nevertheless, not my will but thine be done." See him mocked, scourged, spit upon, crowned with thorns, nailed to the cross, all this he suffered, and ere the last faint glimmer of life passed away, He cried: "It is finished, yes, finished." The price was paid. Yes my young friends, Jesus died, He arose from the grave crowned with immortality, and now he says, "Come unto me, I am the resurrection and the life." Believe, love, and obey the dear Savior, for He is coming, and if you have your life hid with Christ in God, when He comes you will be with Him, and if the cruel enemy should claim you, Jesus is the resurrection and the life, and all that sleep in their graves shall hear his voice and come forth. If you have believed on God's dear Son, and obeyed Him you will be made immortal, and receive the beautiful Crown of Life. Do not hesitate, but believe. To delay is to perish.

Berlin, Jan. 23.—During the discussion of the budget in commission to-day Robert von Kendell, Imperialist, who was Ambassador to Italy, said that the utterances of Chancellor von Caprivi, his own observations of the relations of the great powers, and some signs which should be intelligible to everybody acquainted with foreign policies, has convinced him that war is more imminent to-day than at any previous time in the last twenty years. Many things point to the probability that it cannot be deferred much after 1894.

Troops into Egypt.

London, Jan. 23.—It is officially announced that the British Government has decided upon a slight increase of the British troops in Egypt, in view of the fact that recent events have threatened to disturb the public security. The reinforcements to be sent to Egypt are not likely to exceed 1,000 troops and two warships for Alexandria and Port Said and one warship for Suez.

The Egyptian situation is assuming a gravity which for the time overwhelms in the public mind all other issues. Lord Rosebery has received telegraphic advices from Lord Cromer to the effect that the Khedive had intimated his intention to refer to the Turkish Sultan and to the treaty powers the action of England causing the dismissal of the Fakhri Cabinet. Other advices from Cairo state that the natives are in a more excited condition than at any time before since the outbreak under the leadership of Arabi Pasha. While a considerable party of the moderate and intelligent natives support the British position, the multitude take sides with the Khedive and against what they call infidel dictation.

Mr. Gladstone caused a Cabinet council to be called today to consider the Egyptian crisis. The Marquis of Ripon, Secretary for the Colonies, left a bed of sickness to be present at the Cabinet meeting. The council sat for two hours. While the council was in session a stream of telegrams continued to pour into the Foreign Office from Cairo. These were immediately transmitted to the Cabinet. When the Cabinet adjourned it was to reassemble at 4 o'clock p. m. The prolonged session of the Cabinet is understood to be due to a difference of opinion as to the necessity of reinforcing the British army of occupation in Egypt, both with a view to protecting British interests at Cairo and to protecting the frontier against the dervishes, who have recently become menacing.

A note reached Lord Rosebery Saturday from the French Foreign Office in relation to Egyptian affairs. The note stated that the French Government, while refraining from objecting to Riaz Pasha as Premier, would maintain the right of the Khedive to choose his Ministers.

The British force in Egypt numbered at the beginning of this year 3,400 men. Maj. Gen. Forestier Walker is in command. The whole Egyptian army, however, is indirectly under British control, about sixty British officers holding commands among the 10,000 native troops and Gen. F. W. Kitchner having control of the organization. The native troops have reached a high degree of efficiency under their English drillmasters.

Paris, Jan. 23.—A dispatch from Cairo states that the Sultan has telegraphed to the Khedive his congratulations on the attitude which the Khedive had assumed in respect to the formation of a Cabinet independently of English interference. The Sultan will send the Khedive a present of six horses.

Cairo, Jan. 23.—A correspondent had an interview today with Lord Cromer, the British representative in Egypt. In reply to questions about the situation Lord Cromer said: "There is no cause to apprehend a disturbance, but you are at liberty to say if a disturbance should occur I guarantee it would be of short duration." The Khedive denies any intention to dismiss British officials from the Egyptian service. Ismail Pasha's son, chief of the Khedive's military household, has resigned, but his resignation has not been accepted.

Governments Seeking Loans.

It is computed that during the ensuing twelve months various debtor governments of the world will be seeking loans aggregating over £100,000,000, and it is felt that no matter who succeeds or who fails there will be a heavy demand on London for gold. Bank rate is abnormally low for the moment, simply because Russia has temporarily ceased withdrawing gold. But protests against this dangerous optimism are already heard, and a general stiffening is likely to come with the new year. The Rothschilds estimate Russia's sum of gold on hand at £110,000,000, but it is carried between the Bank of Russia and the Imperial Treasury in such a mystifying way that figures can always be juggled from one account to the other, and withdrawals may commence any day.

The financial aspect of this great armed truce of Europe is indeed overshadowing all other phases. Practically every continental state is kicking its heels in the anteroom or hallway of the Rothschilds, or, having been warned away, is patrolling the street outside. It seems there is money enough. Even Russia could borrow, I believe, if willing to pay 5 per cent. But she clings doggedly to notions of a lower rate, and in other countries where the budgets are angrily audited by Parliaments, there is a blank dismay at the mounting totals of interest charges. It is these hopeless, crushing figures which are making social democrats all over Europe much more than the theories of human brotherhood and universal peace. Of specific political interest, aside from the somewhat meaningless squabble in France, there is little to note.

Editor Restitution:

I want to say that I am very much interested in "The Pine Wood's Bible Class," and especially in the "Man of Sin," who is to be destroyed by the coming of Christ.

I know our brethren do not all agree on this question, and I would be glad to hear anything that may be said on this question. I have been trying to learn all I can from the Bible on this subject. It seems to me that the vile person in Daniel is the real Man of Sin, or Antichrist, since he exalts himself above all that is called God, but I dont see as there is any temple in Jerusalem as yet for him to sit in, neither do I see that there was ever a temple in Rome, but I see in the time of the end the king of the south pushes at him, antichrist, and the king of the north comes against him like a whirlwind, he shall enter also into the glorious land, and he shall plant the tabernacles of his palace between the seas in the glorious holy mountain. There seems to be agents for the destruction of the Man of Sin, but Christ comes suddenly and all are destroyed together by the brightness of his coming. Is not this the time when God will be sanctified in the eyes of many nations?

I am still trying to walk in that straight and narrow path that leadeth unto life, and I hope by patient continuance in well-doing and the tender mercy of our God and our Lord Jesus Christ, to be enabled to enter the straight gate, into the land of promise, even that land whose inhabitants shall never say I am sick, even to that land promised to Abraham for an everlasting possession, for the promise that he should be heir of the world was not to Abraham or to his seed through the law, but through the righteousness of faith. So then if we have put on Christ by baptism and been made sons by adoption. Then are we heirs with him of the same promise.

Brothers and sisters, of the household of faith. I am looking forward to the grand consummation, when our heirship shall cease, and we shall be permitted to enter that glorious land. Oh, may we all have that faith that worketh by love and purifies the heart, for with this kind of faith there can be no mistake, and we shall be permitted to see the King in his beauty, and it will be glorious, it will be grand, and it will be eternal.

"Beware that thou forget not the Lord thy God, in not keeping his commandments and his judgments and his statutes, which I command you this day.

Lest when thou hast eaten and art full and hast built goodly houses, and dwelt therein;

And when thy herds and flocks multiply and thy silver and thy gold is multiplied, and all that thou hast is multiplied,

Then will thine heart be lifted up, and thou forget the Lord thy God."

The great Creator has promised to "love, to multiply and to bless," those who "hearken to his judgments and keep and do them."

We are "to distribute to the necessity of the saints," "to be hospitable," "to feed our enemies," and to give "wages" to our ministers that they may preach to other churches. Let us be faithful. The Lord is near at hand.

W. JOBLIN, Corresponding Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, FEB. 1, 1893.

WE have failed to receive the usual items from Bro. Joblin, and must go to press without them this week.

BRO. JOBLIN struck the key note when he appealed to the wide-awake among the brethren and sisters. One brother has sent us seventeen new names; and others are doing nobly.

"What the Truth Must do for Us."

In further elucidating this subject, we would remark that no revelation from God was ever made to Gentiles. His oracles were committed to the Jews. And from the promise that in Abraham and his seed all the families of the earth shall be blessed, till the closing words of the book of the Revelation to John, no change of Jehovah's programme was made. What we mean to say, is, that there is no later gospel to or for Gentiles; only one set of promises has been made; —only one hope has been set before men; there is no heaven above for Gentiles and a heaven below for Jews. Paul's statement in Gal. iii. 14 that Christ was made a curse for us that the blessing of Abraham might come upon the Gentiles, forever settles that matter. Will our readers bear this fact in mind while we show from the 14th verse of the 15th chapter of Acts that the Truth must take us out from the rest of mankind, and bestow upon us God's name. After Peter had spoken at the Jerusalem Conference. James said: "Simeon (Simon Peter) hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles to take out of them a people for his name." And we learn by what means God had commenced to do this, by the words of Peter in the 7th verse. He says: "Men and brethren, ye know how that a good while ago God made choice among us, that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the gospel and believe." James says they were to be taken out for his (God's) name, and Peter shows us the condition of election to this favor, viz: belief of the Gospel; but the commission under which Peter visited them, shows that he was only speaking in general terms now, for the Lord himself makes both belief and baptism conditions. Said he, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature; he that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved;" while Matthew's report is still more explicit, and more explanatory of the statement of James that the Gentiles were visited to take out of them a people for God's name. It says: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." This shows that the name is obtained when this act of obedience to the faith of the gospel is rendered. To be saved is to be redeemed from death and crowned with life—eternal, incorruptible, immortal, divine life,—God's life; so that those who attain to that most exalted state will possess both divine nature and the divine name. Believers—obedient believers, are graciously permitted to take the name in the adopting ordinance, when the old man is put off and the new man put on. This is, as it were, a pledge that as surely as the character and disposition is now changed, the nature shall be changed, if faithful to the end.

The Gentiles are visited with the gospel to take out of them a people for God's name. When thus taken out of the Gentiles, in one sense they are Gentiles no longer. They are still flesh and blood Gentiles as they were born but their minds being renewed, were not fleshly. When in Eph. ii. 11 the Spirit speaks of the past history of the saints at that place as "Gentiles in the flesh," it thus speaks of the mind; because the verses following show the difference between their past and present condition to be one of an intellectual, moral and legal character, as follows: "That at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world; but now, in Christ Jesus, ye who sometimes were far off, are made nigh by the blood of Christ." To what had the Gentiles been brought nigh by the blood of Christ? Nigh to the covenants of promise, nigh to the commonwealth of Israel.

But what was it that excluded Gentiles from the benefits offered in the covenants of promise? The answer is given by Paul in the second chapter of Ephesians and verses 14-22, and reads as follows: "For he is our peace who hath made both (Jews and Gentiles) one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us, having abolished in his flesh the enmity (between Jews and Gentiles) even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain (Jews and Gentiles,) one new man, so making peace; and that he might reconcile both unto God in one body by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby;" and came and preached peace to you which were afar off, and to them that were nigh; for through him we both (Jews and Gentiles) have access by one Spirit unto the Father: now, therefore, ye are no more strangers (to the covenants of promise) and foreigners (aliens from the commonwealth of Israel), but fellowcitizens with the saints, and of the household of God, and are built upon the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone, in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord; in whom ye are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit."

This was the happy condition of the Ephesians when the letter was addressed to them. What a contrast between their past and present. They had been taken out from among the rest of mankind to bear God's name. They had been brought into covenant relation to him, had been adopted into his family, and had access to him by one Spirit; were members of his household the household of faith (Gal. vi. 10.) at the head of which is Abraham, called the father of all them that believe; and named in the original will as joint-heir with the Anointed, Gal. iii. 16: heir of the world, Rom. iv. 13, is the way his blessing is expressed; and when we recall the fact that Christ was made a curse for us, that the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ, that we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith, Abraham's blessing is invested with an awful importance for us.

It is only from this point of view that we can realize why God visits us with the gospel to take us out of the Gentiles for his name. All the blessings stored up for man flow through, and are dispensed by Abraham and his seed. Tens of thousands read the promise that all the families of the earth are to be blessed in Abraham and his seed, with a veil over their eyes; but there stands the promise of him who cannot lie, and who changes not. Up to the advent of the seed, the offer to be blessed by Abraham and his seed was confined to the literal descendants of Abraham. The law fenced them in as a nation, beyond which the invitation did not extend. As we have learned from the second chapter of Ephesians, that the wall of partition between Jews and Gentiles was broken down by Christ, the cause of the enmity was slain, and the Gentiles were invited to share the blessing of Abraham.

To accept the offered blessing of Abraham is to leave the Gentile camp for that of the Jews. Jesus was born to be King of the Jews; the angel of God said he should have the throne of David and reign over the house of Jacob forever; and it is by means of this divine government that Abraham and his seed are to bless all the families of the earth. Is it any wonder that men and women have to be taken OUT of the Gentiles before they can become HEIRS OF A JEWISH KINGDOM? And is it not clear that all who reject the blessing of Abraham, or who are ignorant of it, comprise the Gentiles?

Romans ii. 29 shows that even a literal descendant of Abraham is not a Jew in the sense we are now speaking of Jews. Their descent from Abraham fleshwise does not entitle them to this blessing of Abraham. Like him they must believe the covenanted blessing, and live in reference to it; and this helps us to understand what Paul means by being Jews inwardly, Rom. ii. 28; and also in what sense some in the church at Smyrna claimed to be Jews, but were not. See Rev. ii. 9.

Be it remembered that the Ephesians in the past were without the Anointed One, because they knew nothing of the covenanted kingdom he was Anointed to be King of, and hence were aliens to Israel's commonwealth, and had nothing to hope for, and were without God in the world, because ignorant of his redemptive scheme; and that scheme could only be embraced by them when it was disclosed to them, and it could not be disclosed to them as Gentiles, till the law was abolished. The law was a provisional addition to the covenants made to Abraham. Abraham needed no law because he had faith, and lived a life of faith. His descendants 430 years later, did not have faith, and yet it was necessary to keep them from mixing with Gentiles, because that would have frustrated God's promise concerning the seed. So Paul says the law was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come, and having answered its purpose it was abolished. The abolition of the law left the covenants just as they were before there was any law; the sole source of future life and glory. The law, Paul tells us, did not interfere with the covenants while it did exist. The law was not given for salvation purposes, but to secure national and temporal benefits. There were some among the Israelites all down through the law period who believed the covenants of God to the fathers, and they composed the household of God; they were Jews inwardly who hoped for what God had promised—expected to share the blessing of Abraham.

It is a solemn truth that only those who believe what God covenants to give will share the blessing of Abraham. It most clearly says that the blessing of Abraham comes on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ, that we might receive the annunciation (Diaglott) of the Spirit through faith—through faith. Receive what annunciation of the Spirit through faith? Why the announcement that has just been made by the Spirit in Paul, that Christ was made a curse for us, "that the blessing of Abraham might come upon the Gentiles;" not heaven, or anything else.

People who do not receive that annunciation of the Spirit remain Gentiles. They are not taken out for God's name; they do not become fellowcitizens with the saints, to whom the faith was once delivered; and in view of this it is no wonder that Paul ceased not to warn every one night and day with tears for three years at Ephesus, because he foresaw that after his departure some would lower the standard of truth. How would our conduct comport with his if knowing the truth of God we condoned unbelief, and treated Gentiles in the flesh as if they were Jews inwardly. If, in addition to love for God and his truth, our senses be exercised by reason of use, we shall visit people with the gospel that takes OUT of the Gentiles a people for God's name. "He that hath my Word, let him speak my word faithfully." was said long ages ago, but it is binding still.

An Epistle to Hebrews. Chapter 12.

Therefore since we have also so great a cloud of testifiers (not eye-witnesses) lying around us, let us lay aside every hinderance and the sin that most easily besets us and run the contest that lies before us;

2. Looking away unto Jesus the chief-leader and finisher of our faith, who for the sake of the joy that lay before him, endured a cross and despised shame, and hath sat down at the right hand of the throne of God.

3. Consider moreover who he is who endured such a contradiction against himself at the instigation of obdurate sinners, that ye may not become weary and faint in your souls.

4. Ye have not yet withstood unto blood in your struggle against sin,

5. And ye have ignored the exhortation which is addressed to you as sons. My Son, Do not belittle the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when convicted by him:

6. For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and he scourgeth every son whom he accepteth.

7. If ye are under-going chastening God is bringing it unto you as sons. For what son is there whom a father doth not chasten?

8. But if ye be without chastening of which they all have become partakers, surely ye are bastards and not sons.

9. If then we have had our fathers of the flesh as chasteners and have given heed, shall we not much more subject ourselves to the Father of our spirits and live?

10. For they chastened us for a few days according to their way of thinking, but he for our profit, that we might become partakers of his sanctity.

11. No chastening for the time being seems joyous but grievous; but afterward it yieldeth a peaceable fruit of righteousness for those who have been exercised thereby.

12. Therefore straighten up your hands that hang down, and your knees that have become relaxed: and make correct circuits for your feet, that the lame may not be turned aside but healed.

14. Pursue after peace and the sanctification, without which no one will see the Lord.

15. Making it your care that no one is falling short of the grace of God, and that no root of bitterness is springing up and hindering, and many become polluted thereby:

16. That no one be a harlot nor an unconsecrated person, as was Hesau, who for once eating sold his birthright privileges.

17. For ye know that even when he desired to inherit the blessing afterwards, he was rejected as one that had been tried. For he found no place for repentance though he sought it with tears.

18. Moreover ye have not come unto a mountain that one must grope after, and that hath been burned with fire, and unto thick darkness and gloom and a tempest.

19. And an echo of a trumpet, and unto a sound of spoken words (oracular words; unto which those who had heard them asked that not a word should be added.

20. For they did not hear that which was being sent through, namely "And if a wild beast shall touch the mountain he shall be stoned to death."

21. And so fearful was the appearance of things that Mouses said, I am undone with fear and trembling:

22. But ye have come unto Mount Sion and a city of a living God, a heavenly Hierousalem and unto myriads of angels;

23. Unto a panagora (an assembly of the whole nation) and church of first-born ones written off in heaven, and unto God a judge of all, and unto spirits of justified ones who have been perfected,

24. And unto Jesous a mediator of a new covenant, and unto a blood of sprinkling that speaketh more efficiently than doth Abel.

25. See to it that ye do not ask the one who speaketh to be excused. For if they escape not who asked to be excused of the one who was speaking oracularly upon the earth, much more we who are turning away the one from heaven,

26. Whose voice then shook the earth, but who now hath announced saying yet once for all again I am going to shake not only the earth but the heavens also.

27. And this yet once for all again denoteth the translation (metathesis) of the things shaken as of things that have been made (or created) that are not being shaken may remain.

28. Therefore since we are receiving a kingdom that cannot be shaken we have grace, whereby we may serve God for hire in an acceptable way with respect and reverent fear,

29. Even though our God is a lavishly consuming fire.

COMMENT.

"Testifiers" or "martyrs" not eye-witnesses as one would infer from the C. V. and R. V.

"Lying around" (in their graves) not sitting around in a sky-amphitheatre looking down at the saints running a race, as this passage is commonly interpreted to mean.

"The sin that most easily besets us" instead of "so easily" C. V. and R. V.

"The contest that lies before us" instead of "the race that is set before us" C. V. and R. V.

"That lay before him" instead of "that was set before him." It lay and still lies before the whole human race, this struggle for the mastery namely. "Partakers of his sanctity" not "holiness" C. V. and R. V.

"Pursue" instead of "follow." The same word is frequently translated "persecute" and properly too. There is another word for "follow" in the ordinary sense.

"For one eating" instead of "for one mess of meat" R. V. for various reasons. In the first place it is literal, and true to the historical fact. Then what he ate was not "meat" in the strict sense of the word, but "soup" and the literal statement is much more significant and emphatic.

"His birth-right privileges" instead of "birth-right" merely, C. V. and R. V. as this word in the plural as it is here always has this signification in the Scriptures.

"He was rejected as one that had been tried" instead of merely "rejected" C. V. and R. V. This word is used of rejecting a spurious coin, and always implies a test applied before rejection or "rejected for want of value."

"That one must grope after" instead of "that might be touched" R. V. more significant of the fact and literal.

"Wild beast" instead of "beast" merely which would include the domestic animals C. V. and R. V.

"Myriads" instead of "an innumerable host" R. V. Myriads can be numbered.

"A panagora" instead of "the general assembly" which is too suggestive of Presbyterianism R. V. and C. V. A panagora under the "law" was an assembly of the whole nation as a church, called for some specific or general, purpose, as the regular recurring "pascha" celebration.

"Written off" that is off the records in heaven or copied, not "enrolled in" heaven R. V. It was customary to have the local records copied and taken to the capital city of a kingdom in those days, when a tax was to be levied or a levy of men to be made in war. This is the basis of the figure here used.

Sion or the New Hierousalem become the capitol of this kingdom and this a preliminary to a final levy for the purposes of the kingdom.

"Justified ones" instead of "just men" C. V. and R. V. If they were already "just" they would not have had to be "made perfect." Then Christ says he didn't come to call just people but sinners to repentance, and such people after they have accepted the call are properly understood to be and are justified persons.

"More efficiently" instead of "better" than Abel C. V. and R. V.

"Ask to be excused" instead of "refuse" C. V. and R. V. more graphic and true to fact moreover.

"Turning away him" instead of "turning away from him" C. V. and R. V.

"Yet once for all again" instead of "yet once more" C. V. and R. V. also true to fact and the "for all" a very important part of it.

"Translation" instead of "remove" R. V. not the same idea by any means.

"We have grace" instead of "let us have grace" R. V. one a statement of a fact, the other an exhortation, a very important difference; I think "Even though one God is" etc. instead of "For one God is," etc., a very different conclusion drawn it seems to me by the C. V. and R. V.

Dear Restitution:

I received your note, and had long been sorry that I could not send you some money. Times with us are very close. I have had very poor health for three years but this fall I was taken down with pneumonia, and for weeks my life was despaired of, and that made a great many additions to our expenses.

I cannot bear the thought of giving up my dear paper. If you can wait on me a little longer I will send you the money as soon as I can, and be thankful to you for the favor, and pray God to reward you for your kindness. I will close with good wishes to you and your work. May God's blessing rest upon you.

M. E. W.——

[Here is an opportunity for some one who is able to spare a little. Of course the paper will be sent. Who will have the honor of paying for it?—ED.]

Dear Brethren and Sisters, of like precious faith:

This beautiful first day of the year. I let you know that I am still firm in the faith of the Gospel as preached to Abraham. Dear RESTITUTION, I cannot think of doing without you. Inclosed please find one dollar and fifty cents subscription for the year 1893. We are quite isolated, not hearing any preaching of the one faith, only what I do from time to time, and through THE RESTITUTION.

I publicly reviewed a Spiritual lecturer in our village of some 1500 inhabitants. Had a good hearing. I tried to show the people that Modern Spiritualism was a delusion and one of the latter day signs.

Oh, what a treat it is get our dear paper and hear from those of like faith. I am very much interested in the Bible Class, although I do not agree with all the conclusions arrived at.

Will some of the old ones in the faith, write a few articles on who will constitute the Bride of Christ. I like Brother Joblins views on the "Seed of the Woman." It has been my views for these many years. I am about twenty-six years old in the faith, and am still trying to grow in knowledge, and I trust in favor. May God's blessing be upon all those who are trying to spread the truth.

G. W. SMITH.

Dear Restitution:

I have been thinking today of Sister Harlan's letter, and oh, how true it is. We never fail to see good advice and words of encouragement in every one. How often resolves have been made and broken, just as our dear sister said. When we make resolves don't let us break them. Oh, let us be careful. I was just thinking today if the Lord would come tomorrow how many would be ready. Let us ask ourselves the question, are we trying to get ready? We ought to live every day as though we expected he would come the next. If we would do this would we not be ready? I was thinking today when I was lonely that the time was going to come, and not very far in the future, when parting and sad farewells will be known no more. Dear brothers and sisters, that is the time I long to see. When we will all be gathered together in one great family, never to be separated. Eternal life is worth striving for. We know it is promised to all those that prove faithful. Let us all try and be ready, for we know not what hour our Lord will come.

Yours in hope.

MRS. ALMUS ADAMS.

Dear Restitution:

Please find enclosed $1.50 to pay on my subscription for 1893, and 25 cents for Bro. Joblin's tract, which I will distribute among those not of our faith, or Abraham's faith. I have taken THE RESTITUTION nearly seven years, and shall continue to take it just as long as God furnishes me the means to pay for it. That with my Bible I prize above all other reading matter. I feel that I could not get along without it, as it is a source of great strength and comfort to me, situated as I am here away from all those of like precious faith. How I do wish that some one would come here to preach the Gospel as revealed in the Word of God, which Paul preached and shunned not to declare the whole council of God. Such sermons as Paul preached was compared to meat in due season to such as are of divine origin. How my soul longs to listen to one of that kind, or a "thus saith the Lord."

I have been to a few meetings whose preacher was a Free Methodist. I could hardly sit still and listen to such hollow mockery and vain repetitions. It made me think of the Heathen whom Elijah mocked when he said to them "to cry aloud, for he is a god, either he is talking, or he is pursuing, or on a journey, or peradventure he sleepeth, and must be awakened. 1 Kings xviii. 27.

O, how I felt to appreciate the goodness of God to me in revealing His Truth, and could only pray that he would open their blind eyes that they might see and understand the Scriptures and rightly divide the Word of Truth, and find rest unto their souls.

O. Brother and sister, when I listen to such false teaching, my soul is stirred within me, and I feel like crying out to one and all who have enlisted in this warfare, whose Captain is Christ the Lord, to arm yourselves, for the battle is mighty.

I feel that what we do must be done quickly. Let us all be watchmen on the walls of Zion, on the lookout for the enemy, lest he come unawares. I for one feel like waking up and trying to be more watchful and prayerful.

Asking the Lord to keep me that Satan tempt me not, and having my loins girt about with truth, having on the whole armor, with my lamp trimmed and burning, ready to meet my Lord at His soon coming and kingdom, is the prayer of your Sister,

MRS. E. D. W. CHURCH.

Dear Restitution:

Please find enclosed $2.25 for subscription for THE RESTITUTION. We like our paper too well to ever let it stop. We love so well to hear from our brothers and sisters scattered over the land. We often feel encouraged and built up from those letters. We have felt so isolated, for ten years we never heard a gospel sermon. All this time the so called churches, arguing and pleading for us to come to them and find homes, but we could find no foundation among them except that which was built upon the sand, but the Bible tells us that will not stand. Our little body has stood upon the rock of truth, and no one could push us off. Thanks to Him who even notes the sparrows' fall we now have a good preacher, Bro. John L. Winningham, who preaches for us once a month. We hope now to build up a congregation that can help to do the work till the Master comes.

Yours Sister in Christ.

Dear Restitution:

I think my time for THE RESTITUTION expired the first of this month; herewith I enclose draft for $1.50 to pay for 1893. I am glad you have got the harness on Bro. Joblin, hope he will not tire under it. There is point to his writings that suits me. I have taken THE RESTITUTION ever since it first started under the name of "Voice of Truth" edited by Elder Joseph Marsh.

Your Brother, in hope of eternal life when Jesus comes.

L. W. PAGE.

To all lovers of truth, Let us secure in tract form Bro. Joblin's excellent article on "Thief on the Cross." It will prove to be the best missionary work that can be put in the field. I have secured six names at 25 cents each. Do not miss this golden opportunity to demolish the "Gibraltar" of orthodoxy.

MARRIED

MARRIED, By Evangelist Joblin, at the home of the Bride's parents, 101 Sawtell Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio, Jan. 12th, 1893, Mr. Andrew H. Mason and Miss Addie Beardsley. The profusion of useful presents, together with a great number of cheerful faces, showed that the young couple were held in high esteem by a large circle of acquaintances.

Having decided to take the Word of God as the Man of their counsel, and to travel hand in hand to the goodly land we can hopefully commend them to God, and pray that heavens' choicest blessings may attend them through this life, and that they may finally reach the haven of everlasting rest and joy and peace.

Seeing Him Who is Invisable.

"As countless stars in midnight sky,
So shall thy seed unnumbered be!"
The heirless patriarch's upturned eye
No starry ray of hope could see.
Yet hopefully the path of faith he trod:
God spoke; and Abraham had faith in God.

That my Redeemer lives I know.
What though I never saw him yet!
If need be through the grave I go,
The glorifying glimpse to get.
And still I'll pray until my eyes grow dim,
Although He slay me, will I trust in Him.

Error's Productive Power.

Thoughts, like men, are intimately related and mutually dependent. As in both the organic and inorganic worlds things are related, so in the mental realm there is, as it were, between thoughts a tie of blood. The tree does not exist independent and alone, but bears a close relation to the congenial soil, and a relationship more remote to the placid stream. Neither do the dominating thoughts of life exist alone—they are the product of previous thoughts and mental conditions.

Now, relation presupposes production. To illustrate: the relation between the plant, and water, soil and sunshine suggests to our minds the idea of production, just as effect carries with it the thought of cause. Thoughts, therefore, being related, have a certain producing or propagating power. How often the evil thought of imaginative youth is the venerable father of a host of corrupt thoughts rendering the moral nature of manhood a hideous deformity. But the analogy does not cease here; for we find that thoughts, as men, like congenial company; that is, good thoughts cannot live save in the company of good thoughts: and bad thoughts flee from the presence of noble thoughts. With error 'tis precisely the same. It possesses all the attributes peculiar to the things of which we have been speaking; that is, error likes congenial company: and if it cannot find it, it produces it by its natural law of increase. In this it bears a striking analogy to sin and disease. That both, if not rooted up, propagate with marvellous rapidity, stands unquestioned by any thoughtful man: yet the statement that error (and particularly religious error) has the same destructive tendency as these banes of humanity would be vigorously denied by that host of persons who, ruled by the spirit of the age, consider religious error a matter of trifling moment. Yet we deem this statement capable of the clearest proof: but at present are to confine ourselves to that particular attribute of error so manifest in these days, viz: its wonderful productive power.

The times furnish us a splendid, though sorrowful, illustration of this one of error's laws or tendencies. Well nigh one half of the Presbyterian Church, following Dr. Briggs and the Higher Criticism, have declared in favor of the progressive sanctification of the soul after death: and have denied to the Bible the dignity of being the only true authority for faith. For many years the error of believing in the soul's immortality seemed inactive, so to speak: but suddenly, under the warmth of Dr. Brigg's keen observing mind, it has become thrifty, bearing its own noxious fruit (progressive sanctification, etc.) But this is not at all unnatural when you consider the situation presented by the old error. An earnest thoughtful man believes in the soul's immortality; as the years wear away he sees that there are persons, who, owing to heredity, training and environment, have blunted sensibilities and dwarfed capabilities: whose souls, in this world, never reach that completeness essential to the enjoyment of heaven. He says within himself, it would be unfair to condemn such to eternal torments: and it is inconceivable that such a soul should be at once ushered into a realm without capacity for enjoying its spiritual pleasures. Hence this observer is led to think there must be an intermediate state for the soul's education and development. Could any conclusion be more natural or more inevitable for a thoughtful man. Its reasonableness was forced upon me the other day upon seeing a criminal on trial for his life. He was a forbidding looking negro, whose countenance indicated the predominance of the brute. The story of his life developed the fact that there was a taint of insanity in his family; that he was raised among the criminal and vicious: and that poverty, the most prolific cause of crime, had haunted him from birth. As I looked I found myself saying: "Depraved and wretched though you are, theology dignifies you with an immortal spirit. What will be done with you at death? Can it be possible that, handicapped by nature from birth, you will be condemned to eternal torments (man's sense of justice, to say nothing of God's would not permit this) or that you will be immediately taken to heaven, a place, they say, for perfected natures, where the enjoyments are of a spiritual sort? Thus it is that the thoughtful man, who harbors that venerable parent error, when confronted with cases of this character, is forced to accept the doctrine of progressive sanctification. Such an one must believe that doctrine, as taught Briggs, et al, for which he confesses he can find but little warrant in Scripture, or go through life with his sense of justice and fitness outraged. Accept the parent error and you are obliged to harbor its progeny. We may be assured that growth is the law of error's life just as it is the law of all abnormal things. The combined voices of nature, men and history, testify that error produces error as naturally as evil produces evil; yet as great and as fundamental as this error is, fancy with what majestic disdain a herald of our faith would be treated who approached Dr. Briggs and his followers with the message that man is entirely mortal in every department of his being; and that immortality, if attained, must come from some higher power. The treatment he would receive would certainly suggest another attribute which error and disease hold in common, viz: both may become chronic, that is, even error may be of such long standing that truth is powerless to affect it.

God having given us the truth, together with the glorious capability of receiving it, offers, in his Word no comfort to error—no haven, no repose. And pursuing in his Word his plan as seen in nature, he has decreed that truth alone shall "Sanctify" and make "free."

The Model Prayer—Commonly Called the Lord's Prayer.

The first, and most prominent feature is its comprehensiveness, although it does not go into the minutia of every thing, to be sought for, or to be invoked; but it is a general outline map, (so to speak) of what we need—what we really desire, and what is necessary, in order to secure eternal life in the kingdom of God, and of his dear Son.

Secondly; we notice its brevity. The Latin scholar would call it, "multum in parvo" or in plain English; much in little, or much in a small place. It would not, (as I should think) occupy more than one minute to read, or repeat it, and yet it comprehends more than many prayers we hear daily, which occupy, on an average perhaps fifteen or twenty minutes time. The Lord's prayer has nothing redundant is it: perfectly free from ostentation or show, on rhetorical flourishes, which are foreign to the very nature and province of prayer. Before proceeding further, it would be well to define what prayer is? for what was it instituted? It is in short, invoking aid from a superior power, for what we stand in need—invocation to a higher power, for blessings desired, but not yet received, closely allied to thanksgiving, for mercies and benefits received. Dependence is implied in this invocation; and faith also to be of any avail; for he that cometh to God, (through the medium of prayer) "must believe that He, (Jehovah) is, and that he is the rewarder of all those who put their trust in him." Children exemplify this principle, so that Christ has well said, that in order for one to enter, or inherit, the Kingdom of Heaven, or Kingdom of God, we must be as little children, i. e., possess the characteristics which inhere in children. Children of larger growth would do well to imitate, and cultivate the principle of docility, of forgiveness, and all the lovely characteristics possessed by little children. It is an old adage—that "children and fools tell the truth." Falsehood does not appear to be an innate principle; it must be acquired by, or from older children, who took lessons from "the father of lies." Parents would do well to teach their children that our Heavenly Father abhors lying. Every avenue should be guarded with vigilence against the encroachments of the lying tongue.

Lying is one of the greatest crimes known in the criminal calender, and incurs one of the severest punishments, viz., non-inheritance in the Kingdom of God: also, the liar incurs the death—the second death; from which there is no resurrection; therefore shun lying as you would the viper—the plague, or death. Let truth be interwoven into every fiber of our physical, mental and moral being—ingrained, so to speak, into our very nature. If it is not our original nature, let it become, as it were, a second nature. We never can possibly become assimilated to God our heavenly Father, to Jesus Christ, our elder brother, without truth, being or constituting part and parcel of our very being. "Pray without ceasing," and in every thing give thanks: this would seem to many rather paradoxical: but when we study closely "The Word of Truth," (the Bible) and more fully understand human nature, we are then prepared to give full faith and confidence in the same.

Secret prayer is more fully recognized and emphasized by Christ, than public prayer. Not by any means is the latter to be discarded: but the secret, silent prayer, is the key that unlocks Jehovah's storehouse, and the choicest blessings are diffused. Christ has enjoined upon us to use words in order to express our desires. "Say, (vocally express in words) "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." Thus we can see, that in one, or in both of the two ways prescribed, the praying without ceasing, can be carried out to the very letter of the command; without any clashing. Prayer the expression of desire. In the model or Lord's prayer, the answer, the bestowal of the gifts as an answer to the prayers of the people, are commensurate with their needs. We can not inform Jehovah of our needs or wants, for he knows them well, but he will be enquired of by his people to do those things for them, for which they stand in need, and it would seem to be almost unreasonable to expect his blessing without our first asking for it, although "he is good to the evil, and to be unthankful," and sendeth rain upon the just, and unjust, alike.

It is an axiom, and one of common sense too, that if a gift is good for any thing, it is certainly worth the asking for the same; and should not the desire be intensified for the kingdom of God to come, and his will to be done on earth as it is done in heaven? Let one read the xxiv. chapter of Matthew's Gospel, —the xiii. chapter of Mark, together with the xxi. chapter of Luke's Gospel, where in each of these narratives is the account of the overthrow of the Jewish commonwealth by the Romans, the destruction of their city and temple, and the continuation of the narrative down to the closing scene in the great drama of six thousand years. The history of the ante-deluvians and the repetition of their history in this closing scene of the drama; more particularly the signs of Christ's coming, are more graphically delineated. In the 25-28 verses Christ speaks of the signs in the sun, in the moon, and in the stars, and upon the earth, distress of nations with perplexity, the sea and the waves roaring (the new phenomena of the tidal waves). Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which shall come upon the earth. And the heavens shall be shaken, (the new discovery of the dynamite and other explosives) causing the distress of nations with perplexity. And then shall they see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh.

Until that auspicious day shall dawn, the desire will and must be intensified for Christ to come and the kingdom to be inaugurated. Then "the wicked will cease from troubling and the weary be at rest." "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly."

Scatter Seeds of Kindness.

There was never a golden sunbeam
That fell on a desolate place,
But left some trace of its presence
That time could never efface,
Not a song of ineffable sweetness
That ravished the listening ear,
Then slumbered in silence forgotten,
For many and many a year—

But a word or a tone might awaken
Its magical power anew,
Long after the sweet-voiced singer
Had faded from earthly view.
Nor a heart that was ever so weary,
Or tainted with sin and despair,
But a word of tender compassion
Might find an abiding-place there.

Yet countless thousands are yearning
For sympathy, kindness and love,
And souls are groping in darkness
Without our gleam from above.
There was never a sunbeam wasted,
Nor a song that was sung in vain,
And souls that were lost in the shadows
A Savior's love may reclaim.

Then scatter the sunbeams of kindness,
Though your deeds may never be known,
The harvest will ripen in glory
If the seed be faithfully sown;
And life will close with a blessing,
And fade into endless day;
Like the golden hues of the sunbeam
That fade in the twilight gray.

The Broken Saw.

A boy went to live with a man who was accounted a hard master. He never kept his boys—they ran away or gave notice they meant to quit; so he was half his time without or in search of a boy. The work was not very hard, opening and sweeping out the shop, chopping wood, going errands, and helping round. At last Sam Fisher went to live with him.

"Sam's a good boy," said his mother.

"I should like to see a boy nowadays that had a spark of goodness in him," growled the new master.

It is always bad to begin with a man that has no confidence in you, because, do your best, you are likely to have little credit for it. However, Sam thought he would try. The wages were good and his mother wanted him to go. Sam had been there but three days before, in sawing a cross-grained stick of wood, he broke the saw. He was a little frightened. He knew he was careful, and he knew he was a pretty good sawyer, too, for a boy of his age; nevertheless, the saw broke in his hands.

"Mr. Jones will thrash you for it," said another boy who was in the wood-house with him.

"Why, of course, I didn't mean it; and accidents will happen to the best of folks," said Sam, looking with a very sorrowful air on the broken saw.

"Mr. Jones never makes allowances," said the other boy. "I never saw anything like him. That Bill might have stayed, only he jumped into a hen's nest and broke her eggs. He daren't tell it, but Mr. Jones kept suspecting and suspecting, and laid everything out of the way to Bill, whether Bill was to blame or not, till Bill couldn't stand it, and wouldn't."

"Did he tell Mr. Jones about the eggs?" asked Sam.

"No," said the boy; "he was afraid, Mr. Jones has got such a temper."

"I think he had better have owned up at once," said Sam.

"I suspect you'll find it better to preach than to practice," said the boy. "I'd run away before I'd tell him." And he soon turned on his heel and left poor Sam alone with his broken saw.

The poor boy did not feel very comfortable or happy. He shut up the wood house, walked out into the garden and went up to his little room under the eaves. He wished he could tell Mrs. Jones, but she wasn't sociable.

When Mr. Jones came into the house the boy heard him. He got up, crept downstairs and met Mr. Jones in the kitchen.

"Sir," said Sam, "I broke your saw, and I thought I'd come and tell you before you saw it in the morning."

"What did you get up to tell me for?" asked Mr. Jones. "I should think morning would be time enough to tell of your carelessness."

"Because," said Sam, "I was afraid if I put it off I might be tempted to lie about it. I am sorry I broke it, but I tried to be careful."

Mr. Jones looked at the boy from head to foot, then stretching out his hand, he said heartily:

"Sam, give me your hand; shake hands. I'll trust you, Sam. That's right, that's right. Go to bed, boy. Never fear. I'm glad the saw broke; it shows the mettle's in you. Go to bed."

Mr. Jones was fairly won. Never were better friends after that than Sam and he. Sam thinks justice had not been done Mr. Jones. If the boys had treated him honestly and "above board," he would have been a good man to deal with. It was their conduct which soured and made him suspicious. I do not know how that is. I only know that Sam Fisher finds in Mr. Jones a kind master and a faithful friend.

How We Love Life.

It is a true saying, "that all a man hath, he will give in exchange for his life." We see this fact demonstrated every day. If sickness lays hold upon us or our friends, and their life is in danger, we never fail to call the most skilled physcian to be had, and try if possible to save the life of our dear ones.

Wealth is nothing to be compared with life and health. We would gladly give all earthly possessions for the precious boon of life. Why is this true? Simply because we love life. We dread death. Death is an enemy, a cruel enemy. He snatches the innocent babe from its mother's arms. He takes the young in the springtime of life. The rose tint upon the cheek he changes to the lily's hue. Death separates husbands and wives, parents and children, and one by one we lay them in the silent tomb. Young and old alike must give up their life, and take up their abode in the "Land of darkness, as darkness itself" "where there is no device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, for the dead know not anything."

Young friends, this is a sad dark picture is it not? Is there no hope? No ray of light shining through the darkness? Yes, listen! "God gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him might not perish but have everlasting life." Blessed thought, "God in his love and mercy has made a way whereby we may be saved," may attain unto a higher life, an everlasting life. By believing and and obeying his dear Son! My dear young friends, have you ever thought at what a great price overlasting life was purchased for us? The price paid was the life of God's dear Son. See him at the Mount of Olives, where he was in such agony, and prayed so earnestly that his sweat was as it were great drops of blood, falling to the ground. Hear him say: "Father, if thou be willing remove this cup, nevertheless, not my will but thine be done." See him mocked, scourged, spit upon, crowned with thorns, nailed to the cross, all this he suffered, and ere the last faint glimmer of life passed away, He cried: "It is finished, yes, finshed." The price was paid. Yes my young friends, Jesus died, He arose from the grave crowned with immortality, and now he says, "Come unto me, I am the resurrection and the life." Believe, love, and obey the dear Savior, for He is coming, and if you have your life hid with Christ in God, when He comes you will be with Him, and if the cruel enemy should claim you, Jesus is the resurrection and the life, and all that sleep in their graves shall hear his voice and come forth. If you have believed on God's dear Son, and obeyed Him you will be made immortal, and receive the beautiful Crown of Life. Do not hesitate, but believe. To delay is to perish.

BERLIN, Jan. 28.—During the discussion of the budget in commission to-day Robert von Kendell, Imperialist, who was Ambassador to Italy, said that the utterances of Chancellor von Caprivi, his own observations of the relations of the great powers, and some signs which should be intelligible to everybody acquainted with foreign policies, has convinced him that war is more imminent to-day than at any previous time in the last twenty years. Many things point to the probability that it cannot be deferred much after 1894.

Troops into Egypt.

LONDON, Jan. 28.—It is officially announced that the British Government has decided upon a slight increase of the British troops in Egypt, in view of the fact that recent events have threatened to disturb the public security. The reinforcements to be sent to Egypt are not likely to exceed 1,000 troops and two warships for Alexandria and Port Said and one warship for Suez.

The Egyptian situation is assuming a gravity which for the time overwhelms in the public mind all other issues. Lord Rosebery has received telegraphic advices from Lord Cromer to the effect that the Khedive had intimated his intention to refer to the Turkish Sultan and to the treaty powers the action of England causing the dismissal of the Fakhri Cabinet. Other advices from Cairo state that the natives are in a more excited condition than at any time before since the outbreak under the leadership of Arabi Pasha. While a considerable party of the moderate and intelligent natives support the British position, the multitude take sides with the Khedive and against what they call infidel dictation.

Mr. Gladstone caused a Cabinet council to be called today to consider the Egyptian crisis. The Marquis of Ripon, Secretary for the Colonies, left a bed of sickness to be present at the Cabinet meeting. The council sat for two hours. While the council was in session a stream of telegrams continued to pour into the Foreign Office from Cairo. These were immediately transmitted to the Cabinet. When the Cabinet adjourned it was to reassemble at 4 o'clock p. m. The prolonged session of the Cabinet is understood to be due to a difference of opinion as to the necessity of reinforcing the British army of occupation in Egypt, both with a view to protecting British interests at Cairo and to protecting the frontier against the dervishes, who have recently become menacing.

A note reached Lord Rosebery Saturday from the French Foreign Office in relation to Egyptian affairs. The note stated that the French Government, while refraining from objecting to Riaz Pasha as Premier, would maintain the right of the Khedive to choose his Ministers.

—The British force in Egypt numbered at the beginning of this year 3,400 men. Maj. Gen. Forestier Walker is in command. The whole Egyptian army, however, is indirectly under British control, about sixty British officers holding commands among the 10,000 native troops and Gen. F. W. Kitchener having control of the organization. The native troops have reached a high degree of efficiency under their English drillmasters.

PARIS, Jan. 23.—A dispatch from Cairo states that the Sultan has telegraphed to the Khedive his congratulations on the attitude which the Khedive had assumed in respect to the formation of a Cabinet independently of English interference. The Sultan will send the Khedive a present of six horses.

CAIRO, Jan. 23.—A correspondent had an interview today with Lord Cromer, the British representative in Egypt. In reply to questions about the situation Lord Cromer said: "There is no cause to apprehend a disturbance, but you are at liberty to say if a disturbance should occur I guarantee it would be of short duration." The Khedive denies any intention to dismiss British officials from the Egyptian service. Ismail Pasha's son, chief of the Khedive's military household, has resigned, but his resignation has not been accepted.

Governments Seeking Loans

It is computed that during the ensuing twelve months various debtor governments of the world will be seeking loans aggregating over £100,000,000, and it is felt that no matter who succeeds or who fails there will be a heavy demand on London for gold. Bank rate is abnormally low for the moment, simply because Russia has temporarily ceased withdrawing gold. But protests against this dangerous optimism are already heard, and a general stiffening is likely to come with the new year. The Rothschilds estimate Russia's sum of gold on hand at $113,000,000, but it is carried between the Bank of Russia and the Imperial Treasury in such a mystifying way that figures can always be juggled from one account to the other, and withdrawals may commence any day.

The financial aspect of this great armed truce of Europe is indeed overshadowing all other phases. Practically every continental state is kicking its heels in the anteroom or hallway of the Rothschilds, or, having been warned away, is patrolling the street outside. It seems there is money enough. Even Russia could borrow, I believe, if willing to pay 5 per cent. But she clings doggedly to notions of a lower rate, and in other countries where the budgets are angrily audited by Parliaments, there is a blank dismay at the mounting totals of interest charges. It is these hopeless, crushing figures which are making social democrats all over Europe much more than the theories of human brotherhood and universal peace. Of specific political interest, aside from the somewhat meaningless squabble in France, there is little to note.

Editor Restitution:

I want to say that I am very much interested in "The Pine Wood's Bible Class," and especially in the "Man of Sin," who is to be destroyed by the coming of Christ.

I know our brethren do not all agree on this question, and I would be glad to hear anything that may be said on this question. I have been trying to learn all I can from the Bible on this subject. It seems to me that the vile person in Daniel is the real Man of Sin, or Antichrist, since he exalts himself above all that is called God, but I dont see as there is any temple in Jerusalem as yet for him to sit in, neither do I see that there was ever a temple in Rome, but I see in the time of the end the king of the south pushes at him, antichrist, and the king of the north comes against him like a whirlwind, he shall enter also into the glorious land, and he shall plant the tabernacles of his palace between the seas in the glorious holy mountain. There seems to be agents for the destruction of the Man of Sin, but Christ comes suddenly and all are destroyed together by the brightness of his coming. Is not this the time when God will be sanctified in the eyes of many nations?

I am still trying to walk in that straight and narrow path that leadeth unto life, and I hope by patient continuance in well-doing and the tender mercy of our God and our Lord Jesus Christ, to be enabled to enter the straight gate, into the land of promise, even that land whose inhabitants shall never say I am sick, even to that land promised to Abraham for an everlasting possession for the promise that he should be heir of the world was not to Abraham or to his seed through the law, but through the righteousness of faith. So then if we have put on Christ by baptism and been made sons by adoption. Then are we heirs with him of the same promise.

Brothers and sisters, of the household of faith. I am looking forward to the grand consummation, when our heirship shall cease, and we shall be permitted to enter that glorious land. Oh, may we all have that faith that worketh by love and purifies the heart, for with this kind of faith there can be no mistake, and we shall be permitted to see the King in his beauty, and it will be glorious, it will be grand, and it will be eternal.

"Beware that thou forget not the Lord thy God, in not keeping his commandments and his judgments and his statutes, which I command you this day.

Lest when thou hast eaten and art full and hast built goodly houses, and dwelt therein;

And when thy herds and flocks multiply and thy silver and thy gold is multiplied, and all that thou hast is multiplied,

Then will thine heart be lifted up, and thou forget the Lord thy God."

The great Creator has promised to "love, to multiply and to bless," those who "hearken to his judgments and keep and do them."

We are "to distribute to the necessity of the saints," "to be hospitable," "to feed our enemies," and to give "wages" to our ministers that they may preach to other churches. Let us be faithful. The Lord is near at hand.

Nebuchadnezzar's Religion and the Image of his Dream.

Numa Pompilius, instituted the religion of Rome.it was that of Babylon! But from the time of Numa to that of Attalus, there is a long stretch of years. The kingly form of the government has changed to republican. No one can accept and exercise the functions of Attalus, until it becomes imperial. "Julius Cesar wades through rivers of blood to dominion." He is made Pontifix Maximus, is declared emperor, declares himself a descendant of Venus, and is worshipped as a god! The religion of Nebuchadnezzar is at Rome, its throne-seat is there, and again is Nebuchadnezzar its head! The king-priesthood has come down, unbroken from Nebuchadnezzar to the Cesars, it will come down later still, it will endure to the time of the end.

Augustus Cesar comes to the throne and Jesus is born. It is in the time of Herod, whose office and dignity has come from the Cesars. The Cesars are only counterfeit Christs, but here is one whom the wise men say is "born king of the Jews,"—the real priest-king of prophecy and of promise. Herod makes enquiry of the chief-priests and scribes, and finds that it is indeed the case, that Jesus has been born under the very circumstances foretold at Bethlehem.

If he lives, the dominion of the world, now the heritage of the [illegible], will pass over to him, and Herod's crown will go with it; he must be destroyed. The plot fails, the children of Bethlehem are slain, but Jesus escapes.

Satan now approaches Jesus, with the tempting offer of "all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them, if he will but fall down and worship him." He has approached many another with the same bait and has been successful. He has seduced the kings of Israel and of Judah, but here his project fails. The only answer is "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." Jesus proves loyal to the Father "the devil leaveth him" to concoct another plan.

Babylon had its fiery furnaces and lions' dens, for heretics, and Rome must not be behind. Jesus is put to death, but despite the opposition of Satan, his religion spreads. It threatens to overturn the whole Babylonian system with these glorious words "eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord!" Ten million martyrs fall, but others sieze the standard and bear it on. "The wages of sin is death," is the battle cry. There will soon be no subjects left to Satan, if these doctrines prevail; he must work more craftily yet, if he would overcome.

By some wily strategem he must capture the leaders of the church, and the laity can be flattered or driven into line. Seven of the Christian Emperors are entrapped. They retain the office and functions of the idolatrous high-priesthood and are sovereign Pontiffs, among the pagan priests, while in Christian assemblies, they are but private members.

There are large churches in both the Latin and Greek empires. The Patriarch of Constantinople, and the Bishop of Rome, are disputing for primacy. The Greek emperor decides the dispute, in favor of the pope of Rome, and Damasus is elected Pontifex Maximus A. D. 366.

It seems to be a new image that the beast, with the lamb-like horns has caused them that dwell on the earth to make to the beast that had the wound with the sword and did live." But its old friends recognize it at once, and flock into the church in crowds. The man—the Nebuchadnezzar, heads up, in his priestly office, the professed church of Christ! "All the old deities come in under the new name of "saints." The Virgin Mary takes the place of the Babylon Mylitta, and the pope, that of Baal. The celibate priesthood, the vestal virgins, the cakes of the sun, the pagan, initatory baptism, the beads, impure rites, tonsure, vestments, confessions, absolution, are all brought over and Christianized.

The worship is idolatrous, but the image is so adroitly made, that it looks Christian-like, and the Christians, like the pagans accept it.

Both sides are deceived. There are fierce disputes and great councils are convened. Doctrines are questioned as being contrary to the word of God, but error after error creeps in, until little is left to the church of the pure Gospel of Christ, and having become heathen in faith, and in form, she takes the character of the Pagan, she becomes impious, blasphemous, persecuting and desperately wicked. Her church government, modeled after the civil government, gives her a still farther and more striking likeness to the Babylonian Beast, after which she has been so carefully modeled. The hand of the sculptor who wrought her, was a master hand. Never was marble chipped into the statue of a hero, with such painstaking exactitude.

Instead of the emperor, she has her Pope, exercising the same functions, the same imperial power, as the Cesars —in place of the governors of provinces, she has her bishops, —for the senators, her cardinals, for the augurs, her priestly workers of miracles, —and like Nebuchadnezzar's tree, she overtops and shadows all civil governments, —her power is above that of kings. They, like beasts, lie under the tree. The members of the secret fraternities of the gods had their distinguishing marks engraved on the forehead or hand. No one understood these marks but the initiated. Those who belonged to Bacchus had an ivy leaf; to Jupiter, the name [illegible].

The Roman church had her mark. She took the name of the Roman kingdom to distinguish her from all other churches. "Romith" in Hebrew—counted by letters as we count, one l, one, or four C's four hundred, will make the number 666. John, the revelator, says this number is the mark of the beast, the church took it, and became the Roman church. It is the name of a man, and Roman comes from Romulus the name of the first king of Rome.

The Hebrew letters for the word Roman, as we would count them, are ת equals 400, ר equals 200, ס equals 60, ך equals, making 666.

But the Roman kingdom was also called the Latin kingdom, from the name of a man, Latinus, one of her kings. The church took this name, and the Greek letters of the word Lateinos, used as numerals, count 666.

John gives the engraving in the letters χξς, and these letters counted χ equals 600, ξ equals 60, ς equals 6, make 666.

But the number applies more emphatically to the head of the church,—it is the name of the man who would assume, in the church, the title, office, vestments and supreme power of the Pontifex Maximus of Paganism. Having solved the mystery of the mark, they would look for the man, not in the Greek church at Constantinople, nor in the African church at Alexandria. Their eyes would be turned, not to the patriarchs of these churches, nor to the Nestorian Pontiff of Asia, but to Rome; the Roman, or Latin Bishop, would alone bear this number, in his designating title. It is the man—the head of the image that speaks, it is the man who causes, that as many as will not worship the image of the beast, shall be killed. All, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, must come into his fraternity and receive his mark,—all must cross their foreheads, and their hands in token that they belong to "The Great Mother Church," over which he presides, and out of which, he declares, "there is no salvation."

All outside of the Mother church, he excommunicates, and they may without sin, be put to death!

The man—the Nimrod—king—pontiff; antichrist, by assumption of the Malchisidek King-priesthood, and by type and in anticipation, has stepped into the church—the temple of the living God,—and has taken his throne-seat, there! the antitype has come!

Christ the only Son of God has been "made a priest forever after the order of Melchesidek" and to him alone has the supreme dominion, lost to Adam, been promised. He alone is to be "king of kings and Lord of Lords." The Pontifix-Maximus-line; one man, considered as to his office, is one man still. It is the usurped king-priesthood, of Christ, in the line of succession.

Christ is the head of the church, he is its mediator. But here is a man who has brought the priesthood of Christ down to earth, and claims to have the power to forgive sins, and that the priesthood of the church may offer daily sacrifices and absolve from sins all those who come into communion,—"though Christ, the Lamb of God has with his own blood, gone into the most holy place to offer the one sacrifice, and the only one that has any cleansing power." If this is not the man of sin, I know not where to find him.

He is "the eighth" form of the Roman government, and "is of the seven," his doom, is "to go into perdition." Paul calls the man of sin, "the son of perdition." A falling away from the true faith in the church was the first step toward his development. This we know, came about. But there was a hindering cause that withheld for a time, his revealment. Satan had offered the Bishop of Rome, the throne-seat, and the emoluments of the pagan priesthood, but not until the civil power at Rome had been so manipulated by Constantine, as no longer to object to his advancement, could he accept them.

"Then that wicked one was revealed, whom the Lord should consume with the spirit of his mouth (teachings of the Bible) and destroy with the brightness of his coming."

Some have thought that the man of sin, has no connection with the apostate church, because the church is called a woman, and not a man. They forget that "the head of the woman is the man." Christ is the head of the true woman. The man of sin or antichrist, of the false. The man is not the church, but the head of the church. He has "opposed and exalted himself, above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, shewing himself that he is God." His "coming is after the working of Satan, with all power and signs and lying to orders," and "with all deceivableness of unrighteousness." He is "the lawless one." The popes of Rome have so exalted themselves. Here is their exact language. "I am all in all and above all, so that God himself and I, the vicar of Christ, have both one consistory." "If those things that I do be said, not to be done of man, but of God, what can you make of me but God?" "I am superior to all laws and free from all constitutions." "I being above all prelates, seem by this reason to be above all gods." "I am the sole last supreme judge of what is right and wrong." "The same is free from all laws." "Upon necessity of salvation, every human creature must be subject to me." "Receive this crown, (three horns plucked up), and know that thou art the father of princes and the king and ruler of the world." "Whom they create Pope, they adore." The kissing of the feet, hands and face of the Pope, is called "The adoration." The pagan high-priests were thus adored.

Have we need of any farther witness? Is not he who claims the crown-rights of Jesus, in the universal sovereignity of the world, the anti-christ?

A counterfeit Christianity could best oppose itself to the spread of the true; in this way has the Pope opposed God. He has interdicted God's word, and destroyed fifty millions of saints, and down to the present day, his character is unchanged. We can come to but one conclusion; the succession of Popes constitute the man of sin, and the antichrist, there will be no other. Nebuchadnezzar's image was to be headed up for the last time, in the fourth great empire of the world. It was to stand upon its feet, for the last time on the city of the seven hills. Here the religion of Nebuchadnezzar will receive its final blow. Here it will be smitten on the feet, and all its branches, in the varied forms of idolatry will perish. Take away the Pontifix Priesthood of Rome, and there will be no more idolatry. When the Christ appears there will be no more a Pope.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of [illegible] eternal life only through Christ and [illegible] truths. Also a heart belief of [illegible] repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Cherish Thy Treasures.

"Hast thou a loving hand to hold?
Then hold it fast.
What time thou canst;—it will grow cold;
Love cannot last.
Kiss thou the flower—sweet [illegible] that speak
Sweet words, and kiss the [illegible] cheek!

"The very earth is [illegible] to wound;
For Earth makes [illegible]
For all that lovest, and no sound
Comes from the tomb.
While Love's fair angel with thee stays,
Detain the moments and the days."

Did the Phœnicians Discover America?

In the December number (1682) of the Californian Illustrated Magazine is an article by Thomas Crawford Johnston, headed as the question prefixed hereto. The writer traces a connection between the architectural remains of Central America, Peru, and other places, and those of the Phœnicians in Palestine. The writer also compares certain religious forms known to characterize both regions named. A short paragraph will show the drift of his reasoning and the extent of his survey—

"If the reader will now take up the map of the world, he will, I think, obtain some new light on this enigma. By following the line from the head of the Red Sea down to the Straits of Babelmandeb, and from that to the coast of India, and on to Ceylon, he will have before him the known track of Phœnician commerce; but if from Ceylon he will continue the line to Java and Sumatra, and from thence to Mulgrave Island, in Torres Strait, proceeding to the Caroline Islands, Tonga, Samoa, Rappa, in the Austral group, and from thence to Easter Island, connecting therewith the coast of America, at Mexico and Peru, he will have located a series of islands and points on the mainland, which contain remains of substructions of a character identical with those found under the remnants of Solomon's Temple, and marked with those peculiarities described by M. Rénan, which he demonstrates were not only a marked feature, but were indeed characteristically peculiar to Phœnician architecture."

The reference in this extract to "the head of the Red Sea," is connected with a "navy of ships" which "Solomon made at Ezion-geber on the shore of the Red Sea, in the land of Eden," and which were manned by Hiram King of Tyre sending "in the navy his servants, shipmen that had knowledge of the sea, with the servants of Solomon." The narrative adds—"They came to Ophir, and fetched from thence gold, four hundred and twenty talents, and brought it to King Solomon." See 1 Kings ix. 28.

Ophir is the only locality mentioned in the article as the source of the gold acquired by Solomon, and he seems to hold that Mexico was Ophir. After quoting from the Encyclopedia Britannica's article on "America" the writer says—"To this I append a note of the gold and silver yield of Mexico, in support of the contention that this was the location referred to in Scripture."

On reading the article I was inclined to think that the Ophir of Scripture has its equivalent in the Peru of South America. The consonants are practically identical, the Hebrew פ being represented by P as well as by Ph, and the vowels liable to the mutation so well known to arise from the transference from one language to another. But an objection might be started here to this, which the writer did not seem to anticipate, namely, that the "gold of Ophir" is mentioned in the book of Job, which is believed to antedate the book of Kings by upwards of 600 years. Of course it is open to hold that the Phœnicians had access to the Indian and Pacific oceans long before the time when they entered into combination with Solomon, but the writer of the article takes no notice of this. It might be adduced as a circumstance in favor of such a plea that in the time of Moses (at which date the book of Job may have been written) a large quantity of gold was used in the construction of the tabernacle and its furniture. The mention of the "gold of Ophir" in Job shows that gold may at that time have been brought from some locality beyond the Red Sea.

Be this as it may, however, I have to suggest a more direct reference to the "gold of Peru," which is contained in the second Book of Chronicles. In chapter iii. 1-6, it is stated, "Solomon began to build the house of the Lord at Jerusalem ....he overlaid it with pure gold ....and the greater house he ceiled with fir-trees, which he overlaid with fine gold... he garnished the house with precious stones for beauty; and the gold was gold of Parvaim." This is apparently the name of a place, and this seems to be the only mention of it in the Bible. Cobbin gives "highly colored" as the idea, and the Vulgate "finest gold." As the consonants are the same as in Ophir, except the plural combination im and the v, which is really a vowel, it might be suggested that it is only another form of Ophir; and if it is, the vowels show that it has a closer affinity to the modern Peru.

In determining the orthography of any Hebrew word it must be kept in mind that a system of vowel points was invented in the 4th century of the Christian era, which had previously no place in the Hebrew alphabet. Those points were designed to indicate the proper pronunciation, and to discriminate as to meanings in cases where the spelling according to the unpointed original alphabet is uniform. Thus in the word Parvaim the two occurrences of the vowel a are indicated by points placed under the three consonants P and R and V of the original unpointed word. Thus, by putting the word in English letters the reader will be in a position to see how the matter stands. It consists of five letters and not seven as represented in our Bibles. P R V I M. Noble in his Rudiments of the Hebrew Language, gives an illustration of the unpointed pronunciation in which every case like the above is printed Pervim or perhaps Perveim never using a. While in cases where the letter represented by v in this word occurs it is invariably represented by u, having the sound of oo. According to this rule this word would take the form of Peruim.

In regards to the letters im, which is the form of the masculine plural, I am not sure that a satisfactory explanation can be given. In Bagster's Hebrew Lexicon the word in question is defined as a "proper name of a place, as Sepharvaim, which see." This word is defined "a city of Assyria" and with slightly different pointing "Sepharvites." Perhaps the conjecture might be allowed that more than one gold region had received some such name as that represented by Ophir and Peru, which are so nearly identical, and that the places now known as Mexico and Peru might be represented by the plural term Peruim we have been dealing with. Again, following the analogy of Sepharvaim representing Sepharvites, it might be allowable to render Peruim by Peruites, equivalent to the modern term Peruvians.

In closing these merely suggestive remarks I may mention that it is stated by an American writer E. George Squier in a large work on Peru, published in 1877, speaking of gold, says:

"In the city of Truxillo from July 1577 to July 1578 there was brought to the city by one person—in eight different lots 278,174 gold dollars or Spanish ounces, of which one-fifth was delivered to the city by way of tax or tribute."

Also that in Chamber's Encyclopedia it is stated that "Josephus placed Ophir in the peninsula of Malacca, and his very respectable opinion has been adopted by Sir J. Emerson Tennent in his work on Ceylon." This places the gold region of Ophir pretty far to the east of Phœnicia.

Editor Restitution:

I will write you a letter to let you know that there is one poor mortal here in Kansas seeking for immortality, and eternal life, when the Immortalizer comes. Then, and not till then, will the faithful children of God receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away. O, dear brothers and sisters, the reward will come when Jesus comes. Are we looking and watching for him to come who will change these vile bodies of ours and fashion it like His own glorified body. Dont we see Gentile times fulfilling to the very letter? Then let us raise our bowed heads and look unto God with unshaken confidence, knowing redemption draweth nigh. Let us see that our faith and hope does not clash with the faith and hope of the Gospel, as the generality of the teachings of the day. Let us be the children of light and not of darkness, that that day may not overtake us unprepared, but let us be faithful, that when He comes to reign on this sin-cursed earth of ours, that we may represent the sheep and be set on his right hand and hear His voice, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. O, what a glorious time it will be then for the faithful. Then the glorious restitution age will begin which has been spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began. O, brothers and sisters, let us be faithful. That everlasting kingdom that Daniel tells us of in the 7th chapter, that shall be established under the heavens is close at hand. Everything indicates that this age will soon close, and the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, will be established, and which will extend from river to river, and from sea to sea, and the knowledge of the Lord will cover the earth as the waters cover the briny deep, and it shall be no more said, "know the Lord, for they shall all know me from the least to the greatest." There will be no money power there to oppress the poor, no usury class there to rob the people. Bless God, redemption is nearing. Take courage and press on, we will wear the crown when He comes and receive all the blessings he has laid up for his faithful children. O, let us consider. This short life is given to prepare for that which is eternal, which will be received when the Life-giver comes. Let us have our conversation in heaven from whence we look for the Lord, who will change these vile bodies of ours and make them like unto his own glorious body. O, brothers and sisters, I feel lonely. The cold arm of death has visited my family and taken a loving companion, that loved to talk with me on the faith and hope of the Gospel. She was sick about two weeks. When first taken sick she often told me she was going to sleep in Jesus, but it will not be long till the voice of the archangel and the trump of God would wake the righteous dead from the graves that are holding them, and as Job said, "If I wait the grave is my home." That was her faith. She was mortal, but looked forward to the resurrection, when this mortal will put on immortality, and this corruption would put on incorruption, and then she could sing the victory song, "O, death where is thy sting, O, grave where is thy victory." She had the faith that Martha of old had when her brother died. She said to the Lord, "If thou hadst been here, my brother had not died, but I know that whatsoever thou ask the Lord, he will give it thee." Then Christ said, "thy brother shall live again." I know he shall live again in the resurrection at the last day. At the going out of this corrupt world and the coming of that world the Word of God tells us of, is to come the reign of him on this earth, until he destroys the last enemy, and this sin-cursed earth reduced to its Eden beauty as it was before Adam's trangression. Do we realize the responsibility that rests upon us as believing children of God's Word of Truth, wisely contending for the faith and hope of the primitive saints, that have been lost by the tradition of men. Thank God, brothers and sisters, and take courage. The little season that God spoke to the souls that John saw under the alter is almost out. We hear him talking to John on the Isle of Patmos, saying, "I am he that liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive forevermore, and have the keys of death and hell." Thank God, friends, he is coming who is the resurrection and the life, to unlock the prison house that holds our dead friends. Then redemption will come as the prophet Hosea said, "I will redeem them from death. I will ransom them from the power of the grave. O, glorious hope of the Gospel, of seeing our dead friends ransomed from the grave in the resurrection morning.

Let the sound of the Gospel go to every nation of a kingdom of our Lord and Savior that will be established on this sin-cursed earth. When will this take place? When we reach Isaiah's vision in the 26th chapter. "Awake, ye that sleep in the dust, for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth cast out her dead and no more cover her shame. When we reach this time we will be done depositing our dead in the ground, for there will be no more sorrow, no more weeping, God will wipe the tears from all faces. O, glorious hope of a coming King that will rule in righteousness. Then we will meet our loved ones that have fallen asleep in Jesus. Let us not be overly anxious. Let us not think as the sects think they are going to convert the world, because they add numbers to their churches. Are not the Gentiles led by the doctrine of the commandments of men as much as the Jews ever were? Things will exist under Gentile rule until they fill up the same cup of evil that the Jews did. Can we not see a figure of things existing as they did under the Jewish dispensation. The professed world is being led by the doctrine of the commandments of men as much as the Jews ever were. Suppose there was no false doctrine taught, would the words of the apostles be true? They by their voice have shown the wonders of these last times. Let us heed the warning, take courage, and move forward in the cause of the Master, although the world may scoff at us. Ministers may make by misrepresenting us to their congregations, remember they done the same with Christ and the Apostles in their day. It did not move them from the faith and hope that was delivered to them, it only strengthened them. They were rejoiced to know that they were accounted worthy to suffer shame for His name. The day before my wife died, I asked her if she wanted me to have some one preach a funeral discourse? She replied, that if I did, that it would be some one that preached the coming of Christ and a resurrection from the dead to immortality and eternal life. She said, "not, that it would do her any good, but it might the living. That they might see the faith and hope of the Gospel." I asked if she had any choice who I should get? She wanted Bro. Foore or Bro. Kimsey. I wrote to both, but Bro. Kimsey could not come. Bro. Foore came. He preached the same faith that the apostles taught. I will close lest I write too long a letter.

D. M. COWARDIN.

Letter to a Friend. No. 2.

"Behold, I show you a mystery: we shall not all sleep, but we shall be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trumpet: for the trumpet shall sound, and dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." 1 Cor. xv. 51, 52, 53.

The apostle says, "Our conversation is in heaven: from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ: Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." Phil. iii. 20, 21.

Now if we are made like Christ's "glorious body" we will be literal, tangible, immortal beings. For Christ did eat and drink and talk with his disciples after his resurrection, and was seen by them and they knew him. Hence the question might now be asked, where will be the abode of these immortal creatures?

If it is not in the kingdom of God, pray where is it? And if it is not to be a literal, tangible kingdom composed of territory, a throne, king, subjects, etc., what is it to be? Where is it to be, and what is a kingdom? What is the meaning of the word kingdom? You know Peter asked Christ the question, after saying, "Behold, we have forsaken all, and followed thee. What shall we have therefore? And Jesus said unto them, verily, I say unto you, that ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Matt. xix. 27, 28. What is a throne? What is the regeneration? Where are these thrones to be? Why are there to be twelve of them? If we believe in the kingdom of God, kingdom of heaven, kingdom of Israel or Christ's kingdom as it is variously called, as the Scriptures describe it, these questions are easily solved; but if we don't believe them the above portion of Scripture is of no avail.

"By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out unto a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out, not knowing whether he went.

By faith he sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise. * * * These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth." And in the same chapter in speaking of the prophets, David, Samuel, the apostles, etc., he says, "These all having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise: God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect." See Heb. ix. chapter.

"Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." They were greater than us yet they have not yet received the promise—eternal life in the kingdom of God. They lie silently sleeping in earth's dust—in the dark and silent grave, in which there is no work, nor devise, nor knowledge, nor wisdom;" and there will lie until they are aroused from this deep sleep, by the blessed Son of God.

"We that have done good, unto the resurrection of life eternal."

"Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." 1 John iii. 2.

Paul says Christ shall "judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom." He also says, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." 2 Tim. iv. 7, 8.

Now, my friend, do you not see that all the worthy ancients and the apostles of Christ, expected to receive their reward—eternal life in the kingdom of God—at Christ's "appearing and kingdom?"

Can we expect more than they? By studying Daniel we learn that Christ's kingdom will break in pieces and consume all earthly kingdoms, and shall stand forever; and by its miraculous growth finally fill the whole earth. "He that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations: And he shall rule them with a rod of iron: as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers: even as I received of my Father." Rev. ii. 26, 27. "Behold, I come quickly: hold fast that which thou hast, that no man take thy crown. Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out: and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is New Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God: and I will write upon him my new name. Rev. iii. 11, 12.

"To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne." Verse 20.

Christ is called "King of kings and Lord of lords." Rev. xix. 16. He is also called the "prince of the kings of the earth." Rev. i. 5.

And all the earth will realize this when He comes and rebuilds the tabernacle of David that is fallen down, and enters upon his glorious and peaceful reign upon the throne of his father David and over the house of Jacob. For then the nations will not learn war any more and every one shall know the Lord. Then after his reign of subjugation, after he has subdued all enemies, then—well what? Says Peter, "we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness." Now let us return to Revelations. "Behold I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea. And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and He will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away." Rev. xxi. 1, 2, 3, 4.

"Blessed are they that do His commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." Rev. xxii. 14.

No mortal man is yet in the kingdom of heaven only by anticipation; because as above shown, the kingdom is not yet established. Take the kingdom of God out of the Scriptures—leave it out, and you have nothing left. You have an incomplete gospel. Christ and the apostles preached the Gospel of the kingdom of God, which I can prove to you by the Scriptures if you desire it.

Leave "the things concerning the kingdom of God" and the "name of Jesus Christ" out of the Gospel, and again I say, what kind of a gospel have we? We cannot preach the things concerning the "name of Jesus Christ" without preaching the things "concerning the kingdom of God;" and vice versa. And we cannot preach the gospel of the kingdom and at the same time leave out such important things as, where shall it be? I am aware of the fact that you understand it as a kingdom of grace reigning in the heart, etc., but where did you get this doctrine? Where in the Scriptures do we read of the kingdom of grace? What kind of a kingdom is that? A kingdom always implies a king, a code of laws, subjects, territory, etc.; therefore it is necessary that we know who the king is, about the laws, subjects, territory, etc. Now all these things are as plainly taught in the Scriptures as any thing could be; therefore ministers of God's Word should be careful not to neglect these important truths; and after reading over this matter I should like you to let me hear from you.

These are things which I cannot mystify and let pass as mere sayings of but little importance. Now if you can convince me that the kingdom of heaven is within any man who is a true Christian, or that it will not be set up on earth at the coming of Christ, I willingly give in, providing you do so by the Scriptures. If man's reward is not eternal life of peace and happiness in the kingdom of heaven, the kingdom of God, the kingdom of Israel or Christ's kingdom, to be established on earth, and with Christ the ruler, I would like you as I said in the outset, to explain these portions of Scripture. ou a

Now my object in writ as a this letter is not to try tox Mas-how much I know, nor to Lord's your preaching, nor any days the kind; but that you may this things pertaining to the king-in a different manner or else convince me that I am wrong. I should love to hear you preach these things up there at Bunker Hill. Hoping to hear from you soon, I am, yours for the love of the truth.

Restitution.

A kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world. One of its prominent features was the Tree of Life, its object to perpetuate life. Disobedience prevented access to the Tree and death was the result. The head of our race disobeyed, and sin and death to the race was the result. By the disobedience of the one man the many were made sinners. So by the obedience of one man even unto death shall the many be made righteous. The book of Revelation promises the restoration of the Tree of Life to our race on condition of obedience.

"Blessed are they that do his commandments that they may have right to the Tree of Life." I suppose there is a class who are equal to the angels of God, who cannot die any more, who will not need the Tree of Life to prevent them from dying. The saved nations will, for the leaves of the Tree were for the healing of the nations. Men in the flesh will be able to keep the commands of God as perfectly as Jesus did in the flesh. He will sprinkle many nations and cleanse them from all their filthiness.

To all lovers of truth, Let us secure in tract form Bro. Joblin's excellent article on "Thief on the Cross." It will prove to be the best missionary work that can be put in the field. BRO. Joblin writes that he is receiving many appreciative words concerning his proposed tract on the "Thief's prayer, and Jesus' answer," and not a few orders. Those who yet intend to order will please do so at once so that the size of the edition may be decided upon. It is not necessary to send money with orders if not convenient. He wants to print [illegible] if he can. He also says he has added over a dozen more original arguments since its publication in THE RESTITUTION.

SOME one has said the "length of a sermon should be in proportion to its depth and breadth" a square thing. *

READER, did it ever occur to you that Jesus will not say, "Well said," but "Well done?" It is just so, whether you have looked at it in that light or not. He likens those who hear his sayings and do them, to wise men who build their houses upon rocks. Matt. vii. 24. *

THERE is no promise of life, joy, rest, peace or blessedness to bodiless spirits. Paul and his brethren were groaning and waiting for Sonship, (Diaglott) the redemption of the body, Rom. viii. 23. They had been begotten of God and were expecting to come to the birth—born again. *

GOD magnifies his word above all his name: no wonder that those who despise it shall perish. No wonder that he desires truth in the inward parts. A theoretical knowledge of the truth has no transforming power. Only when it is believed with the heart will it influence ones' conduct. *

FIVE things that Paul wished for:—To win Christ, Phil. iii. 8. To magnify Christ either by life or death. To be found in Christ, Phil. iii. 9. To know Christ and the power of his resurrection, and fellowship of his sufferings, and [illegible] conformable unto Christ's [illegible] Phil. iii. 10. To be with [illegible] Phil. i. 23. *

[illegible] know of no better way to [illegible] ourselves than to make practical application of Divine teachings; but in doing so we have first to make sure that we got the Divine idea, then apply it. For instance, in regard to Temperance, in the sum in addition given by Peter in the first chapter of his second letter; we do not think it means that we must either be sparing of energy, or go so far and no farther in any good work, but rather to cultivate the power to govern our energy, so that it will not be misapplied. *

A FRIEND thinks he has done, and is still doing the best he can, and objects to being obliged to do just this, or just that. But what a false position to occupy! He knows right well that he has neither believed the gospel of the kingdom of God, nor complied with the published conditions. What does he mean when he says he has done his best? Does he mean that faith and obedience are no better than unbelief and disobedience? Does he claim to know better than God, what is best? Were it not that he claims to be a Christian while faithless of the gospel of Christ we would not notice his claim. *

TRULY Jesus was born to be King of the Jews, and still be King of the Jews, but that is not all: for we read in Rom. xv. 12 that a root of Jesse shall rise to reign over the Gentiles, and in him shall the Gentiles trust. This good news dates away back to Abraham, at least. All nations were to be blessed in him and his seed. The root of Jesse being that seed, we discover that their blessing comes through trusting in him. Isaiah pointed out this in his second chapter, and 2nd and 3rd verses. And in Revelations ii, 26 we see that those who hold fast till the root of Jesse comes are to be placed in authority over the nations. *

WE are sometimes told that the soul is a part of God. If that be so, then "a part of God is susceptible of lust, of envy, of malice, of hatred, of fury, of pride, of contempt, of folly, imbecility, of dotage and of idiocy." What an awful blasphemy to intimate that the great God has made, and is still making of the most degraded parts of himself, souls of whom he [illegible] holy lives and failing of this, consigns these abominably wicked parts of himself to endless torment!!! God be praised that the light of the glorious gospel has lumined our minds, so that we can see that the wickedness of the wicked shall come to an end; can see that man is organized dust, and lives by breath, and that by faith and obedience he can be a part of God by and by. "The gift of God is Eternal Life." *

WE recently met with a paragraph which in effect said, that he who is justified by faith cannot be made holier by any socalled "second blessing," or, we add, indeed by any number of blessings. The writer, whoever he was, is evidently on the way out of the Gentile systems. "Second blessing" and "perfect holiness," and "holiness meetings" are expressions which are never used by those who have attained to the righteousness of God by faith in the Anointed Jesus. When men prescribe conditions of salvation for themselves they frequently have to supplement the affair. They travel but a short distance before finding aching voids, and the need of "second blessings," etc., as if conscious that they were not more than half pardoned; as if for some reason God was forgiving them by installments. To one intelligent in the truth this is painful evidence that they who say such things are strangers to the law of pardon. There is no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus, providing they walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. *

Grim War Hovers Over all Europe.

LONDON, Jan. 21. In spite of the pacific utterances with which the rulers of the great powers interlarded their New Year's speeches, the talk on the exchanges, in the bureaus and in military circles is all of the approach of war. A settled conviction is present everywhere that not many months will pass before Europe will be agitated from east to west and from north to south by the first throes of the most stupendous conflict that history has ever recorded. True, there is a lack of definite localization in the apprehension. One expects that war will break out here and another there; one believes that this cause and another that cause will provoke hostilities, but it is the general state of tension, jealousy and suspicion pervading the whole continent of Europe, apparent to the most superficial observer, which really furnishes cause for alarm. When the explosives are strewn so thickly over so wide an area as they now are, it would be rash to predict in what precise point the igniting spark may fall. It may be flung by some obscure soldier in a trivial act of indiscretion, by some false report, or by a fancied breach of diplomatic etiquette, such as precipited the Franco-Prussian war of 1870, but however it may come, come it will and that soon, or all political prophets have mistaken the indications. Two storm centers, one in the west and the other east, are watched with anxious gaze. From France or from the Balkans the storm signal may wave at any moment. European statesmen have learned from experience how easily the elements gather in either quarter. In the twenty-one years that have passed since Sedan not one step has been taken on the French side toward reconciliation with her enemy. The hope of recovering her lost provinces has never paled in the minds of her people. The heavy financial burdens laid upon their shoulder by their government have been cheerfully borne in the hope that they brought nearer the day of revenge and rehabilitation. Such patience as there has been shows the patience of those who wait for assured victory. And the situation is the more ominous because the danger is not one of the conflict of dynastic ambitions, but the deep rooted hatred and resentment of a whole people. Germany has not misunderstood the signs. She is aware that her enemy is nerving herself for a life and death struggle, and that it will not be with an army but with a nation that she will have to contend when the attitude of sullen reticence is exchanged for active hostility. In Germany, as in France, there is no question of the conflict coming sooner or later, and not a few of the most astute observers are of opinion that the sooner it comes the better for both countries. The burdens of taxation and of enforced military service, the conditions of a war in a time of peace, paralyze all industries, and cannot too soon be relieved by a decisive combat that will settle the question of predominance for a century to come.

But it is in the Balkans that the sentinels of the cabinets expect to see the first flames break forth. That trouble should be apprehended from that quarter is a retribution for past blunders. The Berlin conference of 1878 could not have taken more effective measures than it did for future disturbance. The diplomats, in their eagerness to undo the natural results of the war, and to check the Russian advances toward Constantinople, took precisely the course to prevent a permanent settlement of the trouble. To have interposed a strong barrier to Muscovite progress would have been the wisest step, as probably many of them are now aware. But Bulgaria divided, as they divided it without consideration for national sympathies and national aspirations, could never prove the barrier it was intended to be. In a short time the two halves of the divided nation came together by irresistable attraction and theorizing diplomats saw themselves out-maneuvered. Russian and Austrian influences have since struggled for supremacy, while the Turk looked on with cynical satisfaction at the results of the blunder. From that time until now the jealousies of the guardians of the weak governments in that region have kept the peoples seething in plots and counterplots, and national progress has been impossible. It would be of little concern to the great powers how the nations in the Balkan regions settle their disputes, if it were not that any approach to a settlement becomes a new ground of offence in the suspicion that it is the product of Russian or Austrian diplomacy. Thus a rising in any one of the Balkan States is liable to involve Russia and Austria in a quarrel in which the allies of each would naturally take part.

In his recent speech to the Reichstag Committee, Chancellor Von Caprivi freely admitted the danger to which Germany was exposed. As the new army bill was pending it was his policy to emphasize the danger, though our knowledge of the facts exonerates him from the suspicion of exaggerating it. "We can ward off an attack by France," he said, quoting from the memorandum of Von Moltke, "but if two of our neighbors united and attacked us, we should need the assistance of another power." As in the same interview the Chancellor expressed his conviction that an entente existed between Russia and France in regard to military arrangements, there could not be any doubt about the meaning of his quotation. It is in this need of Germany that the probability of an early war arises. Neither Austria nor Italy, the other two members of the Triple Alliance, is able to bear the heavy burdens entailed by the obligations of the treaty. That fact is well known here and throughout Europe. The knowledge of it in Berlin leads to the natural conclusion that it would be better for Germany if a conflict was precipitated now, while she has the two allies, than to wait the course of events and drift toward the struggle which might come when both these allies or one of them had become unable to keep engagements. That it will be deliberately provoked, no one believes, but while the conviction exists that it is inevitable and that a distinct advantage is to be gained by precipitating it, the chances of a prolongation of peace are materially diminished. With the imminence of the gigantic struggle in mind, the personality of the leaders becomes a subject of deep interest, and there is a natural desire to know what there is to be known of the men whose names will soon be on every man's lips.

At the head of the German army the Emperor will be the most conspicuous figure. An impression is prevalent that "that young man," as Bismarck now calls him, is too fond of posing and making speeches about whom he intends to crush to be of much account in the great struggle. But so people thought of his great predecessor, Frederick the Great. The Emperor is, without a doubt, a thorough soldier, familiar with every branch of the service, and capable of taking a prominent part in a campaign. He is by virtue of his position, commander in chief, and the interest he takes in the army and the efforts he personally makes to keep up its dicipline indicate that he intends to omit no part of a commander in chief's duties should his army have to take the field. Seldom does a day pass that he is not to be found at some hour of it inspecting the troops, and the fact of his coming is not usually known more than an hour beforehand, if at all. He has even been know to travel considerable distances to visit unexpectedly a distant station and hold an impromptu review in which the conduct of officers and men is closely scrutinized. What kind of record he will make as a general it is not easy to predict, but he has proved his capacity for handling large masses of troops on the parade ground, which is an important part of his necessary equipment. It may be said incidentally that the moral courage which a commander in chief ought to possess is little likely to be absent from the makeup of the man who dispensed with the services of Bismarck.

Next to the Emperor in responsibility must be counted General Count Von Schlieffen, the chief of the general staff. How important to the welfare of the army is the efficient discharge of his duty may be realized from the fact that the general staff has the charge of the movement, quartering and engagement of troops and the drawing up and conveyance of orders. Count Von Schlieffen has now been chief of the general staff for less than two years. He succeeded Count Von Waldersee in 1890. Prior to that time Von Schlieffen had been quartermaster general.

Von Waldersee has been promised by the Emperor the command of one of the armies which Germany will place in the field in the event of war. At the present he is in command of the Ninth army corps in Schleswig-Holstein. He was a pupil and afterward the assistant of Germany's renowned strategist, Von Moltke, and at the latter's death became his successor. It was his ambition to occupy as large a place in public esteem as Von Moltke had, and it appeared at one time that he would have an opportunity of doing so if he proved able. He stood high in the Emperor's favor, and had an exalted social position, which his wife's large fortune and her relationship by a former marriage to the Empress helped him to maintain. The Emperor, however, wished to have no man near him who might divide the honors with him, and besides, did not relish the pertinacity with which Von Waldersee urged upon him schemes of impractical army development. His appointment, therefore, to the Schleswig-Holstein command relieved the Emperor without publicly humiliating the Count. He is a man of considerable military experience, though only 52 years of age. He took an active part in the campaign against Denmark in 1864 and in the succeeding war with Austria. In the Franco-German war of 1800 he was chief of the Duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin's staff. Von Moltke had a high opinion of his capacities and placed the utmost confidence in him. His wife is an American lady by birth, but when he married her she was the widow of Prince Frederick of Schleswig-Holstein. It is certain that should war break out soon Waldersee will have much to do with the arrangements of the plan of campaign. The Emperor will doubtless also avail himself of the aid of Von Blumenthal, whose strategical skill is but little inferior to that of Moltke. He has now retired from active service, but his counsel based on a long experience would be invaluable in a great war.

Another prominent leader is likely to be General Von Alvensleben, who won his fame in the 1870 campaign. He was in command of a famous cavalry corps and distinguished himself by his personal valor as well as by his skill and vigilance as a commander. It was said at the time that it was largely due to his foresight and rapid movement that the whole of Bazine's forces in Metz were compelled to surrender. His prompt action convinced them of the hopelessness of the plan devised for cutting their way through the German ranks.

The help which Austria could render to Germany in a conflict, if indeed it is not she who is a principal requiring help, is almost an unknown quantity so far as generalship is concerned. The Austrian Army of the present day is almost denuded of generals of European reputation. In her struggle with Prussia they had little opportunity of winning fame, and since that time many have died or retired from service. That she has able and skillful generals is very probable, but their capacity in the majority of cases has yet to be attested against a powerful army. It may be that it was to this fact that Caprivi alluded when he spoke of the weaknesses existing in the Austrian Army. The political duality of the Empire does not extend to the army except to the landwehr, and it is under the supreme control of the Emperor. As to the landwehr the consent of the Hungarian Legislature has to be obtained before the Hungarian contingent of it can be employed in Austria or in a foreign country. A saving clause in the arrangement, however, permits the Emperor to set it aside in an emergency, if there would be a danger to the empire in delay. As in Germany, every male citizen not disqualified by physical defects is required to serve in the ranks, and no exceptions are allowed. An educated young man preparing for a profession is not permitted to continue his studies during his term of service, but if he is able to pass his military examination at the end of one year, he passes into the reserve; otherwise he must remain on active duty a second year, or until he can pass the examination. The full total strength of the entire army including the landwehr, but exclusive of the landstrum, is 812,500 men.

The chief command under the Emperor is vested in the inspector general. That officer is now the Archduke Albrecht, who is in his 76th year. He has been famous in his day, and his brilliant defense of the Quarilateral against the forces of Victor Emanuel established his reputation of generalship, but at his advanced age his help in a war would, if he lives, be almost exclusively limited to an advisory capacity. Next in rank to the Archduke is the chief of staff, General von Beck, who has seen active service, but not in high command. He is reputed to be an excellent disciplinarian, but of a dull methodical temperament with no originality or the magnetic qualities which in a general inspire confidence in his troops. Probably the man whose service in the Austrian army we shall hear of most is Count Pegasevitch, the Croatian general who is in command of the Fourth army corps. He is a brilliant cavalry officer, in the prime of life, with a valor and dash approaching recklessness.

The military organization of Italy, the third member of the Triple Alliance, is mainly the work of General Ricotti, who, profitting by experience in the campaigns of 1866 and 1870, thoroughly remodeled the military system. He mapped the entire territory in sixty-two districts and placed each district in charge of an infantry officer, to whom he intrusted the whole military administration, including the duty of recruiting and drill. Beside this, he organized an Alpine corps from the natives of the Alpine districts, whose especial training was to fit them for the defence of mountain passes. The system was further developed by General Mezzacapo and General Ferroro, who succeeded General Ricotti in the Army Department, and some weak points, notably in the artillery branch of the army, were strengthened, though in neither of those arms does the Italian Army compare with other European forces. The regular army comprises three classes, aggregating 634,000 men of all arms. The first and second classes have each received three years' full training, but the men of the second class, having completed that period, are permitted to resume their occupations and are regarded as on furlough, being recalled annually for a brief period of drill. The third class are the complementary troops, who have received a shorter period of training. Besides this force is a militia of 840,000, similarly divided, according to the length of the term of service and the conditions on which they can be summoned to the field. Thus the little kingdom of Italy is no inconsiderable ally, as she can in an emergency place nearly a million and a half of men in the field, nearly all of whom have had some military training. In addition to her land force Italy has also a formidable navy.

Turning to the other side of the field, the Triple Alliance is confronted with the vast and thoroughly organized forces of France and Russia. The reoganization of her army has been the main business of France since Sedan. The French felt chagrined, mortified, humiliated in the eyes of the world and determined that the honor of the nation must be rehabilitated with all thoroughness and all speed. Profiting by her experience of the inestimable service which Von Moltke rendered to the Germans she looked around for a skillful strategist. She found him in General Mirabel, who is as much of the Von Moltke type as a Frenchman can be. He is a cool headed, calm calculating man of about 60 years of age, an excellent tactician, as he proved himself to be in the recent maneuvers and of the quiet self reliant temperament so rarely found in Gallic flesh. He did not attain the rank of general of division until 1880 though he has served in all the wars in which France has been engaged since the Crimean war. He is not given to posing before the public, nor has he the farcial elements of character which gave Boulanger his popularity. Rather, he is modest and retiring and his fine qualities are fully known and appreciated only by those officers who have come in close contact with him. They know and value the man, and they say that France could better afford to lose one whole division of the army than to lose Mirabel. It was said in the Crimean campaign that the English army was like a lion with the head of an ass. The aphorism would apply, though in a less degree, to the French army if it were without the brains within the skull of General Mirabel.

His present position is chief of the staff.

The French Commander in Chief is General Saussier. He is best known as the military governor of Paris, a position requiring peculiar qualities of a high order. That he has been successful in several trying crises argues considerable ability, for probably in no city on earth is there greater need of an able military chief. The terrible days of the Commune show what Paris would be if the command were in the hands of a weak or vacilating man. Saussier has maintained order; and even when the presence of Boulanger rendered his position one of peculiar difficulty and delicacy, the iron hand in the velvet glove kept the rougher elements in dread and prevented the outbreak that at one time seemed inevitable.

The man, however, who comes nearest to the French idea of a typical soldier is General Gallifet who is now in command of the Army of the East. He comes of a noble family and was an ardent Bonapartist until the events of the war of 1870 demonstrated the corruption and incompetency of imperial government. He has worked his way up from the ranks and has always been famous for personal valor. He was colonel of a cavalry troop at Sedan, and the reckless charges he made at the head of his regiment extorted the unstinted admiration of the German Emperor and his staff. He was taken prisoner with the army, but on his release he was heartily welcomed by the chiefs of the republic and raised to the rank of general of division. When the clash of arms comes there is no officer in the French army whose name is so likely to be prominent as that of ce brav Gallifet.

The Russian armies will probably be under the nominal command of the Czar or one of the Grand Dukes, but the real command will without doubt be in the hands of General Gourko. The retirement of General Dragomiroff and the death of the lamented Skobeleff leaves no one of superior rank and title to the supreme command. He is but little over 50 years of age, and is at present in command of the army in Poland. A typical Russian soldier of dogged, remorseless, ardent temper, he has won the admiration of the whole Russian army by his personal courage and unquenchable spirit. All the world has heard of Gourko. The desperate struggle of the Shipka Pass in the war of 1877 carried his fame into every land. The Czar had unbounded confidence in the dashing young cavalry officer, and while it seemed hopeless to drive the Turks from the pass, which they held day after day against all odds, he gave to Gourko the apparently hopeless task of carrying it. The young officer needed only the chance to distinguish himself. He learned that there was a wild, precipitous path over the side of the mountain. It was little more than a mule path, but Gourko soon had men with the pick widening it to admit of the passage of light mountain guns. Leaving a force in front to keep the Turks occupied, Gourko pressed forward over the precipices with the remainder of his troops. More than one gun and brave soldier slipped over the side and was dashed to pieces, but Gourko has never been the man to take account of losses if the object was achieved. He reached the opposite side of the pass, and the Turks, who had never heard of the circuitous path, or never dreamed that it could be used by any army, found themselves suddenly attacked in front and rear, and the pass was speedily in Russian hands. Such are the forces and the leaders of the impending conflict. How terrible it will be the vast numbers that will be engaged and the destructive arms with which they will be equipped passes conception. With the introduction of smokeless powder and the new explosives many of the conditions of warfare are changed, but the one feature that has characterized all wars remains with improved implements for giving it effect—the cruel, fierce, tiger like thirst for blood.—N. Y. Press, Feb. 1, 1893.

Dear Restitution:

That Macedonian Letter vibrated every pulse of my being. I am glad you suggested the idea of a "Contingent Fund." Set me down for $7.00 for the year 1893. Those appeals have been disturbing me for some time. I am led to believe that God raises up men at the right time. Brother Wagoner is the "Contingency Man," now brethren furnish the "Contingent Fund," then we will be ready ror every emergency.

Brother Wagoner, you and THE RESTITUTION folks can arrange for a treasurer, and publish in brief the proposition. We must never lose sight of the fact that our natural lifetime is our probation in which we make, or fail to make our calling and election sure.

Yours in hope.

Get a supply, and scatter them out. Contains about as much reading as two columns of this paper. 10 cents a dozen, 40 cents a hundred. Send to this office.

THE SPECIAL EVANGELIST FUND.

This fund is raised and controlled by the Sisters, for the purpose of placing some young man in the field as a proclaimer of truth. Hereafter in making donations to this fund please say whether or not you intend to give a stated amount regularly each quarter. This work is continuous, and quarterly contributions are asked for, though single time gifts are very welcome. Send all monies for this fund to Mrs. Eva L. Underwood, Plymouth, Ind.

Poetry.

In the Hush of Early Morning.

In the hush of early morning,
When the breeze is whispering low,
There's a voice that gently calls me,
And its accents well I know:
"Here I am, O Savior, waiting;
For thy will alone is mine.
This is all my crown and glory,
I am thine, and only thine!"

When the noon tide falls upon me,
With its fervid lightning ray,
There's a voice, divinely earnest,
Bids me work while it is day;
Open, Savior, now before me
All thy will for me to do,
Only help me, watching, working,
Still to keep my Lord in view!

As the dusky shadows steal downward
O'er the earth at evening calm,
There's a voice I love that whispers,
"After labor, rest, my child!"
O my Savior, loving, tender,
Help me to serve [illegible]
Thus to work within thy vineyard,
Till thou callest me to rest.

Pine Woods Bible Class. No. 39.

Leader. In opening our Class let us sing hymn No. 20, and may we ever act in accordance with the sentiment.

"Deal with another as you'd have
Another deal with you:
And what you're unwilling to receive,
Be sure you never do."

"The great day of his wrath," is the topic I wish to consider today. It may not be a very pleasing theme, but alas! it is a day which hasteth greatly, and our love for our fellows should lead us to faithfully warn them that they may have an opportunity to flee from the wrath to come. It is a day in which all nature will convulse, there will be terrific sights in the heavens above, and the earth beneath will reel to and fro with a violence that will cause the heart of man to quake with fear, and the great question is, "Who shall be able to stand?" Elias, will wealth and position be of any avail in that day?

Elias. Oh, no! not at all! "the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men," will hide "themselves in the dens and rocks of the mountains," and say "to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb." Ah! won't they fear the wrath of the Lamb in "the great day of his wrath?"

Leader. I will ask Arlon to tell us how we can escape the terrific day of "the wrath of the Lamb?"

Arlon. Nothing will avail except a hearty belief and obedience of God's ancient gospel, coupled with a godly life thereafter. That is God's pass that will admit you into the "Chambers," until the "indignation be overpast."

Leader. Now, Bro. Albert, will you tell us something about the fearful sights there will be in the heavens during this day of the Lamb's wrath!

Albert. The record of this day of the Lamb's wrath is found in Rev. vi. 12-17. The great sights in the heavens above are related in verses 12, 13, 14. "And the sun became black as the sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood, and the stars of heaven fell unto the earth....and the heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together." These great sights all happened in the great day of the Lamb's wrath.

Leader. How is that? Many Adventists claim that a dark day which occurred in a portion of New England, in 1780, filled that prophecy. What do you think, Lucy?

Lucy. They must be mistaken. That was not the day of "the wrath of the Lamb." Verses 16, 17. "The Kings of the earth," (ver. 15) were not at all alarmed about that dark day, as none of them lived in New England, and it was not visible anywhere else. But when the dark day occurs mentioned in the above Scriptures they, together with those who have trusted in their riches and great names will sneak off and hide "themselves in the dens and the rocks of the mountains." Verses 15, 16. Nothing of this kind occurred in 1780.

Leader. Now, Bro. Lud, why was the dark day in 1780, only visible in New England?

Lud. The reason for that is plain enough. The sun itself was not darkened at all, the light was only obscured locally, by dense clouds of vapor. If "the sun became black as the sackcloth of hair." (Ver. 12), the sight would have been universal. It could not have been otherwise. It would then have been visible to "the kings of the earth." Ver. 15. Notice also that the word "kings," is in the plural form, and that means more than one country, so a portion of New England could not fill this bill.

Leader. I want to ask sister Carrie about the moon. Verse 12 says: "and the moon became as blood." What caused that?

Carrie. There is a natural reason for that. The moon itself is not a luminous body, but borrows its light from the sun, and if the sun should become "black as the sackcloth of hair," it would naturally impart a blood-red appearance to the moon. Local clouds of vapor cannot produce the above effect. Those who witnessed the 1780 obscuration of light say that the vapor of the atmosphere settled heavily on the earth—the smell and vapory feeling indicated it.

Leader. I will ask Charlottie to tell us under what seal will the dark day of the Lamb's wrath take place?

Charlottie. Verse 12, says under the "Sixth Seal." That seal was not opened then, in fact is not opened yet, as any one can see by carefully reading Rev. v., to verse 1 of chapter vi. We are there told those who have been redeemed by the blood of the Lamb, "out of every kindred, and tongue, and people and nation" are with the Lamb, before a seal is opened, and point him out as being not only "Worthy," but "able to unloose these seals," and it is under the sixth seal that the sun became "black as the sackcloth of hair." We certainly need to exercise more care in the teaching of prophecy, for fear we may lead some astray.

Leader. Very good. Oh! this terrible day is near at hand! Christian laborer stir thyself, and warn sinners of impending judgment! this is no day for the folding of arms and rest.

Please sing hymn No. 23.

"Up Christian laborer! Slumber not!
'Tis not the time for rest;
Thy resting place so soon shall be,
Upon thy Savior's breast,
Soon thou shalt be in his embrace,
A trophy of redeeming grace!"

Wm. H. Wilson.

They That Were Ready Went in.

Recently in traveling by rail the writer observed an unusual movement on the part of some of the occupants of the car as the train was approaching an important station. A careful investigation was made and each article that belonged to the traveler was placed within easy reach. Here a package of value; there an article of clothing, all in readiness, and when the station was reached, without any undue haste or confusion the travelers passed quietly out. The incident trifling and common-place as it was, made an impression that started a train of thought. There is another train that is approaching a very important station. The gospel train (narrow-guage of course) with its precious freight of passengers for the kingdom of God is nearing Resurrection Station. At this Station close connection will be made with a train from heaven (running from the celestial city to earth) composed of the Lord Jesus Christ and all the holy angels (a through train without change of cars to the land promised to Abraham) but remember, that no ticket will admit to the last train unless plainly stamped by authority of the Company. The last issue of the Company (struck over 1800 years ago) all have the words "faith" "repentance" and "baptism" plainly printed on each ticket. Then various mottoes or rules of the Company are given, prominent among them being this urgent rule "walk in newness of life," and obedience to all the rules of the Company is expressed in one motto "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life." One fixed rule that has been observed by the Company in all ages and from which it has not swerved one iota is "Obedience to the Divine Law." Nothing else can be substituted for this.

Let no passenger entertain the delusive hope that a ticket, no matter how neatly executed, and bearing the motto "Sincerity and honesty" will avail, for the "Manager" of the company anticipating that such tickets will be presented has announced "Not every one that saith Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." Now fellow passengers, having settled the matters to our tickets, let us attend to other matters as the train is rapidly approaching the Station. Have we everything in order? Is our baggage all right? Can it be transferred to the other train? Possibly we are carrying articles that cannot be transferred at the translation depot. As to our traveling garb, how is it? Have we put on the robe of righteousness? Are we wearing it? Does it fit (our conduct) or does it give us an awkward appearance? (like David in Saul's armor). These questions ought to be decided now.

As accidents (sins in the flesh) are liable on this journey through the enemy's land, have we provided against them by putting on the whole armor of God? Have we the breastplate of righteousness? or do we depend on "sincerity and honesty" "doing the best we can," instead of doing just what God tells us. Have we as our weapon of defence the "Sword of the Spirit" the word of God, or is it human tradition? Have we our loins girt about with truth? or does a human band of tradition bind our consciences? Let us again search our baggage lest there be a "wedge of gold" or heavy burden of silver, or some "Babylonish garment" that cannot be transferred. My brother I see you have a very well filled piece of baggage; please tell me what you are carrying? O that is twelve per cent notes well secured." But will they not be objected to? Do you not think the Manager will write across that large bundle of notes the ominous word "usury?" "O I am doing a strictly legal business. I have complied with the law." What Law? "Why the law of the land of course." Then it will not condemn you, and if you were to be judged at the last day by the "law of the land" you would not be condemned, but another law is to judge us then, and it has some very unpleasant things to say about usury. But you, my brother, with the very large traveling trunk, what have you there? "Gold, silver, Government Bonds, real estate mortgages, and other things too numerous to mention." What are you going to do with them, my brother? "O I am commanded to Occupy tell he comes." Yes, but as we are arranging to leave this train, and as all these things cannot be used when we are transferred, have you not made a mistake in not using these things on the train that we are now traveling? They could be used to good advantage now, but will avail nothing at the transfer. Do you really think that when the Lord said Occupy till I come, that he meant worldly goods? Do not people usually do that without a command from the Lord?

And you, my brother, please tell me what you are holding so carefully as we are rapidly approaching the transfer depot? O this is "new light," I have just been able to see. Yes I have noticed that ever since you received the "new light" it has shut out or greatly obscured all other light, even the "light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world." Can this be transferred at the Station where we change? Has it been of any advantage to you? Has it enabled others to accept saving truth? Can anything except the "Gospel" be used now to secure salvation? Fellow passengers we are certainly approaching the transfer Station, the signal is now sounding, the waybill plainly marks our position on the line, and some of the passengers are holding themselves in readiness for the transfer? Shall any fail to effect the grand change? In view of this solemn scene what manner of persons ought we be in all holy conversation and godliness. Your fellow-passenger on gospel train, listening to hear the Station called.

It has been shown in a former article, that the new covenant has special relation to righteousness. It is written: "The unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God." 1 Cor. vi. 8-9 The inheritors of the kingdom then must all be righteous. Accordingly it is written, "Thy people also shall be all righteous; they shall inherit the land forever." Isa. lx. 21.

Paul, putting the word "kingdom" for the main characteristics of the inheritors thereof, says: "For the kingdom of God is not eating and drinking, but righteousness, and peace, and joy in a sanctified spirit." These quotations are sufficient to prove the proposition, that righteousness is an indispensable qualification for the kingdom of God. God, the king, is righteous, and his subjects must also be righteous. When formerly he set up his kingdom, his subjects were not righteous, though they had entered into a covenant with him promising to be righteous. He gave them a law by which to regulate their lives but they kept it not. They finally become so corrupt and abominable that he drove them out of the land and scattered them among the nations. God, by the mouth of the prophets, declared his purpose to re-establish the kingdom; and to make his people righteous. In the former covenant they, relying upon their own strength, promised to keep his law. In their own strength they failed. In the new covenant the law will be written in their hearts, and there will be no failure. God will write his law in their heart by his spirit. By the prophet Ezekiel, after predicting the gathering of them out of all lands into their own land, and the cleansing of them, and the changing of their hearts, He says, "I will put my spirit within you and cause you to walk in my statutes." Ezek. xxxvi. 27.

Isaiah speaks concerning the spirit as follows: "Because the palaces shall be forsaken; the multitude of the city shall be left; the forts and towers shall be for dens forever, a joy of wild asses, a pasture for flocks, until the spirit shall be poured upon us from on high, and the wilderness be a fruitful field, and the fruitful field be counted for a forest." Isa. xxxii. 14, 15. This outpouring of spirit was plainly foretold by Joel. He says, "It shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out my spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophecy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions; and also upon the servants and upon the handmaids in those days I will pour out my spirit." Joel ii. 28, 29.

It is well right here to call to mind that according to the epistle to the Hebrews the new covenant was based on "more efficient promises" than the old. The promise of the spirit was a more efficient promise than any promise made in the old covenant. God's promises in the old covenant were to be fulfilled if the people kept their promise to obey his law. Without the spirit they could not do this: and the spirit was not promised in the making of the covenant. That promise belongs to the new covenant, and is one of the more efficient promises upon which the new covenant is based. John the baptizer declared that the one coming after him would baptize his people in the Holy Spirit. Matt. iii. 11.

Jesus, before his death, promised the Holy Spirit to his disciples. He said to them, "If ye love me keep my commandments. And I will pray the Father, and he will give you another comforter (advocate, helper,) that he may abide with you forever, the spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him, but ye know him, for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you." John xiv. 20; xv. 26, 27; xvi. 13, 14.

The death of Christ confirmed the new covenant. His blood which was the "blood of the new covenant" was poured out for many for remission of sins. Matt. xxvi. 28. After his resurrection he renewed the promise concerning the spirit to his disciples. He commanded them that they should not depart from Jerusalem, but wait for the promise of the Father, which, saith he, ye have heard of me. For John truly baptized in water but ye shall be baptized in the Holy Spirit not many days hence. Acts i. 4, 5. After they had made their inquiry concerning the restoration of the kingdom, he said, "But ye shall receive power by the Holy Spirit coming upon you, and you shall be my witnesses, both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and even to the remotest parts of the earth. (8 verse).

The promise to the apostles was fulfilled on the day of Pentecost: the spirit was poured out upon them: and Peter declared it to be that which was foretold by the prophet Joel. Acts ii. 1-18. Under the influence of that spirit he preached the Gospel, and convinced three thousand of his race that Jesus who had been lately crucified, had been raised from among the dead, and taken up to heaven, and was the Christ. To their earnest inquiry, "What shall we do?" Peter replied, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for remission of sins; and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit; for the promise is to you and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call."

The gift of the Holy Spirit we see was not confined to the followers of Jesus, "the promise" was to all. The Samaritan converts received the Holy Spirit, Acts viii. 14-17. Cornelius and his household received it. Acts x. 44-47. The disciples at Ephesus received it. Acts xix. 1-6. The Corinthians received it. 1 Cor. xii. 13. The Galatians were supplied with the spirit. Gal. iii. 2-5. The Thessalonians were not destitute of the spirit. Thess v. 19. And I conclude that no true disciple in those days was destitute of the spirit. The love of God was poured out in the hearts of the Christians at Rome by Holy Spirit which was given to them. Rom. v. 5.

Paul said to the Galatians, "Because you are sons he sent forth the spirit of his Son into our hearts, crying Abba, Father." Gal. iv. 6. To the Romans the apostle wrote, "If any one has not the spirit of Christ he is not his." Rom. viii. 9.

The way men become sons of God is clearly defined in the new covenant writings. "Ye are all sons of God through the faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have been clothed with Christ. And if you belong to Christ then you are Abraham's seed and heirs according to promise." Gal. iii. 26, 27, 29. When one becomes a child of God through the faith in Christ Jesus his sins are forgiven. Clothed with Christ he is clothed with the righteousness of Christ. The penalty of sin is death. Death puts away the sin; settles the account. Sin is attributed to the flesh on account of its lusts which lead to sin. The flesh on account of its inherent sinfulness is not fit for the kingdom of God. It must die. "The soul that sinneth it shall die." Ezek. xviii. 4. "The wages of sin is death." Rom. iv. 23.

The Son of God came in sinful flesh and died for our sins. A new life was imparted by the spirit of God to the dead body in the tomb. Upon that new life the law had no claim. Those who are baptized into Christ are baptized into his death, and so the old man, sin's flesh, is reckoned as crucified with him. Sin's account is settled. Being raised up, he, the baptized one, is "to walk in newness of life," just as if he had actually entered into the new life by resurrection. Rom. vi. 1-23; Col. ii. 10-15. He is said to be quickened or made alive with Christ, raised with him. The righteousness of Christ is put to his account, and he is free from condemnation.

It would be very incongruous and inconsistent for him to continue in sin yielding to the lusts of the flesh. When made immortal the lusts of the flesh will be destroyed; but they are not destroyed so long as we remain in the mortal state. But we must "mortify" them, put them to death. Can we do this in our own strength?

"What the law could not do in that it was weak through the flesh," Paul says. Rom. viii. 3. What could it not do? It could not justify us. Why? Because we were sinners. Rom. iii. 20-23.

"God sending his own Son in the likeness of sin's flesh, and for sin condemned sin in the flesh." Rom. viii. 3. God condemned sin in the flesh. How? By adjudging his Son in the flesh to die for sin. What was the object? "That the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us who walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit. (4th verse).

Then the righteousness of the law is not fulfilled in us if we walk not after the spirit. Can we walk after the spirit if the spirit is not in us? The spirit was certainly in those to whom the apostle was writing. "But if the spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead will also quicken your mortal bodies by his spirit that dwelleth in you. Therefore, brethren, we are debtors, not to the flesh, to live after the flesh. For if ye live after the flesh ye shall die: but if through the spirit you do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live. For as many as are led by the spirit of God, they are the sons of God." Rom. viii. 11-14. These statements of the apostle show that God gave his spirit to his children to enable them to mortify the lusts of the flesh, and act according to the requirements of the law. "The carnal mind, says the apostle, is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." (7th verse). The carnal mind is the emotions and desires of the flesh. If a man yields to his fleshly desires he goes contrary to the law. A man is tempted, James says, "when he is drawn away by his own lusts, and enticed." James i. 14. If a man is led by the spirit of God, he is not drawn aside by his lusts and enticed. God's spirit will not lead his children to transgress his law. For, "the fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance (self-control): against such there is no law. Gal. v. 22, 23. But the law is against the works of the flesh spoken of in the 19th verse and 20th, "Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulation, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envying, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like;" and "they that do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God." "For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the spirit shall of the spirit reap life everlasting." Gal. vi. 8.

Other Scriptures on this interesting subject might be cited, but these must suffice for the present, and they show that the two great blessing of the new covenant are first, justification. Second, righteousness of heart and life: and the righteousness is the fruit of the spirit of God. This righteousness is the clothing of the saints; it will be the clothing of Israel in the restitution.

Wm. H. Denson, Sec.

Dear Restitution:

And those who have obtained like precious faith with us through the righteousness of God. I rejoice that I can communicate to you a few words of encouragement as a result of recent labor, in our Master's service. I have by the Lord's goodness just closed a ten days meeting in Chase County, this State. Where two willing and obedient souls obeyed the form of doctrine delivered unto them, by being planted in the likeness of their Redeemer. I trust and have reasons to believe that they have risen with him by faith to walk in a new life. To walk worthy of their high calling, being called by the Gospel to the obtaining of eternal life, glory and a kingdom, which we can only hope to obtain by a faithful continuance in well-doing. Many were the invitations to remain longer. And I may safely say better interest I never saw manifested by the people. Methodists, Baptist and others of the so-called orthodox faith came five and six miles, dark as the nights were, to listen to the strange things we brought to their ears. The strangest of all to them was to find those things which appeared new to them to be in a book that they had read all their lives. It reminds me of Paul's preaching. He seemeth to be "a setter forth of strange gods" because he preached "unto them Jesus and the resurrection." The Methodists at Wauneta eight miles from our place of meeting, kindly sent us an invitation to preach in their new Church, which I was wont to do out other fields where isolated brethren lived were sending us the Macedonian Cry, come over and help us. True the harvest is great and the laborers are few.

In closing I wish to drop a thought to those who labor in word and doctrine. Let us never forget that while the gospel is God's power for salvation, it will be powerless unless it is blended with love and kindness on the part of those who are endeavoring to tell the good news of a Savior's love, and a coming kingdom when our Father's will will be done in earth as it is now done in heaven.

Cast Thy Bread upon the Waters.

"Cast thy bread upon the waters, for thou shalt find it after many days." Eccl. xi. 1.
"In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thy hand." Eccl. xi. 6.

Cast thy bread upon the waters,
Ye who have but scant supply,
Angel eyes will watch above it;—
You shall find it by and by!
He who in his righteous balance
Doth each human action weigh
Will your sacrifice remember,
Will your loving deeds repay.

Cast thy bread upon the waters,
Poor and weary, worn with care,—
Often sitting in the shadow,
Have you not a crumb to spare?
Can you not to those around you
Sing some little song of hope,
As you look with longing vision
Thro' faith's mighty telescope?

Cast thy bread upon the waters,
Ye who have abundant store;
It may float on many a billow,
It may strand on many a shore;
You may think it lost forever,
But, as sure as God is true,
In this life or in the other,
It will yet return to you.

Cast thy bread upon the waters,
Far and wide your treasures strew,
Scatter it with willing fingers,
Shout for joy to see it go!
For if you do closely keep it,
It will only drag you down;
If you love it more than Jesus,
It will keep you from your crown.

Cast thy bread upon the waters.
Wait it on with praying breath,
In some distant, doubtful moment
It may save a soul from death;
When you sleep in solemn silence,
'Neath the morn and evening dew,
Stranger hands which you have strengthened,
May strew lilies over you.

"I Will Skip It."

So said one Father Rogers, some years ago. Where I lived there was an old man known as Father Rogers. He was an Elder in the Campbellite Church, a man well respected for his integrity and honesty of heart, and people would say, if there is any good man Father Rogers is one. There was two other elders in the church, but he was rather the leader in the church; a man that generally took the lead in all church matters. About the time I knew him, some one gave him some of our books to read. And among them there was Storrs' Six Sermons. The old man read them carefully, and his wife read them, and they loaned them to another elder, and it went until six good and honest minds were opened and received the truth. Then about that time the minister was informed of what was going on in the church, and a committee was appointed to wait upon them and labor with them, and try and get them to drop those things they had learned from those books. But the six said, No, it is Bible, and we must believe and teach Bible. Then the matter was referred to the minister and others, and the decision was to expell them from the church. So on the Sunday following the decision they was notified to be present, and either quit their teaching or they would be expelled for heresy. So they met and had their meeting, and they were about to be read out of the church, and one of their old members said to Father Rogers, Brother, we don't want to expell you, we all love you dearly. Father Rogers, can't you when you come to those Scriptures that you think so much of, and what we think will break up our church, can't you skip them? and just at that point the old man caught a good idea, and said, yes, Brother I can do that. So they had a good hand shaking over it. So on the next Sunday was their social meeting, and Father Rogers was there with his Scriptures ready to do his skipping. He had arranged a talk on the saints' inheritance, and he commenced with the Psa. xxxvii. Prov. ii.; also Prov. x. xi., Matt. v. 5; Rev. v. 9–10, but when it came to where there was anything said about the earth, he would break down in a cry, and would say, now brethren, you all know how the next verse reads, but I don't dare read it for it may break up the church, and I agreed to skip it and I will skip it. And so the old man went through with his skipping and crying until he got through. They did not really like his skipping, and so the next time he had a chance he had some more reading and skipping to do, so they expelled him for skipping, for the people were turning out in large numbers to hear Father Rogers skip. I will give some of the Scriptures he had to skip, for the benefit of some of our young brethren and sisters. For yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be....the old man could read that, but the next verse he must skip. The next reads, But the meek shall inherit the earth. Then the old man could read along till he came to the 22 verse, then skip. Now I will put this verse down, For such as be blessed of him shall inherit the earth; and they that be cursed of him shall be cut off, (that is from the earth). Then he could read on down to the 29 verse, that would have to be skipped. This is the way it reads. The righteous shall inherit the land and dwell therein forever. Young brothers, sisters, that is one of the verses to be skipped. Do you want to skip it? Now Brother Rogers read on, but when it comes time, skip, well then I will read down to the 34th verse. Wait on the Lord and keep his ways and he shall exalt thee to inherit the land: (not sky or heaven). When the wicked are cut off, thou shalt see it. Very well. Now we will let Father Rogers go to Prov. ii. 20-21, that thou mayest walk in the way of good men, and keep the paths of the righteous. There now Father Rogers skip the next. How does it read? let us see, For the upright shall dwell in the land, and the perfect shall remain in it, (the earth). Then Solomon, you say an upright and perfect man will remain on the earth. David please tell us then who goes up, please. David, The enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs; they shall consume into smoke, they shall consume away. Then David, it is the wicked that goes up in smoke you say? Well, Father Rogers, you don't have to skip your Savior's words do you. Yes, I can commence reading his sermon on the mount, and when I reach the 5th verse I have to skip. Is that so? how does it read? Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth, why skip that? Well it is liable to break up the church, they wont allow me to read that, and I agreed in one of our meetings after they asked me if I could not skip it. I said yes. Not long ago I was sent for to go and hold some meetings, where I preached years ago, and there was some faces that I used to see, were not there, and I made inquiries, and I was told they moved to town, and there being none of our faith there, they went in with the Campbellites. A home, brother, sister, a home! is that a home where you have not the privilege of talking Bible? How is it brother and sister, do they sing with the Spirit and understanding? You take your wife and go to meeting at your new home, you get seated, and you wait for the singing to commence, all the time fearfull they will sing something that you do not believe. And sure enough they start up and sing on our way from earth to heaven, thou wilt guide me with thine eye. Then you hunch your wife and say we do not believe that, do we, but this is our home, and we have no need to complain, and the minister looks around over the congregation, and he sees another soul-sleeper there that has not joined their church. So he concludes to give him a good dose. So he gets up and tells his hearers, I have concluded to preach a discourse on the subject of the kingdom, and tells them he intended to prove that the Kingdom of God was set up on the Day of Pentecost. And he hammers away for an hour, with a large amount of abuse of materialism. Now brother, how do you like your new home? Is that the place to go for a Bible loving disciple of Jesus Christ? I at other times in my travels ask where is brother and sister such and such ones. They left the farm and went into town and united with the Methodists, and others will say our church went down by removals and deaths, and wife and I went in with the Presbyterians, then you have concluded to hide your light under a bushel, have you? Or as Paul said you have concluded to hold the truth in unrighteousness. We want to be cautious what we do, there is a day of reckoning coming, we will be called upon to see how we have improved our talents. In those churches we can't improve our talents. Ask yourselves what good can I do for them? What good can they do for me? They won't let you do any good to them, for they wont allow you to teach what you believe in their houses, or meetings. Can they do you any good when you do not believe what they teach? I can't see for the life of me what our folks unite with them for. You are placed in the same condition that Father Rogers was. John in the Revelations says, Come out of her, O my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, for her sins have reached unto heaven. We all have our work to do, and want to have it done when the Master calls, and then he can say, well done good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joys of thy Lord. Can Christ? Will Christ say good and faithful servant, unless it is true? What say you, dear ones? Submitted in love for the truth of God that will make us free. We want to be free men and women in Christ Jesus.

Paris and the Egyptian Question.

London, Jan. 23.—This week again the Egyptian question is more important than Panama. It is the French who take umbrage at the English action in Cairo. It is the French, though not the authors of the recent crisis, who now egg on the Khedive to what only can be his own ruin and mischief to his country should it follow the French lead. It is the French who seem ready to throw Europe into confusion solely for the satisfaction of French vanity. Europe, however, declines to be thrown into confusion. It is the determination to reinforce the British army of occupation in Egypt which has again set the French to blowing trumpets and beating gongs. They have themselves to thank for the measure they resent. It was the counsels of the French press which encouraged the Khedive last week to persevere in his resistance to England. Then came the comments of the Paris newspapers, the question in the French Chamber, the answer of the French Foreign Minister, the remonstrance addressed by order of the French Cabinet to the English Foreign Minister, and all the hurly burly which the French understand so well how to raise at a moment's notice. No wonder if the Khedive was misled and believed himself the champion of a cause which France and perhaps Europe was ready to take up. If there was no echo of Paris elsewhere there was an echo at Cairo. The wretched little sheets of that city caught the French accent and they began to express the French view, to assure the Khedive that he had shown himself a great man, that he was the real ruler of the country, and that he had only to continue as he had begun to give back Egypt to the Egyptians. Demonstrations were gotten up in the streets and at the opera, and a fair imitation of native opinion was manufactured off hand. The Khedive is surrounded, moreover, by evil influences: in other words, by Turkish influences. The effect of all this was to endanger the peace of Cairo and the safety of English and other foreign residents. The further effect was to convince Lord Cromer that the Khedive had not yet learned his lesson, and that to him and to his party and to Egypt generally it must be made clear that English rule in Egypt would be supported by all the force necessary to make it irresistable. Hence the resolve to strengthen the garrison by two battalions. The English force had indeed been reduced rather harshly: an army of 3,000 men is sufficient for peace, but not for war, nor even real danger of disturbance or disorder. It was the Lord Salisbury's policy to reduce it, as English Radicals do not fail to point out. It is Mr. Gladstone's fate to increase it, as French of all parties remark with extreme bitterness. Such an act, says the Debats, is a challenge. The Debats is a most respectable paper, which long since took and has ever since maintained a most extreme line on Egypt. Debats says:

England has long since fulfilled its mission in Egypt. It only remains for it now to fulfill its pledges and depart. A good proof that it has not fulfilled its mission, and that its pledges have not matured, is supplied by the conduct of the Khedive and what has followed upon it. If the English set sail tomorrow from Alexandria what would happen? Disorder and anarchy, to be followed by a fresh occupation of the country, whether by England again or by France or Turkey. Egypt cannot stand alone and nobody supposes it can. If the act of England is a challenge who is going to take it up?

The newspapers of France are a formidable force, but the fleets and armies of France are not yet under their orders.—Chicago Tribune.

My Prayer.

More love, more love to Thee, O Christ,
Is my heart's chief desire,
A love that never shall grow weak,
An ever-burning fire,

A love that shall be firm and true,
A love that shall endure,
A love, though all else pass away,
Changeless shall be, and sure.

A love that shall transcend all things,
However bright and fair,
A love that, well-filled, shall be deep,
A love so choice, so rare.

A love that shall be fed from Thine,
Yes, Thine so pure and free,
A love that cannot be called mine,
Because it comes from Thee.

A love like Paul's, a love like John's,
Intense, devoted, zeal,
A constant love, like Mary's, too,
Sincere, and free from guile.

A waiting love, as hers did wait
Low at the Master's feet;
A love which heard His gracious word,
Making her heart more meet.

More meet; yes, meeker for His love
Within her breast to dwell,
So that, with joy she could exclaim—
"My soul is well, is well."

Oh! may I, then, as doth the hart
Pant for the cooling stream,
Still thirst more thirstingly for Him
While on His breast I lean.

Until in that bright land of love
My heart shall ever be Engaged in wonder, love, and praise,
Of Him who died for me.

—Samuel Joseph Taylor.

An Epistle to Hebrews. Chapter 13.

1. Let brotherly friendship continue.

2. Ignore not friendship to strangers, (or hospitality), for thereby some have entertained angels unawares.

3. Be mindful of those bound, as having been bound along with them; of those who are suffering calamity as yourselves also being in a body.

4. Marriage is honorable in all, and its bed undefiled, though harlots and adulterers God will judge.

5. Let your habit of life be not one of friendship for money. Be content with the things that come to you. For he hath said, I will not leave thee nor forsake thee utterly;

6. So that we are encouraged to say; the Lord is my responsive helper and I will not have feared what man may do to me.

7. Be mindful of your leaders who have talked to you the word of God. Observing carefully the outcome of their conduct of life, imitate their faith.

8. Jesus Christ yesterday and today the same for the ages.

9. Be not misled by diverse and strange teachings. For it is a good thing to have one's heart assured with grace, not with kinds of food, with which those who have walked therein have not been profited.

10. We have one altar from which those who serve the tabernacle for hire have no official-power to eat.

11. For the bodies of those animals, whose blood is being brought into the sacred place by the chief-priest for a sin-offering are accustomed to be burned outside the camp.

12. Therefore, Jesous also, that he might sanctify the royal-people through his own blood, suffered outside the gateway.

13. Let us go out then unto him outside the camp, carrying his reproach.

14. For here we have no abiding city, but are seeking the one destined to be.

15. Through him then let us offer up a sacrifice of praise constantly unto God, that is a fruit offering of lips that confess unto his name.

16. Moreover ignore not the well-doing and the partnership offerings. For with such sacrifices God is well pleased.

17. Trust your leaders and yield to them. For they are wakeful for your souls, as they shall give an account, that they may do this with joy and not with sighing. For this will be unprofitable to you.

18. Offer votive-prayer for us, though we are persuaded that we have a good consciousness since we desire to exemplify good conduct in every way.

19. And all the more do I exhort you to do this that I may be speedily restored to you.

20. And may the God of the peace who led up from among the dead our Lord Jesous, the Great shepherd of the sheep, in the blood of an eternal (or life-long or age-lasting) covenant,

21. Re-establish you in every good thing, that ye may do his will while he doeth in you that which is pleasing in his sight, through Jesous Christ; to whom be the glory for the ages of the ages. Amen.

22. And I exhort you, brethren, to sustain the work of the exhortation. Yea, indeed I have sent it to you in brief.

23. Know that our brother Timothy hath been released, with whom I shall see you if he cometh speedily.

24. Greet all your leaders and all the saints. Those from Italy greet you.

25. The grace be with you all. Amen. To Hebrews.

COMMENT.

"Brotherly friendship" instead of "love" and "friendship to-strangers" instead of "hospitality," R. V. & C. V. Our word "hospitality" is too broad a term to warrant the moral drawn in the rest of the verse here.

Our own experience of "bonds" or suffering of any kind should and no doubt generally does, make us more sympathetic for others. This at-least seems to be the inference to be drawn from the teaching here. As long as we are in body or "the flesh" we will be subject to weakness incident to it both physical and moral, and this should make us lenient and charitable in our judgments of others, is another lesson inculcated here.

"Friendship for money" instead of "love of money," R. V. & C. V., much more significant and suggestive I think and literal moreover.

"Be mindful of your leaders" instead of "Remember them that had the rule over you," R. V. which besides not being literal savors of the papacy.

"The outcome of their conduct of life" instead of "the issue of their life," R. V., not the same thought by any means. "Misled" instead of "carried away," R. V., too indefinite. One might be carried away without being misled.

"Carrying" instead of "bearing," R. V., too ambiguous.

"A fruit-offering" instead of "fruit" merely, R. V.

"The well-doing and the partnership offerings" instead of "to do good and communicate," R. V.

These are all offerings, or should be so considered, as corresponding to similar types under the law.

"Trust your leaders" instead of "obey them that have the rule over you," R. V., too remote to be considered a translation at all.

"Offer votive-prayers" instead of "pray" merely, R. V.

"A good consciousness" instead "a good conscience," R. V. Not the same thought you will see if you reflect upon it.

"Exemplify good conduct" instead of "live honestly" R. V. Good conduct implies much more than mere honesty here and always in the Scriptures.

"Restore" here the same word elsewhere translated "restitution." How would it do to translate the word restitution or to make restitution here?

"Re-establish" instead of "make you perfect." R. V.

Compare the whole of this sentence carefully with the C. V. & R. V. and note the differences. They are too many to comment on here.

"Greet all your leaders" instead "Salute all them that have the rule over you." R. V. It is one thing to go to the front and lead, and another thing to sit behind and drive. The great difference between Christianity and all heathendom is just this. The one says "come on" and the other says "go on."

The one is under the law of love and the other under the law of force. The Eastern Shepherd led the sheep and it is the easiest and best way now. Moreover the figure here is "the Great Shepherd of the sheep" leading. Then Christ taught that the one who served best was to be the greatest in the new regime, not the one who ruled the best.

Current Events and Sundry Thoughts.

The time has arrived in the history of the world, when the prophetic student can feel that his feet are placed upon a firm and steady basis of visible and tangible facts. Current events are now letting in such a flood of light upon the prophetic page, as to enable all earnest servants of Christ to realize that their faith and their hope is rooted and grounded in Jehovah's immutable word. Facts are stubborn things, and often very disagreeable and sorely disappointing to those adversely related to them. The man of God ought never to feel afraid of facts bearing on his faith, the only difficulty is to get at the real facts. My own experience has taught me that real facts are not to be shunned and avoided, out of fear they may cause us to doubt, and question the foundation of our hope. Man once settled in his religious convictions is exceedingly averse to being disturbed, and not unfrequently he will shut his eyes, and run away in order to escape the mental upheaval and changes that threatens him. Such fear on the part of those who comprehend the purpose of God as revealed in the writings of the prophets and apostles is groundless, indeed it betrays a weakness and lack of clearness of perception that is not to be regretted more than blamed.

You cannot judge of facts as purporting to come from the lips of flippant talkers, and superficial thinkers who delight to oppose divine things which they understand not.

Society has always been full of thoughtless minds, characteristicly naked, and empty of divine things The average scoffer is a very small and diminutive person when you come to measure and weigh him, his bulkiness is very deceptive, but disappoints no one more than himself when put to the test.

TIMES OF THE GENTILES.

In Acts xvii. 26, Paul makes use of the following language in his address to the Athenians, "And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation."

How often we have heard public orators in discoursing upon the "brotherhood of man, and the Fatherhood of God," quote the first part of Paul's language above, as if that was the one great and paramount truth to be learned, and the overshadowing thought of the apostle's mind, that God had made of one blood all nations of men.

Indeed the "brotherhood of man and the Fatherhood of God" has come to be a hackneyed phrase, expressive of a sentiment to which the natural man ascribes divinity and holiness, and even the unbelieving scoffer be he profane or pious, is almost willing to credit Paul with inspiration in the utterance of this sentiment, if in nothing else. But after all is said and done, what does it amount to? Of what avail is it as an accepted fact, "that all men are brothers, and God their Father?" It does not often temper and soften man's inhumanity to man—it does not inspire man to love his neighbor as himself—it does not eradicate from the human heart selfishness and cruelty—it does not feed the starving poor, and give liberty to the oppressed—in a word it does not establish justice, equality, fraternity and peace among this great world wide brotherhood of men.

Eloquence, poetry and song, have derived much of their charm from the inspiration of Paul's words, but only a momentary charm, exquisitely pleasing and delightful, as a kind of dreamy sentimentalism,—an ideal thing of beauty to look upon and admire, but not very practical and useful as the world goes.

What was in the apostle's mind, a merely incidental statement of fact preparatory to the announcement of a great truth of immense and far-reaching concern to the world of mankind, has been magnified out of all proportion, even to the exclusion of that which is yet to change the history and shape the destiny of the world. Those who have such a fondness for Paul's words concerning the universal brotherhood of man, are equally indifferent, if not absolutely averse to the other statements that he make in the same connection.

God has not only made of one blood all nations of men, but he adds,

1. He hath determined, and appointed their times,

2. And predetermined the bounds of their habitation.

These are the statements that catch the eye of all those who are in real earnest in the service of Christ.

That all men are brothers by nature and God their Creator, is one of those truths evident to the natural man, and Paul incidentally quotes one of their own poets as saying, "we are the offspring of God." So much then by way of introduction. I purpose in a few short articles to follow this one, to show that the appointed times are nearly run out, and that the evening time of Gentile times is now current. I do this because I feel convinced that we now have sufficient data to warrant us in searching and re-examining the ground so often gone over concerning the prophetic dates of Daniel and John.

Every man and woman, who is intelligently and devoutly intent upon attaining unto eternal life and an inheritance in God's Kingdom cannot afford to be indifferent to the signs of these times. Release from the toil, care and vexation incident to the struggle for existence, pending this mortal life, will surely be welcome to all such whose affections are set upon things divine and heavenly.

It is no time to be lukewarm, and there is no excuse for trifling with things sacred and eternal. Better abandon the truth entirely, than to be half hearted in its service. Go with the world wholly or not at all. There is no satisfaction in trying to serve two masters, for in such an effort we make ourselves distasteful to both. He that tries to be, or is the friend of the world, is declared to be the enemy of God. We cannot afford to hazard all for the friendship of this world—that is passing away. Our serious attention is demanded; and today we are commanded to hear his voice, and to hear no other.

Here is food for thought for cigarette smokers, if they have any brain to think with: "Have you any vices?" asked the doctor of his patient. "I smoke cigarettes," replied the patient. "You have softening of the brain." "Would cigarettes give me that?" "You wouldn't smoke cigarettes unless you had it."

Letter Drawer.

Dear Restitution:

Your kind hint in Jan. 11th caused me to look after my subscription, and find that it expires on Feb. 3. So find enclosed $1.50 to renew for another year. I cannot do without you. I have been your weekly pupil for many years.

I am 88 years old. Through your columns, and my blessed Bible, I trust I have learned the truth.

This is all the preaching I have although there are seven sectarian churches in this town of 800 inhabitants. I think I am the only person in it believing in the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the Name of Jesus Christ. I know of no brother or sister nearer than 20 miles. Sometimes I feel quite desolate. How could I do without your weekly visits? I do pray that the good Lord and his faithful ones may sustain you a few years longer to sound out the words of truth to a perishing world. I do love the letter drawer. O pray, pray one and all, that our faith fails not through the perilous times that are just upon this ungodly world.

Your Sister in hope of eternal life through the resurrection.

Mrs. O. B. Cady.

Dear Restitution:

Enclosed you will find $2.00 to extend my subscription for The Restitution.

We find in St. Luke xxiii. 46, that Jesus commended his Spirit to his Father's hands and then gave up the Ghost. By turning to the dictionary we find the meaning of Ghost to be a spirit, an apparition.

Could some of the Brothers give an explanation?

Your Brother.

Peter H. Damude.

Dear Restitution:

We feel that we could not do without The Restitution. It is our only preacher of the Gospel at present. We used to have a little band of believers here, but they have all gone but two families. Some moved away and some have died. I love to read the splendid articles. It does my soul good to read Brother B. Wilson's articles. He seems like a father to me although I never had the pleasure of meeting him. I began to take the Banner in the sixties, and oh, what light I received from them. I have a number of them sewed together, and have loaned them until they are getting badly worn. There are so many good articles written by the brothers and sisters, I will not try to name all of them. The letter drawer is a favorite with my wife.

Inclosed please find $2.00, $1.50 for The Restitution for one year, the other 50 cents for that sister spoken of in The Restitution of Jan. 25. I would send more but cannot spare the means just now.

L. D. Lang.

Dear Brothers and Sisters:

I take great comfort in reading your letters found in The Restitution, of the blessed hope we have of our soon coming King. Bro. Joblin is an able writer, and long may he live to continue his work.

It is very seldom that we have the gospel preached here in its purity. About two years ago Brother Whitsett held a meeting for us, which we shall long remember. Also Brother Prime, and last of all Brother A. J. Eychaner preached one discourse here that I shall never forget. May the Lord bless and save him in the good work he is in.

We are striving in our weak way to serve our Master, and doing all the good we can to advance the truth as it is found in the blessed Book of all books.

I saw a short letter from Brother R. J. Hill not long since. It did me much good to hear from him as he is the one that showed me the way, and buried me in baptism in Christ, near Pleasantville, Iowa, in 1871. I would love to see him once again this side of eternity, but I know I shall see him then, when Christ shall appear. Remember me in your prayers.

Your Brother in Christ.

G. W. Haynes.

Dear Restitution:

As I read the many words of comfort, advice and warnings, from your columns, often think how can we be so careless, so indifferent to the cause we love so well. So careless to our own salvation.

Brothers and sisters, let us examine ourselves. Have we added the seven Christian graces?

Peter tells us to add to our faith virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, charity, for if ye do these things ye shall never fall, but an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

If we have added these graces we will have an abundant entrance, not just a mere getting in. That is what I hope to be worthy of, but I find that mortality is weak. We must overcome our selfish nature if we ever obtain that entrance. I often think the Spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak. We must put down self and exalt Christ. Exalt him in our lives, doing all the good we can.

Brothers and sisters, let us awake, let us put forth efforts as never before, knowing that we are living in grand but awful times. Grand, because Jesus is near. Near to redeem his own. Awful because the wrath of God is to be poured out upon all nations.

With all these waymarks before us what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness. Wherefore beloved seeing that ye look for these things, be diligent, that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless.

Let us watch and pray, and live real Christians that we may be worthy to hear the summons from our Lord, "Come my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee. Hide thyself as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast."

Your Sister in hope.

Mrs. W. A. Moore.

Dear Restitution:

After reading the testimony of others I want to add my testimony with those that are looking for that Blessed Hope, to-wit: the redemption of the body, and for our Lord from heaven, for it is "unto them that look for him that he shall appear the second time without sin unto salvation." He came as a sin offering once, but when he comes again it will be unto salvation, and then our sojourn in the wilderness shall have been passed and we will have administered unto us an abundant entrance into that everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Then it is that we will understand the great plans of God, and see his superior wisdom in leading through affliction and distress to work together for his glory and our good.

But let us understand the plain revelation he has given us in the Bible, and not as some are that say in Paul's epistles as also the other Scriptures are some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest. Let us understand for if we wrest the Scriptures it is to our own destruction, 2 Pet. iii. 16.

It is only through Christ that we have redemption, and especially we Gentiles who were aliens from the commonwealth of Israel and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope and without God in the world. But now, thanks to our God, since Jesus Christ has appeared as a sin offering he "puts no difference between us and the Jews after the flesh, purifying our hearts by faith." To this also agrees the words of the Prophet Amos: "After this I will return and will build again the tabernacle of David which is fallen down, and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up, that the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord, who doeth all these things," Acts xv. 16, 17; Amos ix. 11, 12. Has this tabernacle of David been rebuilded? If not we are yet strangers to the covenants of promise and aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, for it is after this tabernacle of David that has fallen down has been rebuilded that the residue of men, Gentiles, might seek after the Lord. Before there could be taken out of the Gentiles a people for his name this tabernacle of David had to be reconstructed.

What was necessary to be done before the Gentiles could be called by Jesus name or "upon whom my name is called?" When the fulness of time was come God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons, Gal. iv. 4-5. The tabernacle of David was fallen down, but in Christ it is raised up again. This Jesus, then, is "the building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens," which we are looking for from heaven, so that we may be clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life. If you will read Acts xv., you will see that the Jews had been disputing with the apostle Paul saying that except they be circumcised after the manner of Moses they could not be saved, and sent Paul and Barnabas to Jerusalem to enquire of the apostles and elders about the matter. It was at that meeting that James quoted what Amos had said to prove that God had visited the Gentiles to take out of them a people for his name. Hence the tabernacle of David had been rebuilded before this discussion in Jerusalem. "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel for he hath visited and redeemed his people, and hath raised up an horn of salvation for us in the house of his servant David," Luke i. 68-69. If our life is hid with Christ in God, or in the Anointed One by God we are in that tabernacle of David which has been raised, and when Christ who is our life shall appear, then we shall be clothed upon and appear with him in glory.

Brethren and sisters, I love to read your letters. Let us be faithful to him that loved us—enemies to Israel—and exhort one another and so much the more as ye see the day approaching. Jesus soon will come and take away these many miles that separate us, and gather us together in one great family, where we may sit at his feet and hear him tell of all the wonderful works of God, and how he has loved us and guided our thoughts lest we should be tripped up by the tradition of men. Yours patiently waiting.

The Restitution.

The Restitution advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

The Verdict in what has become known as the Panama Scandal case in Paris, is a surprise to many, as it involves several well known names. Count Ferdinand de Lesseps, his son Charles de Lesseps, each are sentenced to five years imprisonment, and Baron Cottu, M. Eiffel, and M. Fontaine, each to two years, besides all are to pay heavy money fines. As the elder de Lesseps is now 88 years old, the sentence seems in his case at least to be severe.

Brother, Sister, have you sent on the name of that new subscriber? •

Are any of us so wedded to our own opinions that we are afraid to search for Truth? •

The best resolve we can think of just now, is, that sin shall not lord it over us; we will not be its slaves. •

When Jesus comes he says: "Well done, good and faithful servant;" not successful or influential, but faithful servant; that is within the reach of all who are the Lord's. •

Gladstone, to whom the Irish have been looking for liberty and redress, seems to have blasted all their hopes, so that agitation for entire seperation from England has commenced. •

An observant writer of fifty years ago, said most of his friends lived "in a religious diving bell; their life breath seemed to come through a small tube, and consequently there was an occasional gasp for more. How much better it would be to float, into circumambient free air of heaven, and drink in something of the fulness of God. But for this, we require spiritual lungs." •

The gift of God is Eternal Life, through Jesus Christ our Lord. "The dream of multitudes now is that they can earn it, or qualify for it by moral goodness, personal merit and religious striving; and not a few object to receive it unless it may come to them as the common boon of humanity—a sort of right belonging to the race. Logically, all such persons would dispense with a Savior. They think they only need a teacher. •

Emboldened by the success of the past, the catholic hierarchy now boldly avow it as their destiny to rule this country religiously. At the Annual Dinner of the Catholic Club at Philadelphia, Feb. 7, Cardinal Gibbons Archbishops Corrigan and Ryan and other dignitaries made [illegible]. The closing words of Archbishop Ryan's speech is a fair [illegible] of the sentiment of the meeting. It was as follows: "I hope that the Catholic Hierarchy will be worthy of this glorious country, which in the future it will religiously rule." •

Isaac Leeser an English Jew, some years ago published a revised translation of the Old Testament in English, and we commend to our readers his rendering of Gen. xxxii. 31. It is as follows: "And Jacob called the name of the place Peniel, for I have seen an angel of God face to face, and my life hath been preserved." Compare John i. 18, Ex. xxxiii. 20, 1 John iv. 12, and then see that this Jewish rendering is in harmony with Is. lxiii. 9, where the angel of his presence is spoken of. •

The rendering of Isaiah xxvi. 19, by another scholar seems so much in harmony with the New Testament teaching concerning the Body of the Anointed that we think all will be delighted with it: "Thy dead shall live; (as) my dead body they shall arise; awake, and sing, ye that dwell in dust; for the dew of lights is thy dew, and the earth shall cast forth the dead." The translator evidently understood this language to be that of the head of the church. •

The heathen question troubles some people far more than their own eternal interests. They are so good and tender hearted that if they had had the management of things it is very doubtful if the flood would have come, or if the cities of the plains would not be still sinks of iniquity. Note the difference:—God sets them forth as patterns of utter destruction. •

In the year of our Lord 1893,—two hundred and twenty years since Whitby first taught that the world was to be converted by preaching before the coming of the Lord, and after untold millions of Bibles have been scattered with a view to this result, what do we see? We see the world growing worse and worse while growing more and more intelligent. Millions are contributed in this country to send missionaries to heathen lands: but here at home many who long taught the world's conversion have become discouraged. They see there's a wrong somewhere. Of course they cannot be mistaken; the book must be at fault or the world would have been well nigh converted by this time. They are giving the book a thorough overhauling, and throwing out all the doubtful and useless parts,—they being the judges. We wonder what they will do about Matt. xxiv. 36-40? Would they not be wise to consult that passage before commencing another campaign for the world's conversion with the abbreviated Book? Would it not be well to look about them and see by the signs of the times where we are drifting?

Our readers will have heard of the Texas horror. A colored man was burned alive after the most awful tortures; being burned with hot irons from head to feet, and the irons being even thrust down his throat.

One of the Cleveland papers said of the awful affair: "The Great American Republic, the nation which claims the leadership of mankind in the onward march of civilization, stands doubly disgraced before the world, for inflicting tortures upon a man because his skin was black, which surpass the worst atrocities of Bashi-Bazouks upon a field of carnage, or Spanish monks in the chambers of the Inquisition." It is doubtful if any conceivable crime would have brought a like fate upon a white man; this, of itself tells a sad tale, and should fire every lover of the truth with a burning desire to see the Great Deliverer inaugurate his righteous government. Brother and Sisters, there is no help for the world till he come. Let us shout the Apocalyptic Welcome, "Come Lord Jesus, come quickly." Amen. •

The Woman's Seed. No. 3.

In resuming our study of the "Woman's Seed," we offer a few additional remarks concerning "the blood of Christ." We are told in Heb. : 4, that "It is impossible that the blood of bulls and goats should take away sin." The reason is obvious. The blood of bulls and goats ratified the first covenant, the law, which we are told was but a shadow of the future good things (see Heb. x. 1) and which only sanctified and purified the flesh; it was not a life-giving instrument; the great desideratum was blood to ratify a covenant that could give life—life after death. Man only lost one life. He only had one life to lose. As he only needed one life at the beginning, he only needs to secure one life for the future; that life is in Christ (1 John v. 11, 12). How came Christ to be possessed of that life? A very important question; no one could answer it but by the word of the Spirit; and we cannot adequately express our gratitude to God our Father for the information imparted to us in the 20th verse of the xiii. chapter of Hebrews: "Now the God of peace that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that Great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do his will;—working in you that which is well pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ, to whom be glory forever and over. Amen."

Clearly Christ was brought again from the dead through the efficacy of his own blood. It was precious blood. By it the life-giving covenant was ratified—became effective. It had been typically ratified immediately after it was made, but now really. How painful to think that so many whom we esteem, persist that all the righteous who lived and died between Adam and Christ went straight to glory, before the new covenant had been ratified. We are eager to show them how absolutely necessary it was for Christ to obtain life through that covenant, first. He is the life-giver, since he has received the life. He could not give what he did not have. Oh," the God of peace, brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep." Then follows the means employed to bring him again from the dead: "Through the blood of the everlasting covenant." If even the Spotless One could not live again without the ratified covenant, how could others? Blessed Jesus, his blood was not tainted by sin, his blood was the blood of the new covenant. "This cup is the new covenant in my blood, that in your behalf being poured out. (Diaglott); these were the precious words he said. On behalf of us poured out. Why on behalf of us? That we might have life through the covenant ratified by it. This was the great object of his mission. "I am come that they might have life," John x. 10. He came to ratify the covenant of life so that men might be as he was, brought again from the dead, through the blood of the everlasting covenant.

Alas, what myriads sing and pray and talk about the blood, in utter ignorance of the covenant it ratified; and worse than that—utterly reject the covenanted blessings; accept the blood, but the blessings of Abraham it guarantees through the covenant, they will have nothing of; yes, accept the blood, but persist in choosing their own blessing. Sing and preach and pray about the blood, but depend upon some part of him that had no blood for a happy immortality for their souls in heaven. We mean that the real Christ they trust in, never died, never could be brought again from the dead.

We want to say here, that the first gospel proclaimed to man, named the Woman's Seed as the crusher of the serpent's head. It was he whose heel was bruised; but which will be entirely healed before long, we trust. At present he suffers when his mystic body suffers. He had blood, had the Woman's Seed. He could have sinned, but did not, and it was because he knew no sin that his blood was acceptable to God. Be it observed that we are religious or morally organized, and hence accountable; and therefore only one of our race who was obedient unto death could become our Savior. These conditions could neither exist in an angelic nature, nor in that of bulls and goats.

But another Scripture comes to mind that will assist us, we trust: "For it became him for whom are all things, and by whom are all things—that is—God, who spake and it was done—it became him, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the Captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings: for both he that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified, are all of one—blood, one nature—for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren; saying, I will declare thy name unto my brethren, in the midst of the congregation will I sing praise unto thee. And again, will put my trust in him. And again, Behold I and the children which God hath given me. Forasmuch then, as the children are flesh and blood, he also himself, likewise took part of the same, that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is the Devil, and deliver them who through fear of death, were all their life time subject to bondage. For verily he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham;" Heb. ii. 10-16, so that he could die.

We see from this that he is the veritable seed of the woman, for he destroys him who had the power of death, that is the devil,—the Accuser, referred to in Gen. iii. 15, as bruising the head of the serpent. All this, the nature of angels would have prevented him from doing, and so frustrated Redemption's Plans.

Of course we know what people say about all these passages: "Yes, yes," reluctantly, but insist that there was something that pre-existed. But pre-existence means existence before existence, which makes nonsense. But what name does Scripture give to that something? If no name is given, how do they know there was something? What is it called? Is it called "Something?" Is Something the name of a part of Christ that pre-existed? Is that "Something" ever called Christ Jesus? We may depend upon it that it is not, or else it would not be said that "Something" pre-existed. Certainly it was not the Woman's Seed that pre-existed. There was a woman but no seed when the promise was made. Again, Abraham and HIS Seed are to bless all the families of the earth. Abraham's Seed surely did not exist before Abraham. Still again, It is the fruit of David's loins that is to sit upon his throne and be King over all the earth; and surely this must be the one born of Mary, for the angel promised this very throne to him. How could David's seed pre-exist? It was he born of Mary that was killed on our behalf. He shed the blood of the body formed of Mary the unmarried woman. That precious blood surely never pre-existed.

We now call attention to Heb. x. 10, to show once for all that we are sanctified by the will of God through the offering of the BODY of CHRIST, once for all: NOT through "something" that pre-existed. Surely the body was born of the woman, if anything was. And solemnly, in view of this, we ask, is it not the Body, the person of Christ that we ought to be interested in, if it was his body that was offered for us? And now, if we go back to that upper room again and hear him say, "This is my body which is given for you; this do in remembrance of me," and "this is my blood of the new covenant which is shed for you," and with the heart believe it, we shall be little concerned about Something without a name that pre-existed.

That these reflections and distinctions may assist others to a clearer perception of God's saving purposes, we fervently pray, because all truth is in harmony, and every additional ray helps us to see still more. And he who fancies that he knows about all the truth of God, and year after year, only rings the changes on what he learned years ago, is to be sincerely pitied. •

The Forces of Evil.

No man fully understands the force of his natural propensities until some object is presented which calls them into action. The fruit presented to Eve was the exciting cause of her sin, and brought to the surface that inward longing to become wise. It developed that unholy ambition to become as gods. It was this single act of disobedience which interrupted the story of God's goodness and proud man's inability of resisting the forces of evil in his own strength. All of earth's sorrows and miseries, degradation and wretchedness are clearly traceable to this one act of disobedience. This was the source of that stream of evil which, through all the intervening centuries, has widened and deepened and deluged the world its results. So complete was the ruin thus wrought that not only man suffered, but all creation has shared alike in the universal ruin. It was because of Adam's sin that nature suffered, and when man lost his innocence creation lost its beauty. The beautiful work of of God has been sadly marred by sin, and everywhere ruin is written. The ground was cursed for man's sake, "made subject to vanity not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same in hope." The thorns and thistles grow without cultivation, and if man would get bread from the earth he must do it by the sweat of his brow.

This is not man's place of resting—incessant toil is the price of his bread. The soil must be tilled, the weeds subdued and the good seed scattered ere man can be benefitted, and then his labors would be in vain were it not for the rain and sunshine which God alone can give.

Thus has it ever been with fallen humanity. Man left to himself will degenerate. If he will not suffer the heavenly husbandman to break up the fallow ground of his rebellious heart and by grace divine subdue the roots of bitterness and destroy the seeds of evil and sow good seed, the harvest will be fraught with the consequences of evil. Man is of the earth earthy, and all his inclinations are in that direction. The imaginations of his heart are evil and only evil. He is utterly lost so far as any power in himself is concerned. Evil is ever predominant. The prince of the power of the air sways his sceptre over all the earth, and exerts an influence which humanity of itself cannot resist or overcome. The first man Adam was tempted and fell. There was no reason why he should have yielded. He was pure and holy, so were all his surroundings. The work of a divine hand had been pronounced very good. It was perfection. There was nothing to gain by yielding to temptation. The highest pinnacle of glory and fame was Adam's. "Thou hast set him over the work of thine hands." Nothing to gain, but, oh, how much to lose.

Suddenly was the lord of creation hurled from his lofty position and driven out of the garden to become an exile from luxury and ease. He is driven forth to toil and suffer. But with the interruption of the story of God's goodness (for there was nothing but goodness before the fall) began the unfolding of God's mercy. There was mercy in the heart of God before, for his mercy is from everlasting to everlasting, but there was no object on which to bestow his mercy until man had fallen. There was no need of a redeemer until man had sold himself. We see the beautiful unfolding of God's love story in the first promise made to man, "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head." Oh, matchless grace and mercy! Who but an all wise and benevolent God could conceive of such a wonderful plan? Who but a loving God could provide such a remedy for sin? Man's strength made perfect in weakness? The mighty to save sent to the rescue. O, how ungrateful through all the ages has mankind been! "When there was no eye to pity and no arm to save, his own arm brought salvation." God sent his prophets, "rising" up early and sending them," and they were stoned. He sent the Baptist as the forerunner of a Christ and they beheaded him. He sent his own Son with "healing in his wings," and they crucified him, and, as if this were not enough to exhaust his matchless grace, he has sent his Holy Spirit to convict the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment, and man, true to his natural instincts, has also rejected this heavenly agency.

What more can be done? The vasts treasuries of heavenly love have been opened wide that lost man might be saved, and yet the masses are unsaved. The antediluvians were destroyed because of this great wickedness. The cities of the plain suffered the vengeance of eternal fire because of their voluptuousness. Israel, God's chosen people, were scattered and peeled because of their unbelief, and to-day are a living monument of God's displeasure against unbelief. The prevailing sin of earth's closing moment is unbelief. "When the Son of man cometh shall he find faith on the earth?" The counsels of the Almighty are set at naught. His word is handled deceitfully by those who profess to promulgate its all important truth. His professed church is in a lukewarm condition. Pride and popularity have taken the place of meekness and humility, but in spite of all that is dark and sinful, and amid the deepening gloom the faithful watchmen are lifting up the trumpet and the warning notes of coming doom are penetrating the darkest corners of the earth, and all along the line of the steadily advancing hosts is heard the cry, "Behold he cometh." The morning without clouds will, ere long, break, and the perfect day dawn, never again to be marred by sin. Never again will the story of God's goodness be interrupted, but through the age of ages will be the unfoldings of the exceeding riches of his grace.—David C. Dudley, in Crisis.

The soul cannot be unfruitful if it realizes fellowship with Jesus.

The Contingent Fund.

To the Household of Faith Greeting:

My heart responded Amen, Amen, to Brother Wagoner's suggestion in The Restitution of Jan. 25.

I enclose $5.00 for the fund.

O, to think of any of our able men being silent for the want of means in these last days. I fear we are not showing our "faith by our works." We are not using our means to spread the news of the soon coming King.

Brother Wagoner has made a wise suggestion, now brethren come to the front, and help in this "Macedonian Cry."

I know there are many, many, that could give $25.00 and never miss it, and if you sacrifice a little it will do you good. "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof." Soon, very soon, all you can occupy will be a resting place in "Mother Earth." The moments are fast slipping from us; let us improve them by using our means to spread the good news, and by living a godly life, so that when Jesus comes He will own us and crown us.

Yours in hope of eternal life,
Nancy Barber.

Editor Restitution:

Please find enclosed Draft for $0.50. I send you three new names, will send you more as soon as I can. I think we ought to be alive to every good work. I think ministers ought to speak about subscribing to The Restitution, as it is a good preacher, and he is growing, so I think we ought to feed him least he become dwarfed.

I have seen some of the brethren that can subscribe to political papers, but cannot afford to take The Restitution, but where there is a will there is a way. Did not Christ approve of the offerings in the Temple? Did not Judas receive and keep money in the bag to help along? So we ought to help to spread the truth by publication as well as by supporting men to preach the truth. Now if we believe what we preach, that the time is short, let us do all that we can, acts weigh a great deal heavier than words. So I say, brethren, be up and doing. A faith without works is dead being alone. So I say, work while it is day.

We look around and see those that we know are in darkness, how they will work and strain every nerve financially and otherwise.

It is not the mere knowledge of Christ, who is revealed to us in the Scriptures. To love Christ, and to abide in Him is the only way to bring forth much fruit. Does the branch of the vine find it difficult to bear sweet grapes? God's order is absolutely essential to that which he recognizes as Religion. He will receive no offering save from the hand of an accepted worshipper.

Brethren, let us have a will and I infer the Lord will provide the way. If we show that we have courage, it will encourage others. The Lord loveth a cheerful giver. It is more pleasant to give, than to receive.

We are all assured we have the one faith, and if so, let us help those that are not able to help themselves. May we all labor so that we may be able to give a good account of our stewardship, and enter into that rest which is promised to the people of God, is the prayer of your Brother in Christ.

J. W. Gamble.

Dear Restitution:

Will you please allow me a little space in The Restitution that we may make our requests known.

We are a lonely little band here, six in number. We have rented a hall with a seating capacity of one hundred or more, but we have no preaching of any consequence.

Now is there a preaching brother at liesure and not tied down, that would like to come and settle down in this part of Kansas, or in this city (Wichita) and preach for a reasonable compensation. I know of no place that labor could be more profitably had, than in this part of Kansas. Now who will respond?

We believe the time short to work in, and there are thousands of good people here that have never heard the truth.

A little kingdom, a little restitution, a little inheritance, and where and when will these things be, might be good medicine to give. Is there anyone ready to devote their time and service for a comfortable living?" Who will repsond?

We are ready to correspond with any brother of the Abrahamic Faith, relative to this business.

We can be addressed at 1020 S. Mead Ave. Wichita, Kan.

Married by Evangelist Joblin at the home of the Bride's brother, Mrs. Luther Fish, Cedar Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio. Feb. 8th, 1893, Mr. A. W. Woodbury, of Springfield, Ohio, and Mrs. Henrietta Matilda Cook, of Cleveland.

Sister Woodbury is the daughter of Sister and Brother Wm. Fish, late of Dayton, Ohio, where for a number of years they were faithful witnesses for the Truth as it is in Jesus. The daughter early in life espoused the same cause, and still clings tenaciously to the grand old covenants of promise. We are sorry to see her vacant chair; but our sorrow is tempered with the assurance that she has a companion for life who cherishes the same blessed Hope. May the good Lord bless them and make them a blessing is our prayer.

Death's Doings.

Still again the enemy has invaded our circle. Sister Electa Conrad, who for years has courageously warded him off, has at last fallen under his power. Of a strong constitution, she has for years suffered on and on, till we thought she might possibly live for years to come, yet, though she had passed her 85th year. The end came suddenly, on Friday the 3rd inst., only a few hours notice of speedy dissolution being given. For one of her age she retained her mental faculties remarkably, and never tired of hearing or speaking of the glorious Hope of Life through Christ at the Resurrection, which she laid hold of 25 years ago. The funeral services at the Church of The Blessed Hope on Sunday were largely attended. We laid her peacefully to rest, hoping to meet again, where there shall be no more death.

M. Joblin.

O, what would it bring to you if it should be heralded to-day over all the earth and heaven: "He is coming to-morrow?" How many of us could say from deepest impulse of our being: "Even so, come, Lord Jesus, come quickly. Amen?" —A. B. Simpson.

He had never been slow of speech when he could bless the sons of men, but he would not say a single word for himself. "Never man spake like this man" and never man was silent like him.—Spurgeon.

The Story of Jesus.

Tell me the story of Jesus,
Write on my heart every word.
Tell me the story most precious,
Sweetest that ever was heard;
Tell how the angels, in chorus,
Sang as they welcomed his birth—
Glory to God in the highest!
Peace and good tidings to earth.

Fasting alone in the desert,
Tell of the days that he passed
How for our sins he was tempted,
Yet was triumphant at last;
Tell of the years of his labor,
Tell of the sorrow he bore,
He was despised and afflicted,
Homeless, rejected and poor.

Tell of the cross where they nailed him,
Writhing in anguish and pain;
Tell of the grave where they laid him,
Tell how he liveth again;
Love in that story so tender,
Clearer than ever I see:
Stay, let me weep while you whisper
Love paid the ransom for me.

The Predicted Restitution.

The regeneration which takes place at the Millennium is to be preceded by a sweeping away of all moral evil from the earth—the almighty act of vengeance on the part of the King against the wicked powers of the earth. For almost every prophecy which portrays the coming glory, testifies to the "indignation of the Lord against all nations" (see the prophecy in Isaiah xxiv. to xxvii.) So also Christ testifies, that at his coming, "He will send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend and them who do iniquity." And also Ezekiel shows at length (chap. 39). And so the Revelation testifies that Christ, attended by heaven's army, shall go forth in battle against the Beast and the False Prophet and their armies. (Rev. xix.)

The earth is to be purified by fire. Isaiah, the prophet, testifies: "The Lord will come with fire and with his chariots, like a whirl-wind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire. For by fire and by sword will the Lord plead with all flesh, and the slain of the Lord shall be many" (chap. lxvi. 15, 16.) The Apostle Peter also testifies "that the elements shall melt with fervent heat," and thence the new heavens and new earth shall emerge. And lest any should doubt whether God can save any alive under such circumstances, the apostle points, in his second epistle, to Noah saved and to Lot saved amid a general destruction, in order to show that "the Lord knows how to deliver the godly out of trial, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished."

After the desolating judgments with which the returning Lord and King will visit the nations, there will still be some left when the storm has passed by, who will doubtless form the source from which the nations will spring who shall dwell on the earth during the succeeding millennial era. For so Isaiah testifies as to this spared remnant in the midst of the widespread destruction on the earth (chap. xxiv. 5, 6, 13, 16, 21, 22.) And so Zechariah declares also that some shall escape of the nations destroyed of the Lord when they come against Jerusalem, and that these shall afterwards serve him (chap. xiv. 16.)

This regeneration shall be attended by the national repentance and conversion of the Jewish people, their gathering to their own land, and their perpetual residence there, exalted as a people to be a blessing in all the earth. This many passages already quoted declare (see Isaiah lxi. 7-9; lx. 9-14.

In the "Regeneration," therefore, there will be living men in the flesh, distinct from the glorified saints who rule with Christ, and these men will be organized as nations. For so Isaiah speaks of the remnant who are escaped of the nations after the Lord's judgment of the ungodly. So John speaks of the nations of the earth as walking in the light of the New Jerusalem.

To bring about this blessed condition of things the Spirit shall be poured out in an unprecedented manner on all flesh. So the prophet Joel declares (chap. ii. 28-32) pointing, by his predicted signs, to the end of this dispensation of the Spirit, and to the conversion of the Gentiles, a pregnant prophecy that takes in the whole Messianic time, as one vast period, the beginning and end of which are foreshortened into one and the same picture.

All the nations shall be holy. So Isaiah says to Israel: "All thy children shall be taught of God." "None shall say to another, know the Lord, for all shall know him." "They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea."

The race, on earth then made holy, will continue on the earth, in perpetual generations. For so Psalm lxxii. intimates, as already quoted (verse 5, 7, 8, 17.) So God declares that the earth will abide safe from destruction by flood under his everlasting covenant, throughout "perpetual generations." The curse shall be removed from the earth, and inanimate creation will participate in the joy of the "sons of God." So testify the prophets. Thus the Regeneration will be a blessed change affecting the whole earth and the race living upon it. The long winter has indeed stripped off the foliage and made it for a long time waste and barren. But the reviving spring, is soon to come and bring forth a "summer" of glory. —Chas. K. Imbrie D. D. in Christian Herald.

Is It The Land of Ophir?

Mashonaland, the new and fertile section of Central Africa which is now being opened up to civilization and Christianity, is proving a land of wonders. Its ruined cities are attracting the attention of antiquarians and scientists everywhere. Mr. J. T. Bent, an extensive author and traveler, who has lately made a tour of Mashonaland, has written a book of these wonderful ruined cities. The country contains evidences of a civilization that dates back beyond the reach of history. There are some who believe it to be Ophir of olden times, which was famous for its rich gold mines. The cities of Mashonaland seem to have been strongly fortified, if one may judge from the character of the ruins. There are round towers found among the circular ruins at Zimbabwe. These towers were presumbly built by some people who came from a distance for some special purpose who took extreme precautions to fortify themselves against attack. It is inferred that they may have been gold-seekers from Arabia. No inscriptions are found to give the slightest clue to their nationality, but as there are traces of Semetic blood in the population of that part of Africa, it is not impossible that that fact may be sufficiently significant to help the ethnologists. If they were merely seekers after gold, it is not surprising that their identity has been lost. It is with nations as with individuals. The man who devotes his life to the pursuit of wealth passes away and is forgotten. Those whose memory the world cherishes are they who have rendered it the best service, and of the righteous, God says he will "make their name to be remembered in all generations." Psalm xlv. 17.

Christ's Death Warrant.

Of the many interesting relics and fragments brought to light by the persevering researches of antiquarians, none could be more interesting to the philanthropist and believer than the following, the most imposing judicial document ever recorded. It has been thus faithfully translated:

Sentence rendered by Pontius Pilate, Acting Governor of Lower Galilee, stating that Jesus of Nazareth shall suffer death on the cross. In the year 17 of the Emperor Tiberius Cesar, and the 27th day of March the City of Holy Jerusalem—Annas and Caiphas being priests, sanctificatoes of the people of God—Pontius Pilate, Governor of Lower Galilee, sitting in the Presidential chair of the fractory, condemns Jesus of Nazareth to die on the cross, between two thieves, the great and notorious evidence of the people saying:

1. Jesus is a redeemer.
2. He is seditious.
3. He is the enemy of the law.
4. He calls himself falsely the Son of God.
5. He calls himself falsely the King of Israel.
6. He entered into the temple followed by a multitude having palm branches in their hands.

Order the first Centurion, Quintius Cornelius, to lead him to the place of execution. Forbid any person whomsoever, either rich or poor, to oppose the death of Jesus.

The witnesses who signed the condemnation of Jesus are:

1. Daniel Robani, a Pharisee.
2. Joannes Robani.
3. Raphael Robani.
4. Japel, a citizen.

Jesus shall go out of the City of Jerusalem by the gate of Strannus.

The foregoing is engraved on a copper plate, on the reverse side of which is written: "A similar plate is sent to each tribe." It was found in an antique marble vase, while excavating in the ancient city of Aquilla, in the kingdom of Naples, in the year 1810, and was discovered by the commissioners of art of the French army. At the expedition of Naples it was inclosed in a box of ebony and preserved in the sacristy of the Carthusians. The French translation was made by the commissioners of art. The original is in the Hebrew language. —London Telegraph.

Being Humble and Being Humbled.

Being humble before God is one thing; being humbled before God is altogether another thing. We are humbled before God because we have not been humble. We are humbled on account of sin; but had we been humble we should have received grace to prevent it. For "God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble."

The only humble place is in the presence of God. It is only out of his presence that we are in danger of being lifted up. People indeed say that it is dangerous to be too often on the mount. But the danger is not in being on the mount, but in coming down from the mount. When we come down we begin to think that we have been there, and then pride comes in. Paul did not need a thorn when he was in the third heavens. But, after his return, he was in danger of being exalted above measure by the thought that he had been where no one else had been.

True humility does not consist in thinking badly about ourselves, but in never thinking about ourselves at all. This is the place which is hard to reach—to get done with constant repetition of I, I, I. People must be talking of themselves, and their pride is nourished by telling how evil they are, if this suits their theology; just as much as telling of their holiness and conquest, when that suits their theology. It is sadly curious to see some men change their tone as they change their views; just as in the world men make a boast of their vices or of their virtues, as the one or the other may attract notice or admiration. But in either case, it is, I, I, I. Some one has said, "If you begin a sentence with I, there is nothing that a person will not put after it." It is wonderful to hear how men will indulge in the use of that letter under the plea of relating their experience: perhaps the boasting Pharisee called it relating his experience to the praise of God. At any rate, he showed how self-exaltation may be prefaced by "God, I thank thee;" as, sometimes, we find it in assemblies where Christ should be the theme.—The Witness.

A Tighter Clasp.

A little child was passing along a quiet street, clinging with one hand to the mother's dress; but when crossing one of the busiest thoroughfares, I saw the little hand quickly letting go the dress, and seeking a hold of its mother's hand, which when it got it felt safe and content. So it is with us. When pursuing the even tenor of our way, and all goes on quietly and comfortably with us, we are satisfied with the most casual and outward contact with Christ; but when we have to cross the terrible thoroughfares of life, when we are brought face to face with the dangers and distractions of sickness, or bereavement, or sorrow, then we instinctively reach up to clasp the living and loving hand; we long to see the pitying face, and to hear the old familiar voice, "Son, daughter, be of good cheer: it is I, be not afraid."

Promise and Performance.

Plutarch tells a story of two men who were invited by the Athenian authorities to undertake some great public work. One of them was full of tongue and slow of hand; the other was weak in speech, but an excellent workman. They were requested to state publicly how they would undertake the work. The man with the ready tongue stood up before the assembly, and made an eloquent speech, and described the work from point to point, and then he sat down. The other man then rose, and thus addressed the assembly: "Ye men of Athens, what that man has said in words I will make good in true performance." The wisdom of the men of Athens inclined them at once to the selection of this latter man. And so we want deeds, not words; fruit, not leaves. We want doing, not so much discussing, Christians. It has been said—I fear there is great truth in the saying—that religion too often stops where self-denial begin. Ah! and too often we may take up the words of the poet, and say

> "I use my love of others for a gilding
> To make myself look fair."

What you want is to learn to be nobly eccentric. I was struck with a remark in the memoir of Mr. Keith Falconer on this word "eccentric." He said that "the common center is self; the true center is God. If then I live for God I become out of center (that is, eccentric) with respect to those who do not live for him." Let us learn then to be nobly eccentric, and let us see to it that our work is fruit: all work is not fruit. Let us see to it that our labor is service; all labor is not service. What is it that makes work to be fruit and labor to be service? It is Christ in the work and Christ filling the laborer. And let us see to it that progress is the law of labor in our case. Let us never be contented with present attainments or with present efforts. I have read somewhere of one of the most renowned of modern sculptors that, standing before a finished work, he was heard to lament, "My genius is decaying." When asked what he meant he said, "I have never before been satisfied with any work with which I have executed. Up to this time my idea has always been beyond what I could execute, but now I am satisfied, I know that I shall never have a grand idea again; my genius is decaying." And so it is an ill sign, it is, indeed, a symptom of spiritual decay, when we are contented with our spiritual position, our attainments, our efforts. Oh, my friends, let us cultivate a wise spirit of discontent. Let us cultivate a holy, spiritual ambition, not content with that low level which is popularly accepted. Let us walk, by the grace of God, on our high places, not for our own glory, but for the glory of him who has called us to live and to labor for his glory; and for our encouragement let us take those grand words of the prophecy of Daniel, that "the people that do know their God shall be strong and do exploits."—James Bradley.

Poisonous Literature.

Bad books play a large part in the corruption of youth. A bad book is as bad as an evil companion. In some respects it is even worse than a living teacher of vice, since it may cling to an individual at all times. It will follow him, and poison his mind with the venom of evil. The influences of bad books in making bad children is little realized. Evil literature is sold under the name of "dime" and "nickle novels," and also under the heading of such papers as Police Gazette, Police News, and a large proportion of the sensational story books which flood the land. You might better place a coal of fire or a live viper in your bosom, than to allow yourself or your children to read bad literature. It is an awful thing to allow the mind to be thus contaminated.

Many papers and magazines sold at news-stands, and eagerly sought after by young people, are unsuitable to the mind of pure minded youth.

Every parent should closely scrutinize the reading matter that is put before the children.

The reading of works of fiction is one of the pernicious habits to which young folks become devoted and become as inveterate as the use of liquor or opium.

A prominent clergyman says: "You may tear your clothes or break a dish, and repair it again; but the point where the rip or break was made will be evident. It takes less than an hour to do your heart a damage which no time can entirely repair."

However strong and exalted your character, never read bad literature. It leaves bad impressions and that is just the kind of "food" the devil likes to feed to the people.

Higher up the Mountain.

Christians should get up above the smoke and dust and fog of sin and the present world by climbing higher up the mountain of salvation. Get close to the topmost peak and stand by the Lord's side. The way to the top of this grand mountain of the Lord is by way of the valley of humiliation. Let every one be willing to become lowly, and be found at the feet of Jesus learning of him and showing forth the same spirit that was in Jesus. The world is down in the fog of sin and unbelief and sees not that danger is ahead and that soon it will be overtaken by the great judgment day of the Lord. Christian, get up higher where you can see God and feel his spirit and know that you are his child by grace as well as creation. There is a higher life for us all. Shall we have it?—V. F. Hunt.

In Memoriam.

I have been requested by the sons of Bro. R. Appleyard, formerly of South Northfield, Cook Co., Ill., to write something for The Restitution respecting the religious life of their father and my old friend, as they thought I was better posted with regard to his early career than most of his acquaintances.

Bro. Appleyard was born in the same year (1817) and in the same town, Halifax, Yorkshire, England, as the writer. We were scholars in the same Sunday School, of which his father was for a long time superintendent. This school was connected with the General Baptist Church, at that time assembling in a chapel at Haley Hill, but now at North Parade, Halifax. We both became members of the church in early life; I think it was either in 1835 or 1836. For several years we attended to duties as teachers in Sunday School, and active members in the church, until a revival broke out amongst the teachers and larger scholars in school. This also roused both the minister and church into a state of activity, so that in a short time about 70 persons were baptized and added to the church.

About this time A. Campbell's "Essay on Baptism for the Remission of sins," was obtained and read by the writer, and lent to others. The result was that a number believed the doctrine, and withdrew from the church, and with a few others formed a church of Disciples, to attend to first-day ordinances, as specified in Acts ii. 42. We met in a larger upper room, and were zealous in proclaiming the Gospel as we then believed it, in connection with immersion for the remission of sins. Many of our former associates followed us. This roused persecution against us on the part of ministers, deacons, and some of the older members. We were denounced and shunned as heretics; and I am sorry to say that my friend and brother carried it out so far that he would not speak to me on the street. The truth, however, worked its way and gained the ascendency, so that after some of us had emigrated to Illinois in 1844, he left the Baptists himself, and joined the Disciples; and when he and others followed us to Geneva, Ill., in 1849, and I had the pleasure of grasping his hand once more, we believed the same things in common, and his former antipathy had departed.

Bro. Appleyard did not rest until he was assured that he had "the truth as it is in Jesus;" and when he was fully convinced of "the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ," he was immersed into the name of the Lord for the remission of sins, thereby ignoring and publicly proclaiming his former baptism of no avail. From that time forward until his death he kept the faith, and endeavored to keep the ordinances as delivered to the church by the apostles. And now that his race is run, and his course finished, we may confidently say with the Apostle Paul, that "henceforth there is laid up for him a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, will give unto him at that day; and not unto him only, but unto all those also who love his appearing."

Bro. R. Appleyard died rather unexpectedly, both by himself and friends, as he had an appointment for a meeting on the Sunday on which he died, Oct. 16th, 1892.

I have only written the above as supplementary to what Bro. J. F. Wagoner wrote, as published in The Restitution of Nov. 2nd.

DIED.

Peter Innes, of apoplexy, in San Francisco, Cal., on Thursday, Jan. 26th, 1893, at 10 o'clock p. m.,—aged 78 years and 4 months.

Bro. Innes was born at Keith, near Aberdeen, Scotland, September 26, 1815; emigrated to the United States in 1837, and settled in Bristol, Kendall Co., Illinois. For a short time Dr. John Thomas and family resided with him, until the Dr. moved upon a farm which he bought at Long Grove, in the same vicinity. While at Bristol, Bro. Innes married his first wife, who died in childbirth. After residing about ten years in Illinois he returned to Scotland on a visit, and while there met with his friend Dr. Thomas, who was then on a lecturing tour on the Gospel and Crimean war; and also writing and publishing a work called "Elpis Israel." Bro. Innes accompanied his friend to several places where he lectured in Scotland, and became convinced of the truth, and was baptized. When he returned to Illinois in 1848 he brought his aged parents with him to Aurora, Kane Co., where as a respectable and popular merchant tailor he resided many years. In 1857, he was overtaken by the financial crisis of that period, which ruined so many business men, and also by a disastrous fire, which destroyed his business property, on which the insurance had only just expired. From these and some other losses he never fully recovered. After struggling amid adverse circumstances for a few years, he finally retired from business, and settled on a little farm in the suburbs of Aurora. There he lived for a number of years. As old age began to creep along, he felt the severity of Illinois winters, and desired a more equable climate. In 1875 he came to California on a visit to two of his daughters, who had come here with the writer in 1871. He was so well satisfied with what he saw and experienced here, that he settled up his affairs in Illinois as soon as he could, and came with his wife and two children to Sacramento. To his great grief and disappointment, however, his daughter Sarah, a school teacher, with whom he had arranged to live, had died of typhoid fever and had been buried only a few days before he arrived. This was a sad bereavement, and broke up his calculations. Not long after this his (third) wife died. Bro. Innes was married three times. His second wife gave him 3 sons and 2 daughters. His last one a son and daughter. Two oldest sons live in Illinois, and 2 sons and 2 daughters in California.

Bro. Innes died firm in the faith, though of late years he associated mainly with the Christadelphians, he did not subscribe to all their doctrines. He considered that what was preached by the apostles as gospel, is only necessary to be believed prior to immersion; and that many things which some set forth as essential, were not preached to the world by the apostles, but rather taught to the church as items of knowledge to be added to the faith of the believer.

Bro. Innes was completely helpless from the time he was struck down. His left side was paralyzed, and he laid for 18 days in a semi-comatose state, with only a few moments of consciousness at intervals, in which he could recognize his friends, or say a few rational words. Even in his delirium the things of the faith seemed to be the leading thought of his mind. At one time when his daughter wished to give him a little food, she asked him if he could [illegible] to take it, he said, "I had rather wake up in the kingdom of God where there will be no sickness, pain, or death. Oh," said he, "it is grand to stand on the threshold of eternity, and view the time when the glory of the Lord shall fill the earth," or words to that effect, as nearly as they could be gathered.

He was brought to Sacramento for interment, as his wish had always been to be buried by the side of his wife and daughter. Prior to removal from residence in San Francisco, Bro. Clarke spoke appropriate words to relatives and friends; and the writer to all gathered in the undertaker's rooms in Sacramento, and at the grave in the cemetery. It is hoped that some who heard the word of the faith and hope in which our brother died, as set forth on those occasions, may believe the Gospel and be saved.

Leila B. (Cailiat) Warner died at Argos, Ind., Jan. 4, 1893. Age 35 years 1 month and 27 days.

Sister Warner united with the Church of God, Jan. 19, 1877. Was baptized by Brother Hugh Barnhill Jan. 19, 1877. Was married to Henry W. Warner, from Mass., April 30, 1884. They moved to Massachusetts where they resided till three months before her death. They moved to Argos, Ind., on account of her health. She had been much improved, until three weeks before her death. She leaves a kind husband, two children, a father and a mother, one brother, and five sisters, to mourn her death, but not without hope, as she expressed a few days before, that she had her prayer said, and that she was ready to die. We sorrow not as those that have no hope. For we believe that Jesus died and rose again, and at his coming will God bring with him those that are his. Words of comfort were spoken by Brother N. H. Geiselman and Rev. Beal of the M. E. Church. (Mr. Warner's people belonging to the M. E. Church.) She was taken east for burial, there to rest to await the trump of God. We hope to meet our dear Sister in the sweet by and by.

Evangelist Fund for Kansas.

I see in The Restitution, that a brother in western Kansas wants to start an "Evangelistic Fund" for Kansas. I heartily sanction the move. There is a brother here who says he will give $25.00. A poor brother. Now if he can do so much with but small means, what of those that have more.

I will give $40.00, and suggest that Brother S. C. Oliver take the field when there is a fund sufficient.

We must get into working order. I want to hear from other brethren of Kansas. We could have a treasurer and other officers. Let us hear from all through The Restitution soon. Yours in love,

E. F. Randolph.

P. S. The Restitution of Jan. 21st at hand. I have read Brother Wagoner's article, "The Macedonian Cry." I think his suggestion a good one. So many calls for the Word of life to be preached, and none to respond, or cannot on account of the necessary means. I have read of several in the last year that have died desiring baptism. O, what a terrible thought. What a responsibility upon us, to hear these calls and give no help to them. Let us awake to a sense of duty. To this "Contingent Fund" the writer subscribes $5.00.

E. F. R.

Prayer is "the soul's sincere desire" that is strong enough to continue unabated. After visiting Rome, and when speaking on the subject of prayer and urging that we should be importunate, Mr. Spurgeon remarked, "During my recent visit, when in the hotel, I desired the attendance of the waiter; observing the button to be pressed, I applied my thumb as instructed, but no waiter appeared. I repeated the experiment several times with no better success. Presently another visitor entered, and hearing my desire, asked if I had rung the bell. I told him I had without success. 'Ah' said he, you do not understand; I have been here before,' and placing his thumb upon the button, he kept it there until the waiter appeared. Brethren, that is how we must pray: keep up a continuous application until the answer arrives.

[illegible]

Trusting Jesus, That is All.

Simply trusting every day;
Trusting, through a stormy way;
Even when my faith is small,
Trusting Jesus, that is all.

Brightly doth his Spirit shine
Into this poor heart of mine;
While he leads I cannot fall,—
Trusting Jesus, that is all.

Singing, if my way is clear;
Praying, if the path is drear;
If in danger, for him call,
Trusting Jesus, that is all.

Trusting as the moments fly,
Trusting as the days go by,
Trusting him, whate'er befall,
Trusting Jesus, that is all.

The Continuity of Prophecy.

The great chains of prophecy stretch on from some event marking their beginning until they terminate at the coming of the Lord, and the establishment of his kingdom. The great metalic image of Nebuchadnezzar spans the whole period of Gentile times commencing with the golden head or Babylon, as represented by the then reigning king, and reaching down to the time when God's kingdom, as symbolized by the stone cut out of the mountain without hands, smites the image upon the feet and breaks it in pieces. The image, by its four great sections of gold, silver, brass and pure iron, symbolizes four great kingdoms succeeding one another in the order of time: Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece and Rome. The first continued about 70 years, the second 207 years, the third 300 years when it was conquered by the Roman or fourth kingdom. The whole period of these great monarchies are represented as without a break and continuous. There are no gaps or chasms unspanned. The reader will observe that the feet and legs, in the section representing the fourth kingdom (Rome) are composed of iron and clay, the first, as we are informed in the explanation of Daniel, denoting strength, and the second brittleness. This last condition of the kingdom, as symbolized in the image, extends to the time when God's kingdom destroys and takes the place of all earthly kingdoms. So we see that in the entire field of vision there is no period of time but what is covered by the image; and this translated into history reads thus, Babylon extended to Medo-Persia, and this to Greece and the latter to Rome, and Rome in its iron strength to the period of its brittleness caused by the incursions of the northern hordes under Alaric, Attila, Genseric and Odoacer in succession as conquerors; and this last extends to the kingdom of Christ.

Turning to the 7th chapter of Dan., we find portrayed another vision embracing an entirely different set of symbols from those of Nebuchadnezzar's dream. Four great beasts appear on the scene and play their parts before the eyes of the prophet: a lion, a bear, a leopard, and a beast without name "dreadful" and "terrible." These represent the same four great kingdoms as represented by the metalic image: Babylon, Medo Persia, Greece and Rome. This vision dates from the reign of Belshazzar 47 years later than the former vision. The image is lifeless and inactive while the symbols of this vision of the 7th chapter are living and active agents.

Connected with the fourth beast is another class of symbols, ten horns denoting the division of Rome into ten inferior kingdoms, and a "little horn that comes up among these ten, before whom three of the ten are plucked up by the roots. The four beasts and the horns cover the whole time of the vision reaching from Belshazzar down to the time when the Ancient of days sits at the inauguration of the Millennial reign. Here as in the former vision is an uninterrupted and unbroken chain of prophecy, and translated into historical facts must be a chain with no links left out as the "futurist" would have us believe. Or to state the case plainly, leave out a period in the history of these world-kingdoms exceeding in length more than half of the time covered by the vision. This period left out by the "futurist" falls in the time allotted by inspiration to the fourth or Roman kingdom. Is there any need of this? Is there any principle in the prophecy that demands this severing of the chain, this break in the sequence of symbolization, this silence in the voice of the prophet? Where is the precedent in plainly fulfilled prophecy on which to base such a rule? Up to the time when Rome is represented as being strong as iron, which condition all will agree comes down this side of the first advent two or three hundred years, it is not supposed that there are any periods unspanned by the symbols: then I ask is it reasonable to suppose that there is a long interval of more than twelve centuries this side of that time across which prophecy throws no rays of light and foreshadows nothing? that this extended period is a perfect blank as far as these visions are concerned? This to me seems impossible from the very nature of the symbols, and from the interpretation given by the Spirit through Daniel. Each conquering or victorious kingdom immediately succeeded the conquered kingdom, and so the brittle state of the fourth follows closely that represented by pure iron, and in the second vision the division into ten kingdoms comes right after the condition of unity and strength.

The Futurist is obliged to admit that Rome was weakened or made brittle, as denoted by the clay in the feet and toes of the image, for the facts of history show that this fourth kingdom did not retain the marvelous strength it possessed in the days of the Cesars "when from the Euphrates to the Atlantic, from the shores of Britain, and the borders of the German forests, to the sands of the African Desert, the whole Western world was consolidated into one great commonwealth, united by the bonds of law and government."

Again, the Futurist is obliged also to admit that Rome was divided into several independent kingdoms and that it is still in this divided condition. This he must admit on the testimony of history. But he denies that this division was foreshadowed by the ten horns, and denies this on the supposition that Rome was never divided into exactly ten kingdoms, and bases the supposition on the fact that Protestant writers on this prophecy are not agreed as to the list of names comprising the ten kingdoms. I will state here that as far as my knowledge goes this disagreement is only on a small part of the list. This we might expect from students threading their difficult way through the long dark avenues of history. But who says Rome was divided into ten kingdoms? Do you reply only Protestant writers? and they are prejudiced by a theory, and that this theory which they wish to establish is that the little horn of Dan. vii. 8 is the Papal hierarchy. But others than Protestant writers have given a list of the ten kingdoms. Machiavelli, a Catholic by religious profession, but in fact a skeptic, and who of course wrote without any reference to prophetic views of any kind—Futurist or Historic—and is therefore an independent witness, gives a list of these kingdoms. Gibbon the infidel historian, author of "The Decline and Fall of Rome," informs us that Rome was divided into ten kingdoms. Ribera, a Spanish Jesuit, it seems originated the Futurist theory in 1580. According to Pareus he made the ten horns to be ten kings that shall be in the world at the coming of a future antichrist. The purpose of Ribera's exposition was to lift the burden of the Apocalyptic prophecy from the neck of the Papacy and to transfer it to some future antichrist. He wrote about 60 years after the commencement of the Reformation, and saw what a powerful weapon the Apocalypse had put into the hands of the Reformers with which to fight the Papacy, and so, sought to thrust in his imaginary antichrist between the Pope and the blow. Unfortunately this theory has been adopted and propagated though under a new form by the two Maitlands, Dr. Tod, Dr. (afterwards cardinal) Newman, Molyneux, Mr. Burgh, and Mr. Govett. Four of these had strong sympathies with the Romanizing party in the Church of England, and perhaps, some of them were Catholics in disguise, a fact that has lately come to light touching many who minister at the altar of the English Church.

THE TEN KINGDOMS.

I ask the Futurist this question: How do you know that Rome was not divided into ten kingdoms, seeing that you are obliged, on the testimony of history, to admit that it was divided? Impartial witnesses testify that it was divided into ten kingdoms. Why contradict this testimony? It is undoubtedly true that at one time there were ten. They sometimes fell to seven, and at other times rose to thirteen. It was quite natural that the number should vary at different times as the territory of Western Rome was mapped and remapped by the hand of revolution. The fact of variation is in the prophecy. The little horn plucks up three of the ten leaving seven; and yet, subsequent to this date, they are called ten and according to the historic theory hundreds of years elapsed between the plucking up of the three horns and the judgment of the motherchurch, when as the executors of God's will they are styled the ten horns and represented as hating her, and making her desolate, and naked, and eating her flesh and burning her with fire. Rev. xvii. 16. These horns as agents perform two opposite agencies.

They first give their power and strength unto the beast which the woman rides and controls, and subsequently they destroy* the woman. There is a very close and intimate relation between the woman and the beast that will carry her. So, whatever is done to the beast is done to her. The pertinent questions now are: Does the history of the past and present furnish the facts of the fulfilment of the prophecy? Has there existed for centuries a church whose character and actions and relations fittingly entitle her to the names and description given her by the Revelator? Mystery, Babylon the Great, and Abominations of the earth. Are these appropriate to the Papal church? Has she been made drunk with the blood of the saints and of the martyrs of Jesus? Did she ride and control, as the horseman his horse, the beast or civil power? Where is the man acquainted with the history of the middle ages, who will say, no. I might go on asking questions concerning this church and the echo would come from the prophetic page, Yes, yes, in response. Admitted that this church has existed so long, and been worthy of the names ascribed to her, and been guilty of the sins and crimes charged to her, then may it not be true that the ten horns (kingdoms) helped to make her what she has been an domineering power?

Is it not true that God has passed sentence on her, and that the ten horns have been for years executing this sentence? If to exalt her it was necessary for the ten kingdoms to yield to her claims and make grants of political power, remove obstacles in the way of her assumption of headships over all churches, and to make it possible for her to acquire and hold as a church untaxable property amounting to millions upon millions of dollars, then is it not necessary for the ten kingdoms to do the very opposite of this and strip her of her political power and all her temporal possessions in carrying out God's will and executing the sentence upon her? All this has been and is being done. With this view (the historic) we find in the pages of Daniel and the Revelator continuous chains of prophecy; the one stretching hir from his own time, link after link down to the coming of the Son of Man; the other taking up the chain from his standpoint of time and in harmony with the principle of a progressive revelation extending them to the same termination; adding some new symbols to make the prophecy fuller and plainer to us who live in the time of the end.

A Letter to a Friend. A new edition of this popular work has been printed. It is not necessary to say a word about this work to the older readers, but to the new ones we say the subject treated of is the "Covenants of Promise, and their connection with the One Hope, One Faith, and One Baptism." It was written some years ago by the late Mrs O. C. Woodruff, and it is truly "A Letter to a Friend." Many editions have been printed and distributed until this little 32 page tract is acknowledged as the most effective missionary that can be handed out. Price 10 cts. each. This is a compilation of the public utterances and writings of the author while engaged as a minister in England. It is divided into some thirty-one lectures and an addition of about fifty pages of "things that have struck me in daily Bible readings," being comments on particular texts that have called for thought while reading. This book is published by the author at Toronto, Canada, but may be ordered from Bro. J. O. Woodruff, of Elizabeth, N. J., or from this office. Price $1.25.

"A Discourse on Foundation Work, considered physically, morally and religiously," is the title of a 32 page tract, written by R. McLauchlan of Cleveland, Ohio. The author has supplied us with a large quantity of these pamphlets, which we will be pleased to mail to all who desire them, at 5 cents each. The usual price of tracts this size is 10 cents. In this case the desire of the Author is to secure a wide circulation for these works and to do good, hence the price is put at the cost of the postage and handling them. No better opportunity can be given to secure good solid reading to hand to the uninstructed. Don't let these works remain long on our shelves, but send them out on their mission of love.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN.

VOL. XLII. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, FEBRUARY 22, 1893. NO. 8.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

The New Covenant. No. 3.

THE RELATION OF THE LAW TO THE COVENANT.

The old covenant was an agreement between Jehovah and Israel. He, on his part promised, if they would obey his voice indeed and keep his "covenant," that he would make them a peculiar treasure to him above all people, a kingdom of priests, a holy nation. They on their part, promised to obey his voice, and keep his "covenant."

Afterward in an audible "voice" he gave them his ten commandments "(ten words)" which Moses in his rehearsal declared to be his "covenant." Deut. iv. 13. After this, when the people did not want to hear his "voice" any more, he gave them "judgments" through Moses, which accepting they were erected into "a commonwealth or polity." Here is the origin of the "Commonwealth of Israel." Eph. ii. 12. These "judgments" are recorded in Ex. xxi., xxii., xxiii.

The ten commandments may be regarded as a "bill of rights," fundamental principles by which the Kingdom was to be governed. Four of those commandments embody Jehovah's claims, the Deliverer of that people, the God of their fathers, the Creator of the heavens and the earth. Six of them protect the rights of the people in their relations to each other. So the rights of the King and the rights of his subjects are alike protected by this royal "covenant."

It was reasonable that the children of Israel should keep this fundamental law. Their failing to keep it did not change one of its principles. The nullifying of the agreement between the parties did not set aside the ten commandments. Because they were not based upon the agreement, but were based upon the rights of the King eternal, immortal, invisible, and upon the rights of the intelligent creatures under his government.

In the new covenant he writes his law in the hearts of his people. Formerly he wrote the ten commandments on two tables of stone. Writing the law in the heart does not abolish the law absolutely. He did not say that he would write a new law in the heart. Had he said that that would have been proof that the ten commandments would be abolished. The law called "judgments" recorded in Ex. xxi., xxii., xxiii. chapters, being the civil law of the kingdom, would of course be made void with the abolition the covenant or agreement between the parties. The Levitical law was given after the covenant was ratified, and added because of transgressions; its object being to show the offending subjects how to obtain forgiveness of offences; or in other words, to show how reconciliation between the King and his offending subjects was to be brought about. The sacrifices under that covenant were typical of the sacrifice of Christ; and consequently would have no efficacy after Christ died upon the cross, and was raised from among the dead, and entered into the most holy place, heaven itself.

The tables of the covenant were placed in the ark which was made to receive them; and that ark was placed in the apartment of the tabernacle called the "holy of holies." Aron's rod that budded, and the pot of manna were also placed in the ark, showing that they were related in some way to the ten commandments. Heb. ix. 4. Aaron's rod that budded was a type of the Christ in his priestly office. Though he was laid away in the grave among the dead princes of Israel, he "budded" into life, and was taken up into the most holy place at the right hand of Jehovah. The manna laid up before the Lord was a type of the Christ as the "true bread" that gives life to the world. [illegible] is the "hidden manna." Rev. ii. 1[illegible] John vi. 44-51.

When [illegible] high-priest, on the great day of atonement, went into the holy of holies, he sprinkled blood of the sin offering upon the mercy seat, the covering of the ark, and before the mercy seat. Lev. xvi. 14-19. Now as the law of ten commandments was in the ark underneath that mercy seat, the sprinkling of the blood upon it signified that the transgressions of that law were expiated by the blood of sin-offering. The tabernacle was built to be the dwelling place of Jehovah among the children of Israel. Ex. xxv. 8. And it was made after the pattern of his tabernacle in heaven. Ex. xxv. 9-40; Heb. viii. 2-5. The glory of God was manifested over the ark between the cherubim. Ex. vii. 50; 1 Sam. iv. 4; 2 Sam. ii. 2. Remember that Christ, after his resurrection, entered heaven itself, to appear in the presence of God for us. He is there as our representative, to intercede for us, that on account of the shedding of his blood, our sins may be blotted out. "Sin is the transgression of the law." John iii. 4.

What law have we transgressed? We know what law Israel transgressed. It was the law written on the tables of stone, and deposited in the ark. The death of Christ did not abolish the law. The penalty of the transgression of the law was death.

Christ suffered the penalty of the law on our behalf. Suffering the penalty did not abolish the law, but "magnified it and made it honorable." Isa. xl. 21. If God's plan had been to abolish the law there would have been no need for Christ to die for sin: there would have been no need for any one to die for sin: for the abolition of a law is the abolition of its penalty.

"Sin is not imputed when there is no law. Rom. iv. 15; v. 16. Therefore if God abolished the law he did not impute sin after that. Then of course after setting aside the law he ceased to forgive sins. But after the resurrection of Jesus he sent out his apostles to preach repentance and remission of sins in his name among all nations, "beginning at Jerusalem." Luke xxiv. 46, 47. He did not send his apostles to promulgate a new law to the nations. Had he done that he would have been under the necessity of waiting till the people transgressed the new law before inviting them to receive remission of sins through his name. On the day of Pentecost, under the first discourse delivered under the great commission, the Jews were convicted of sin; not because they had transgressed a new law not yet published, but because they had transgressed the law that had been in existence for ages, and with which they were well acquainted. When it was proved that Jesus whom they had caused to be crucified, was the Messiah, it was proved that they were murderers. They felt the force of Peter's words, and enquired what they should do. They were informed that they could obtain remission of sins by repenting, accepting Jesus as the Messiah, and being baptized into his name. Acts iii. 38.

Paul makes the matter plain in his letter to the Romans. iii. 14-20. He says, "Now we know that what things soever the law says it says to them who are under the law: that every mouth may be stopped and all the world may become guilty before God. Therefore by the deeds of the law no flesh shall be justified in his sight; for by the law is the knowledge of sin." The Jews could not be under an abolished law; nor could they have a knowledge of sin by an abrogated law. In the seventh chapter seventh verse he says: "I had not know sin, but by the law, for I had not known lust except the law had said: "Thou shalt not covet;" quoting from the tenth commandment of the decalogue. So we know what law the apostle had in his mind when he said: "What the law says it says to them who are under the law."

It is plain then that the confirmation of the new covenant by the death of Christ, "the covenanted victim," did not annul the law of ten commandments. Why was the covenant (agreement) between God and Israel set aside? Because the people failed to bring forth the fruits of righteousness. Why did they fail? Because the law was not right? No. Because they were not right; were "evil," "corrupt." The tree was corrupt, and the ax was laid at the root of the tree. Matt. iii. 10. What did God propose to do? Change his law to save the nation? No. He proposed to change the people; to make them righteous by writing his law in their hearts. To change their law and give them an easier one would be to compromise with the people and virtually to admit that the law was not what it ought to be. This the unchangeable, righteous King would not do.

Jesus was born under the law. Gal. iv. 4. He was born under the covenant made between God and Israel at Sinai. That covenant was not abolished yet. He kept the law. The law could not convict him of sin. But he was the Son of God, and as such had ability to keep the flesh in subjection. Had Jesus transgressed God's law it would have condemned him as a sinner. His blood even though it had been shed would have been the blood of a sinner. It would have had no cleansing power in it. It could not have been accepted as a covering for the sins of his brethren; and he, failing to obtain a right to the inheritance himself could not have conferred a title upon others. The new covenant would not have been brought into force. But he was righteous. Though born under the old covenant, he was begotten by the spirit, the child of promise, the antitypical Isaac, a son of the new covenant, the first-born son. It was his delight to do the will of God: yea, the law of God was in his heart. Ps. xl. 7, 8; Heb. x, 5, 6, 7. None of his steps did slide, that is, he did not slip into transgression. Ps. xxxvii. 31. In Jesus, the Anointed, God initiated the fulfillment of his new covenant promise made to Israel through Jeremiah. xxxi. 31-34. He was the first fruit of the spirit. He, the captain of our salvation, was made perfect through sufferings. Heb. ii. 10; 1 Pet. ii. 21-24. His sufferings were not altogether phisical. His flesh was sin's flesh and it had to be crucified as to its desires and emotions, before his literal crucifixion could be of any account. Paul's reasoning in Rom. vii. 14-23, is very instructive on this point. He says, "I find a law, that when I would do good, evil is present with me. For I delight in the law of God after the inward man: But I see another law in my members warring against the law of my mind."

In the eighth chapter he says: "The minding of the flesh is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." There are two laws then, the law of God, which is the law of the spirit: and the law of the flesh. These are in opposition to each other. The law of God says, "Thou shalt not." The law of the flesh answers back, I will. When the flesh is crucified, the "I will" is taken out of it; and the response of the new creature to the Spirit's "Thou shalt not" is "I will not:" and the will of the creature is in harmony with the will of the Creator; the will of the creature being sanctified by the will of the Creator. Heb. x. 10. Jesus obtained the victory over the flesh, and then yielded up his life a ransom to deliver his brethren. Their sins are covered by his blood, the blood of the Righteous One. His spirit is given to them that they may crucify the flesh, destroy the law in their members, and be like him. Then his intercessory prayer will be answered. That they all may be one: as thou Father art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us. John xvii. 21. Then they will no longer need a law of commandments saying "Thou shalt not." The new covenant will be complete. More if the Lord will.

J. W. NILES.

Pine Woods Bible Class. No. 40.

Leader. Dear Class, praise the Lord for his manifold goodness to us! Praise him for the light of life! Please sing hymn No. 34.

"Our tongues were made to bless the Lord,
And not speak ill of men;
When other's give a railing word,
We must not rail again."

In THE RESTITUTION of Feb. 1st, Brother Stewart propounds the following question for us to answer: "Is the Man of sin and the Antichrist the same personage?" We will answer the question to the best of our ability. We have so far answered several questions for Brother Stewart but as yet have not heard whether he has been benefited or not by our answers. We would like to hear from you Bro. Stewart.

What do you think of the question Bro. Elias?

Elias. I think the Anti-christ and the Man of Sin are identical. I will give a few proof texts from the Diaglott. See 1 John ii. 18. "Children! it is the Last Hour; and as you heard that the Antichrist is coming even now many have become antichrists." From this text we learn that at that time many antichrists were in existence, but to distinguish them from the personal antichrist, he affirms that "the antichrist is coming."

Leader. Arlos, how will we know him when he comes?

Arlos. You will notice that the phrase: "the antichrist," describes a person, a single individual. It would be inappropriate to apply such language to a system, or even to a collection of popes. It would be contrary to a correct use of language to style a succession of popes —"the antichrist." A personal pronoun in the singular number cannot be applied to a plurality of persons. You must all see that.

Leader. Brother Albert have we not something more definite still?

Albert. We have. I will quote verse 22: "Who is the liar, but he who denies that Jesus is the Anointed One? This is the antichrist, he who denies the Father and the Son." We have here the definite adjective "the" and the personal pronoun "he" applied to the word "antichrist" By no proper use of language can this be applied to a numerous body of popes.

Leader. But Lucy, cannot we describe the Antichrist in such a definite way that we may surely know him when he appears?

Lucy. Certainly. That description is found in the verse just quoted: "This is the antichrist, he who denies the Father and the Son," This language describes some particular person whose distinguishing feature will be the denial of the "Father and the Son." As before observed this language cannot be applied to a numerous body of popes, and if it could, the distinguishing feature of denying "the Father and Son," cannot be applied to popery. As a system, popery, professes to reverence "the Father and the Son," and commands that worship be paid to them, although it is an ignorant worship. But the Antichrist, or Man of Sin will not reverence either of them, but will blaspheme God, and speak hard words against the Most High.

Leader. Lud, in what sense does the "Man of Sin," and the "Antichrist" differ?

Lud. They dont differ at all, both blaspheme and deny God, in fact these phrases represent the same persons. See 2 Thess. ii. 3-4: "Let no one delude you by any means, because the apostasy must must come first and then must be revealed that man of sin, that son of destruction." He is here called a "man" and a "son." What think you? Would it be correct to call a body of popes a "man" or a "son?" Certainly not. Is it not an unnatural and improper use of language?

Leader. But wont the Man of Sin command that reverence be paid to God as much as popery does? How is it Carrie?

Carrie. Oh, no! Popery has an ignorant form of the worship of God, but the "Man of Sin," will exalt himself above all divinity. If he exalts himself above God, he certainly cannot command the worship of any other god but himself. And furthermore, he will seat himself in the Temple of God, and show that he himself is God. This you will learn by reading verse 4. Popery has made many blasphemous pretentions, but she has never yet seated herself in God's temple and exalted herself above the Supreme God, although a recent writer has said, "that the Roman pontiff has stepped into the church —the temple of the living God— and has taken his throne-seat." May the Lord deliver us if the Roman Catholic Church is "the church—the temple of the living God!" It wont do at all to call the Church of Rome "the church," or "the temple of the living God" either, in order to show that a succession of popes fills the prediction of "the man of sin" sitting in the temple. It is too much for me to believe that the Catholic Church is either the Church, or God's temple either, in order to show that the Roman Pontiffs are the antichrist, seated in God's temple exalted even above God himself.

This same writer says, speaking of the number 666, "John, the revelator, says this number is the mark of the beast, the church took it and became the Roman Church." See Rev. xiii. 17, and you will find it reads as follows: "the name of the beast, or the number of his name." The little word "or" changes the assertion that the above number is the mark, it recognizes the "mark" and "number" as being distinct, and not the same thing.

Leader. We will have to adjourn now, but will resume this investigation at another time.

Brother L. C. Conner's Questions.

1. When did the "tribulation" mentioned Matt. xxiv. 29, cease? and what is the force of the word "immediately" as used in that verse?

Fleetwood, after giving a historical summary of the terrible sufferings of the Jews, extending through more than sixteen weary centuries, sufferings that beggar description and move the heart to pity, says, in conclusion, "Though we have but little to say about the Jews during the eighteenth century yet that little, we hope, will be more agreeable to our readers than the foregoing details of murder and robbery. The condition of the Jews began everywhere to improve. During the reign of Queen Anne, the Jews began to be viewed as human beings in England....In A. D. 1753 a bill was passed in the time of George II for the naturalization of the Jews." The dark and doleful night of their unparalleled sufferings was ended, and the morning light had come. The nations, everywhere, were taking steps to ameliorate their condition, and to consider them human beings, and to exalt them to an equality with mankind. The great tribulation ceased with the first half of the eighteenth century, and much was done in the next intervening thirty years to better their condition.

2. What is the force of the word "immediately" as used in that verse? This word and the word "after" which it qualifies are quite indefinite as terms denoting time. Viewing the great tribulation as extending through more than sixteen centuries, the series of prophetic events, with the darkening of the sun as marking its beginning, was soon enough after the tribulation to justify the latitude of meaning I and others attach to "immediately after." The objector may object, but he has nothing available as proof to make good his objection. If the tribulation was on the scale of seven years then the events named as coming immediately after would have to be understood as proportionately near the termination of the tribulation—and I may say very near. The "Futurist" is obliged to confine the time to very narrow limits.

2. Are not the events mentioned in the 29th, 30th and 31st verses in very close connection, in point of time, in their fulfillment?

There is nothing in the wording of the prophecy to show how close together these were to be in their fulfillment—nothing to prove that these events were to transpire in a shorter space of time than that intervening between 1780 and the date of the Lord's coming, though this latter event may yet be several years into the future. To say that the time ought to be shorter or to try to fix its limits is to turn prophet.

3. Is not the "tribulation" of Matt. xxiv. 29, the same as that expressed in Luke xxi. 24 in these words, "And they (the Jews) shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations, and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled?"

This passage in Luke does not mention the tribulation, but the treading down of Jerusalem. There is nothing in the prophecy that indicates, to my mind, that the great tribulation was to be co-extensive, in point of time, with the desolation of the City by the Gentiles. The latter might, and I will say, did extend beyond the tribulation for Mark says, "But in those days after that tribulation the sun shall be darkened," etc. So the days, and alike the down treading, run beyond the period of the tribulation, and allows a space in which the tokens of the advent may occur, and during which time, and according to the purpose of God, a body of believers might be called out, the burden of whose message should be the coming of the Lord, and its nearness to the door based upon the signs of the times, the terminations of chronological periods and the fulfillment of many great chains of prophecy.

The Jews were led away captive into all nations but their condition among the nations, you will admit, might be so ameliorated that there would be no tribulation connected with it, much less "great tribulation." If the great tribulation had not ceased then there would not have been a Baron Hirsch, the great Rothschilds bankers and other money kings, capable of controlling to an almost indefinite extent the financial interests of the civilized world. It is on account of this lifting of the mighty burden of oppression from the necks of Judah's exiled sons that they have taken rank with the smartest, best educated and most enterprising Saxon peoples, and have pushed their way, on the ground of true merit, moral fitness and intellectual capability into nearly every place and position demanding superior qualifications. Their sufferings in Russia and Poland, and that which is likely to occur almost any moment in Germany are not to be reckoned under the head of the "great tribulation," called by Mark "that tribulation." To look to the down treading of Jerusalem by Gentile feet for the signs mentioned in Matt. xxiv. 29; Mark xiii. 25; Luke xxi. 25, 26, is to look too late in the prophetic programme. The church at that point of time will have been redeemed. The Gentiles will have another opportunity of besieging and taking the city and carrying into captivity half of its population, at which crisis the Lord Jesus interferes in their behalf. This is a personal intervention. See Zech. xiv.

4. Is it not a fact that, excepting the first century immediately following the destruction of Jerusalem, the "tribulation" has been greater since 1780 than at any period of this dispensation, and if so do we not look for the signs of Matt. xxiv. 29 as yet future?

No my dear brother, it is not a fact. When since 1780 did this people suffer, at any particular period as they had suffered a hundred, yea a thousand times prior to the beginning of the eighteenth century? If they have why is Fleetwood and Millman and other historians silent touching the matter? and why did the first write as I have quoted him? Length of time as well as intensity of suffering comes into the estimation of this great tribulation.

JOHN L. WINCE.

Taking Possession.

When the Lord gave Joshua command to lead the host of Israel into Canaan he said, "Every place the sole of your foot shall tread upon, that have I given you." The extent of their inheritance was measured by their zeal in taking possession of it. The land was there. The iniquity of the people was full. The edict of dispossession had gone forth. From the Mediterranean to the Euphrates, the nations of Canaan, and the vast empire of the Hittites, the forfeited land was there waiting for an occupant, waiting for a righteous people that would keep the truth and serve the Lord.

The Lord did not give Israel the land to hold on speculation. He did not give them a title to it as non-residents, but he gave them all they would take possession of. They had only to walk through the land from one end of it to the other, and claim all there was. Thus Abraham was bidden to "arise and walk through the land, in the length of it and in the breadth of it, for I will give it unto thee."

There is something in this grant to the ancient servants of God which is quite like the Lord's dealings with his people in other days. The measure of our faith is the measure of our possession. The Lord is willing to give all that we are willing to take. If we will yield ourselves to him and consecrate our lives to his service, there is no measure to the blessing which he awaits to bestow. He will do for us exceedingly above all that we ask or think. He will fill us with his own life, his own love, his own power. Even the faculties which he has given us will expand beneath the influence of his spirit. The mental machinery is the same, but it is put in repair, and the power which moves it is new. That which has grown weary and lagged in its course will gain new strength, and in "the exceeding greatness of his power to us ward" we shall find ourselves able to do what we never could have done before, and shall find blessing on us such as we never beforehand experienced.

Let us learn then to take possession of all the Lord has for us. Every spot on which our foot shall tread may be ours if we will follow the lead of the great Captain of our salvation. He will make us more than conquerors through him that hath loved us.—Christian.

BEECHER once said, "Living is death; dying is life." So that the last verse of the 6th chapter of Romans ought to read, or might read: The wages of sin is living, but the gift of God is dying. Well did Isaiah say: "Ye turn things upside down;" chap. xxix. 16. R. V.

THE Revelation of Jesus to John is of no manner of use to those who do not believe the Gospel of the kingdom. It is a message to his servants, and we learn from Paul that his servants are those who obey him; and the obedience he inculcates is the obedience of faith.

THE London Economist says the hostility of the Jews on the continent of Europe is becoming a very serious political phenomenon. To make no reference to Russia with its expulsions on a vast scale, in Austria, Hungary and Germany, there has been a great revival of the anti-Semetic Movement; and in France, where the Jews have been more comfortable since the revolution than in any European country, hostility to them is springing up among all classes, the press becoming more and more savage in its denunciations of them, and holds them responsible for every financial scandal.

PETER enjoins his brethren to be ready always to give an answer to every man that asked them a reason of the hope that was in them. (1 Pet. iii. 15). But is it not equally important to be ready to tell them how they can lay hold of the same hope? Have not Divine instructions been given for that purpose? If we have ourselves done what Peter commanded in Acts ii. 10, and followed the example of the Samaritans Acts viii. 12, and that of the Eunuch (vs. 38, 39), and the example of Paul (Acts xxii. 16) and the Corinthians (Acts xviii. 8), we should be ready to answer the question, "what shall I do to be saved at any moment. ◆

BANK scandals are causing no little stir in the Italian House of Deputies. The precise nature of the corrupt transactions we do not understand; but Signor Tanlongo, the imprisoned governor of the Bank of Rome has made a statement implicating the present and several former prime ministers. Corruption money seems to have been lavishly used, and as the matter leaks out it causes stormy debates; and the determined effort on the part of the ministry to prevent a parliamentary inquiry tends to heighten suspicion and intensify excitement. Everything shows that human governments are rotten to the core; and down, down, down is the tendency; there is no relief from misgovernment till the advent of the righteous King. He who holds the key of truth can calmly wait the certain issue, while those in the dark chafe, and groan under oppressions both real and imaginary. May the Deliverer soon come, we pray.

THE Rev. D. D. Read, D. D., of Hackensack, New Jersey, says Heaven is a Place, and as Maedler has shown that the motion of all stars is around Alcyone, that star must be the center of gravity and a most fitting place for the Eternal City. It may be interesting to know that the earth is said to move about it in an orbit of 20,000,000 of years,—that it shines with a light equal to 12000 of our suns,—and that it takes light 700 years to travel thence to earth. Being asked if Hell was also a Place, he answered, "Well, I don't know; I don't say that I do, but I have material enough collected to warrant me in delivering a series of sermons on the subject, and I may do that when I have finished with Heaven." He will probably find out whether Hell is a place or not after he has arranged his materials and talked awhile.

"WHAT must I do to be saved?" This question of awful import was once asked of men appointed by the very Savior of men to answer such questions. As there has been no change of dispensation since that time the answer holds good yet. It was as follows:—Believe on the Lord Jesus Anointed, and thou shalt be saved." We are not proposing to show what it is to believe on the Lord Jesus Anointed, or who he is, or what his offices, or what it is to be saved, at this time, but merely to show that the Rev. (?) J. C. Ryle has attempted an improvement upon the instructions given the jailer by Paul and Silas. He does not wait to be asked, but volunteers this advice: "If you want to have your soul saved, there is one thing which you must never forget to do, and that is, to pray. Of all the means of grace, prayer is by far the most important." Prayer, with this leader of men, certainly takes the place of the Gospel of Christ, which Paul assures us, is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. In four pages of instruction to those who wish to save their souls he never mentions either faith or Gospel. It is prayer first, last and throughout. Some of his remarks concerning prayer are excellent for saints but worthless for sinners. Brethren of the Household, the Great Head of the Church depends upon you to advertise the law of pardon. Are you doing it? Will you do it? If your are indeed justified by faith and have peace with God, you will!

A DISCOURSE on the words "It doth not yet appear what we shall be," by Dr. John Ker is commenced as follows: "The first step of the soul into another state of being, is a mystery. No doubt it continues conscious, and its conscious existence, in the case of God's children, is most blessed. To depart and be with Christ, is far better. But the existence of the soul separate from the body, and from all material organs, is incomprehensible." "Incomprehensible," and yet there is no doubt about it! Then has God somewhere said it is so, and expects us to believe it because he said so? If so, where? If not, how can we help doubting it? If he has said man's thoughts perish the day his breath leaves him (Ps. cxlvi. 4) do we not doubt his word when we have no doubt of continued consciousness after death? Several things in this short quotation shows the reverend (?) gentleman ill at ease, inspite of his declar*ation of no doubt*. He says "the first step of the soul into another state of being, is a mystery." What other state of being does he allude to? Does he not teach that the soul is immortal naturally? If so, does it not live on and on as an immortal soul? If so, what other state is he talking about? A mystery, is it? It is not a Divine mystery! It is a self-imposed mystery that one ray of divine truth would dispel. He says: "To depart and be with Christ is far better;" but he does not tell us better than what? He says "the existence of the soul separate from the body and all material organs is incomprehensible." Why does he cling to that which is both baseless and incomprehensible?

In the next sentence, this man without doubt shows that he is certain of nothing. Says he: "The place of our future life is obscure." The only reason for this, is, that he does not believe what is revealed concerning it. Would it be obscure if he were to believe Jesus when he says, "Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth?" It was not obscure with him or he would have made no such positive declaration. The author continues, "It may be far away from earth in some central kingdom, the glittering confines of which we can perceive in thick-sown stars, that are the pavement of the land which has its dust of gold. . . . . . It doth not yet appear." Of what use is the Bible to one who does not believe? The proof is before us that it is no revelation to him;—only a book of proverbs.

A Volcano Under Europe.

Telegrams from London tell us that the scramble for gold by all the European powers is regarded as one of the gravest and surest signs that the "coming struggle" is not far off, now. The business world has sad forebodings, and statesmen seem dazed at the prospect. A despatch dated London Feb. 4, says: "Not only do military preparations threaten us with the most terrible war the world has ever seen, with the greatest waste of life and wealth, and a complete break up of the political systems of the continent, but they actually prohibit any new enterprise elsewhere. Nobody can be sure for a week of what may happen, of how the money markets of the world may be thrown into confusion. There is naturally very much uneasiness all over the continent, but throughout the world there is hope that the magnitude of the risks will deter any one from beginning the struggle."

Vain hope! It may postpone, but it will not deter, finally. And the effect of postponement would be more gigantic preparation and a more sanguinary conflict. Ordinary rules do not apply to this case. Money kings may growl, and philanthropists may plead but the crash will come. It is Jehovah's controversy with the nations that is to be settled. His mode of procedure is to smite with madness those whose sin becomes unbearable, so that swift retribution shall overtake them. (Deut. xxviii. 28). And we learn the fate of those who have madness of heart is that "they go to the dead," Eccl. ix. 3.

Yes; the heading of the foreign despatch tells the truth; there is a volcano under Europe, and the signs of a speedy eruption are not wanting. Well for us, is it, if we be numbered with those who are not in darkness that that day of trouble can approach unawares! What an elevation to stand upon is the sure prophetic word! Who can read the words of Jesus in Luke xxi., respecting the failing hearts of men, who see the trouble brewing, and no way of escape, and then read the news from Europe and doubt that our Lord was a true prophet?

As the wheels of time rush us onward we crave no higher privilege, and seek no higher honor than that of urging the faithful in Christ to watchfulness and prayer, and all others to faith, reformation and obedience! Oh, brethren and sisters scattered abroad, never forget that only those who are ready go in.

What the Truth does for Us.

After being taken out of the Gentiles for God's name what does the truth do for us? It constitutes us members of the household of faith, Gal. vi. 10, the household of God, Eph. ii. 19, the house of God, 1 Tim. iii. 15; Heb. x. 21, the church, the Body of Christ, 1 Cor. xii. 27: Eph. iv. 12. And we may learn the reason why they are brought together in groups in every place by the injunctions given in Heb. x. 24–25, and other places. It says; "And let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works, not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is, but exhorting one another, and so much the more as ye see the day approaching." We have seen from the Head of the Body in John xvii. 14, that the world sets against those who receive his word, because they are no longer of it, even as he was not of it. They have to row against wind and tide all the time, and need the sympathy and moral support of each other. It was thus in Old Testament times as well as the New, for we see that, those out of harmony with their environment "spake often one to another, and the Lord hearkened, and heard, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name, and they shall be mine saith the Lord of Hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels: and I will spare them as a man spareth his own son that serveth him."

As we intend to be suggestive rather than exhaustive, this must suffice to show the reason of local Ekklesias so far as personal benefit is concerned, although there is a vast amount of testimony to show that it is for edification, up-building, growth in both knowledge of and favor with God and Christ, the perfecting of the Body.

But what does the truth do for us from a Divine stand-point? It constitutes us the light of the world. "Ye, are the light of the world," were the words addressed to those called out of the world, Matt. v. 14. Not that they possessed luminous power in themselves, but that the truth had so shined into their hearts that they had become reflectors of it. And in 1 Tim. iii. 15, we learn that the church of the living God is a pillar and stay of the Truth; the support, the upholder of the Truth, the defender of the Truth. Collectively the church is the depository of the Truth: while individually, each member is a conserver of the Truth. Did our readers ever consider why, in the purpose of God, so many guards are thrown around the Truth? Why such an earnest contention for the Truth is to be maintained? Why it is so important to hold fast the form of sound words? We suggest that it is because it is the enlightening agent of the Spirit, Psa. cxix. 130, the begetting agent of the Spirit, Jas. i. 18, the separating agent of the Spirit, John xvii. 17, the purifying agent of the Spirit, 1 Pet. i. 22; Acts xv. 9, the saving agent of the Spirit, the veritable power of God unto salvation to all who believe it; Rom. i. 16, is it any wonder, then, it is so sacredly guarded? It is Divinely adapted to save just as it is. When men doctor divine truth they corrupt it, rob it of its saving power, and when robbed of its saving properties it only furthers the formation of human societies, not households of faith—not the Body of the Anointed. Yes, while for benevolent, moral and intellectual purposes these human societies are a boon to the world, for the life beyond, for salvation purposes they have no value, for, although they cherish bright hopes and many of them, they do not hope for what is promised, and therefore, practically, they have no hope.

The remarks made so far will be seen to have a close connection with the words of Jesus in Matt. v. 14. As the custodians of the Truth we must hold it up so as to lumine the minds of others. We must never forget what the apostle says in Rom. viii. 28, "that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are called according to his purpose." If we imagine that we are personally of such importance that we have been called for ourselves alone, let us drop that idea at once. It is not so! He has called us according to an eternal purpose. His ulterior purpose is to fill the earth with his glory, and the good message that has reached us, offers life and glory and authority and power in the age to come, to accomplish his eternal purpose in company with his glorious Son; at the same time binding us to invite others, as others invited us; this latter is the work assigned us in the present life; and we must not forget that it is according to the work of each that rewards will be given. Say, beloved, are our names on the pay roll? Are we working, is the idea? If not, for what shall we be rewarded?

A Divine community is the congregation of God. We cannot fail to see that our Father expects united effort from his adopted children. We owe him a vast debt of love; let us be faithful to our sacred trust. In a little while, if the Lord delay his coming, we will be laid away to await him. Who, then, will contend earnestly for the faith if we do slovenly work now? If we preach a gospel that does not take men out from among the Gentiles, leave them where they feed on chaff instead of wheat, will not their light grow dim and finally go out? And back of all this, what fellowship has light with darkness? "Come out from among them, and be ye separate," is the Spirit's standing order, but it is accompanied with the glorious promise, that if we obey it, God will be to us a Father, and we be to him sons and daughters, 2 Cor. vi. 17. Let us all be careful not to build with wood, hay or stubble. They will not stand fire.

Dear Restitution:

Inclosed find $1.50 for your paper. I don't see how I could do without it, it gives me much joy to read all the letters from the dear brothers and sisters from our faith. We have none of them here, we would be lonely indeed if it was not for the papers we read. Comfort and joy in the precious promise the Lord has left us in believing the truth, and the truth shall make us free. I rejoice in the letter from Brother Rogers; I feel to say, Brother Rogers I could not go and hear them preach in these normal churches, for they would say many things that we don't believe. They believe in a sky heaven, but we cannot find it in the Bible. They deny the resurrection. If we receive our reward or punishment at death there would be no need of a resurrection. I often wonder why it is that we have been church members for so many years and have never seen the truth as we can see it to-day: but I suppose it was not time, but thanks be to God our heavenly Father for revealing the truth to us even in the evening-tide. After reading the Bible all our lives it seems as if the Bible is a new book to us. We are now looking for our blessed Lord and Savior to come down to reign on his father David's throne and to establish his kingdom here on earth. Your Sister in Christ.

Editor Restitution:

Brother Geiselman closed a series of meetings here in Burr Oak, on Sunday night, Jan. 29. He preached 18 sermons. Good interest was manifested throughout. The house was comfortably well filled at each meeting.

One faithful sister come out on the Lord's side—baptism being deferred for a short time. There were several more almost persuaded to accept the Gospel and be saved, but "almost" is not enough—there would have been some "almost" persuaded even if the meeting had continued for several weeks.

We look forward to a time when we can have a little class of workers here in Burr Oak. We have a number here who are in sympathy with the Truth, and only await a more favorable moment—we trust they will not put it off too long.

Brother Geiselman is an earnest worker for the Lord, and is worthy of the support of every lover of the precious truth.

A collection of $6.00 was taken up at the close of the meeting.

We wish to get our faithful ones to working more in unison than they now are—we desire another short series of meetings soon, when we wish to organize a class and have regular meetings here—may the Lord bless our efforts.

Brother John Reese permitted us to hold our meetings in their (Evangelical Assn.) house. Bro. Reese is the Pastor in charge, and a whole-souled Christian worker.

Yours in Christ.

Dear Restitution:

Sorry am I that circumstances have been so hard with me both financially and spiritually.

My subscription expired sometime ago, and I am much obliged for past favors, and the continuation of my paper. Several papers come to us, but none are so welcome as THE RESTITUTION. O, how I would miss its welcome visits, which cheer us on our way from this, I hope to a better world, and wish that some more would have you visit them and others would renew. O, if we would live more after the Spirit of the Lord, instead of the flesh we would do and feel far better.

Glad I am that Brother M. Joblin is a co-worker with you. His articles are more than interesting, they are inspiring, and I am fully persuaded that if we would render unto the Lord the things which are His, of what he enables us to make that he would be much better pleased. Obedience is better than sacrifice. "Our bodies a living sacrifice which is our reasonable service." Rom. xii. 2. Have I given that much? I fear that I am pleasing the flesh instead of the Lord.

I was glad of Brother Joblin's article on "The New Birth." He has the Word and Spirit of the Master for it. I wanted to ask Brother H. to explain what the Lord meant when in speaking to Nicodemus of the movement of the wind, see John, iii. 8. He said, "So is every one that is born of the Spirit." It is the thing born of Spirit that is compared to the wind in its power of locomotion.

See how the Lord after being raised from the dead by the Spirit, was seen of his disciples forty days ere he ascended into heaven. Acts i. 1-8, and his disciples could not tell from whence He came, or where He went, even so shall His disciples be. See Rom. viii. 11; Phil, iii. 21. A very important question is, have we been begotten by the Spirit, or the Word of Truth? Gal. iii. 2; James, i. 18. Are we living after the Spirit, so as to gain life from the dead?

My mind was first enlightened on this subject in the month of Dec. 1878, together with the fall of the first Adam, viz., if he had not sinned, he would not have died, and the earth would not have been cursed. Gen. iii. 22.

So when the second Adam establishes his kingdom on the earth, paradise, with the tree of life, shall be restored, and the obedient ones shall have access to it. Amen! Rom. ii. 7: xxii. 14.

Sister Woodward's article, "God pity the churches," brought to my mind 1 Cor. xv. where Paul says, "which also ye have received, wherein ye are saved if ye keep in memory what I preached unto you unless you have believed in vain."

What is it to believe in vain? Is it not to be hearers of the Word, and not doers? James i. 22-23.

Sister S. R. Wince's article concerning the fallen angels, gave me some new ideas, with Brother J. W. Niles concerning the spirits in prison, and in harmony with Brothers B. Wilson, and M. Joblin. Dan. iii. 25, does not mean Jesus, The Son of God, but a Son of God. R. V. or one of His angels who kept not their first estate, was cursed, being cast down, and reserved unto judgment. Is it not displeasing to God for the heirs of the promise to intermarry with unbelievers? 2 Peter, ii. 4: Jude 6. and a reference carries us to John viii. 44, where Jesus tells the Jews, "Ye are of your father the Devil, and the lust of your father will ye do."

Brother Niles showed that the "Invisible, unrevealed yet declared, world," was all a farce.

Yes, we agree with Brother B. Wilson in regard to the origin of our Savior, The Christ, The Only Begotten Son of God. John iii. 16. In the observance of his supper on the first day of the week, also the formula for baptism. Matt. xxviii. 10.

The Father is greater than the Son, and the Holy Spirit is an attribute of the Father which He dispenses to his children at His will. Jesus was begotten by it, and was anointed with it, and it raised him from the dead, and it was shed forth on the day of Pentecost. Luke i. 35: Acts iv. 27: x. 38: viii. 11; ii. 32. One receives the Spirit now by the hearing of faith. Gal. iii. 2. The words of Jesus are Spirit and Life to the believer. John vi. 63. As a loadstone etc. exerts an influence inexplicable, even so the Father of Light by His Spirit exerts a far greater influence on what, or whomsoever He will.

I have done very little preaching since Brother Hatch was here. I think that possibly I could do better elsewhere.

Sister Kittie C. Muncrief, of Bear, Ark. and I were married the 18th of last May, and our great desire now is to live for Jesus and His Kingdom, and ask the prayers of all God's people to this end.

In last RESTITUTION, Feb. 1, Bro. W. H. Stewart expresses my convictions better than I can, but his question is answered in the same paper by Sister Wince, viz., the Man of Sin, or the head of the false church, is the antichrist.

Enclosed you will find pay for 1893, and 25cts for Brother Joblin's tract, concerning the "Thief on the Cross."

Yours in hope of Israel's King.
KITTIE C. & R. A. HUMPHREYS.

To all the dear Brethren in Christ, Greeting:

Seeing so many letters in our dear paper, THE RESTITUTION, from the loved ones, I want to add a few words of encouragement and admonition.

Let us, dear ones, strive to walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called. Putting on the whole armor of God. The Apostle James says, "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father, is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep your or himself unspotted from the world."

Oh, what a world of meaning in this keeping ourselves unspotted from the world. We must strive to overcome strife, envy, malice, backbiting, hatred, and all foolish talking and jesting, words that we should not, as Children of Light.

Oh, let us put off these foolish things, and strive earnestly and prayerfully to purify ourselves as our Great Example (Christ) was pure.

Dear brethren, let us strive to walk upright and godly lives, showing to the world that we are what we profess to be, followers of the meek and lowly Jesus. Let us love one another more and more, and do good to all men, and especially to the "Household of Faith."

If we do good unto those only that do good unto us what reward have we?

Submitted in love.

E. F. R.

Dear Restitution:

I write this line to tell you Mr. Munk died Jan. 28, 1893, his age was 83 years, 2 months and twelve days. He had Paralysis for seven or eight years. He was buried Thursday the 31st at this place—in our pretty little cemetery to await the coming of the Master.

The minister and choir of the Christian Church at Batavia officiated.

MRS. SARAH MUNK.

Editor Restitution:

We have been anxious to get THE RESTITUTION ever since the death of my esteemed friend, W. G. Moncrief, but could not see our way clearly to gratify the desire of our hearts with the possession of a paper so adapted to our spiritual necessities. Just here I would say, I cannot forbear my eulogy on the dear Old Patriarch, Hiram Munger of Springfield. I fain would say, —live forever, thou Prince among men, and let your light shine to the ends of the earth, and I pray that you may live to receive the answers to your all important questions, and that too, from men who will not shun to own the truths of our God's blessed Book, Brother Joblin's paper on the prayer of the dying thief is superb—superior in my mind to anything I have ever read on that grand theme, the second advent of our dear Lord—I hope it will find its way not only into the homes of our land, but also into the hearts of the millions who are in darkness and have no light. Oh, I do thank the Lord for light.

I enclose $1.00 for THE RESTITUTION for eight months, and remain, Yours in the Blessed Hope.

SAMUEL FREELAND.

Some interesting statements were made before the Oriental Congress at its recent meeting in London, and some remarkable discoveries were reported. The history of Canaan a century before Joshua's conquest has been read on the tablets excavated at Tel el Amarna, Egypt. The daughter of Pharaoh who rescued Moses has been identified as Queen Wakara Hatasu, daughter of Thothmes I. The Chinese language, hitherto of an unknown origin, has been traced to its Babylonish source. Professor Sayce feels sure that the civilization of Babylon antedates that of Egypt even, and that the Egyptians were familiar with Babylonian cuneiform writing in the days of Moses, and used it in their diplomatic correspondence with the Assyrians. A papyrus manuscript of portions of the Old Testament books of Zechariah and Malachi, discovered a few months ago in Egypt and believed to rank with the oldest manuscripts extant of the Septuagint version, was submitted to the congress. The "digging force" in the East was never so numerous and well equipped as now, and the coming year is expected to be one of "unrivaled discoveries."—Zion's Herald.

God's presence is enough for toil and enough for rest. If he journey with us by the way, he will abide with us when night-fall comes; and his companionship will be sufficient for direction on the road, and for solace and safety in the evening camp.—Maclaren.

The Promised Land.

Of all the lovely countries
In the east or in the west,
The glorious Land of Canaan
Is the brightest and the best.
To Abraham 'twas promised
And to his seed, we're told,
To Isaac too, and Jacob,
And it never shall be sold.

Chorus.

Then cheer up, then cheer up,
All ye wanderers here;
Take courage all ye pilgrims,
Ye have no cause to fear;
The promised land is broad enough
For all of us who roam.
Canaan sure is large enough
To give us all a home.

Paul writing to Galatians
Makes mention of the deed,
And by him 'tis asserted
That Jesus is the Seed.
And joint heirs too, with Jesus,
Are these who keep His law;
And from the blessed Gospel
Their faith do not withdraw.

Old Abram was a stranger
In the land to be possessed;
He lived and died a pilgrim,
And went unto his rest.
And Isaac too, and Jacob
The land have not received,
But that they should obtain it
They to the end believed.

This country will be given
When the dead saints do arise,
And together with the living,
Are caught up to the skies,
To meet the Lord in glory,
Who himself will then descend.
With a trumpet loudly sounding,
While angels all attend.

Then Christ will take this kingdom,
His father David's throne,
And together with the chosen
Will rule the world alone.
He'll gather Jacob's children
Who have been scattered long,
He'll bring them to Mount Zion,
With joy and with a song.

And under their own fig-tree
They'll sing their exile o'er,
Planted in their own country
To be pulled down no more.
The remnant of the nations
Shall yield to Jesus' reign.
If they refuse submission,
They'll by fierce plagues be slain.

Crushed then will be the tyrants,
The oppressed will go free,
And all who groan in bondage
Be set at liberty.
Contention, war, and bloodshed,
In all the world shall cease,
The lamb then, and the leopard,
Will all lie down in peace.

Each year will all the nations
To Jerusalem repair,
To worship King Messiah,
And serve Jehovah there.
King Jesus and the chosen,
The kingdom will maintain
Till every foe is conquered,
And death at last is slain.

Holy Anointing Oil.

"Take thou also unto thee, principal spices, of pure myrrh, five hundred shekels, and of sweet cinnamon half so much, * * and of sweet calamus two hundred and fifty shekels. And of cassia five hundred shekels * *, and of oil olive an hin. And thou shalt make it an oil of holy ointment, an ointment compounded after the art of the apothecary: it shall be an holy anointing oil." Ex. xxx. 23-25. And thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel, saying: This shall be an holy anointing oil unto me throughout your generations, * * * neither shall ye make any other like it, after the composition of it: it is holy, and it shall be holy unto you. Whosoever putteth any of it upon a stranger, shall even be cut off from his people."

This shows the determined and unalterable will of God concerning the use of this "holy anointing oil."

The Tabernacle of the congregation, and all pertaining thereto, with the ark of the testimony, and Aaron and his sons with the long line of priests and prophets, and kings that followed were thus consecrated even to the coming of the true Anointed One, the Messiah—Jesus Christ. In view of this anointing in Israel God spake of the nation as "mine anointed, 'saying—"Touch not mine anointed and do my prophets no harm." But of all God's elected or anointed ones, to Jesus only, it is said, "Thou has loved righteousness, and hated iniquity: therefore God even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows." How my soul adores my Savior for this! Herein lies his pre-excellence above all created beings—"Holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, and made higher than the heavens—a name which is above every name."

"Thy throne, O God, is forever and ever: a scepter of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom." He is emphatically "The Lord's Anointed" to the Church. In Him are his people anointed to God. "Now he which establisheth us with you in Christ, and hath anointed us, is God." 2 Cor. i. 21. "But ye have an unction—or anointing—from the Holy One." This anointing is an inward process—"abideth in you" and "teacheth you all things." It is the work of "the spirit of truth"—which, said Jesus, "the Father will send in my name: he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance whatsoever I have said unto you."

Under the law the Spirit was given only to individuals—of Othniel it is recorded "The spirit of the Lord came upon him and he judged Israel and went out to war."

Of Gideon—"But the Spirit of the Lord came upon Gideon and he blew a trumpet: and Abi-ezer was gathered after him."

Of Jeptha—"Then the Spirit of the Lord came upon Jeptha and he passed over * * unto the children of Ammon."

Of Samson—"And the Spirit of the Lord began to move him at times in the camp of Dan."

To Saul, Samuel said, after he had anointed him: "The Spirit of upon the Lord will come upon thee." "And the Spirit of God came upon him and he prophesied."

Of David—"The Spirit of the Lord came upon David from that day forth." From the time of his anointing. But the Spirit of the Lord departed from Saul."

Thus, also, with the prophets. Micah said—"But truly I am full of power by the Spirit of the Lord, and of judgment, and of might, to declare unto Jacob his transgression and to Israel his sin."

"For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spoke, moved by the Holy Ghost." 2 Pet. i. 21.

Of Christ—"who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God" it is written—"for God gave not the Spirit by measure unto him." Heb. ix. 14: John iii. 34. And to the eleven, and to them that were with them, Jesus said. "And, behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you: but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high."—What an admonition to all who go out to do God's work! Luke xxiv. 49. And just before the cloud received him out of their sight he said unto them—"ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence." Acts i. 5. And now it comes—the Pentecostal baptism, and O! may its blessed anointing be upon me while I would speak of this most wonderful event to this world. It is the power for good in my heart; it is the power for good in the church. Jesus knew what his people needed when he said, "I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you." O! adored be the name of Jesus for this abiding Comforter in the "little while" that we shall not see him! Now the enduring power from on high has come. The tongues of fire are upon them. The bud has burst into the flower and many scent its fragrance by hearing them speak in their own tongues the wonderful works of God; "a light to lighten the Gentiles and the glory of thy people Israel" is Jesus now to be presented to the world. "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," is the commission. "And they went forth, preaching every where, the Lord working with them, and confirming the Word with signs following. Amen." Mat. xvi. 20.

In Jesus' name they cast out devils; they speak with new tongues; they take up serpents; deadly draughts are harmless; they lay hands on the sick and they recover; and still greater wonders follow, lands and houses are sold and the prices laid at the apostles' feet; neither said any of them that ought of the things which he possessed was his own! but they had all things common. This, to my mind, does not necessitate "Community" living; but simply that every thing was at disposal for the good of the whole, as it is written, "Neither was there any among them that lacked." for distribution was made unto every man according as he had need." No need now for "festivals," "fairs," "suppers," and "soap-bubble parties," to induce the world to give the needed money to carry on the work of the Church, but consecrated money from consecrated hearts and hands, flowed into the treasury of the Lord; while the covetous who kept back part of the price fell down dead at the apostles' feet and their money rejected as an unclean thing. How all-potent was this Primitive Church! and why? because it was filled with the Holy Ghost—anointed and sealed for God in each individual member and this sealed the whole. It had received, indeed and in truth, that of which the Holy Anointing oil was but the sign—The Holy Ghost. See Acts ii.

And here is the manifestation of its individual impress, "Love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, and goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." An earnest, or pledge of the saint's inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession unto the praise of his glory. Eph. i. 14.

How surpassingly beautiful is this seal over all the princely or queenly jewels of this world's display, and array: from hence comes the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit of great price in God's sight. 1 Pet. iii. 4.

Let the young damsels if they would be truly beautiful and lovely to look upon, both from heaven and among men, seek these new jewels and let them sparkle out in their lives in good works, and they will have a beauty that is "not corruptible" as the following farther illustrates.

A most striking example of the fruit of the Spirit worn upon the face in this seal was Sister Johnson, the wife of Dea. Johnson of the First Baptist Church of Cincinnati. Elder J. B. Cook pastor. Though aged, her face was the very mould of meekness and quietude, a striking proof of the moulding power of mind upon the outward man. It even extended itself to the countenance of her venerable husband, as we then verily believed, and which was proven after other influences surrounded him. As we contrast her meek and quiet face with the faces of many women of her age of an opposite spirit, we are astonished to learn that the contenance is such sure index to the spirit that rules within. Another example of blessed memory—a kindred spirit—was Sister Susan Wade, wife of Dea. Wade of Bone Prairie, Indiana, Elder S. A. Chaplin Evangelist. Her daughter, middle aged woman, once remarked to me—"I never saw my mother angry." What a testimony! Earthly greatness sinks into nothingness beside it!

"He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city." Prov. xvi. 32.

Naught but the indwelling power of the Holy Ghost could have helped this weak woman—contending as she did with a life-long consumption and rearing a large family of sons and daughters, and she so feeble at her marriage that her friends thought she would not live two years; yet, she lived, and did life's work nobly, to a good old age; and saw all her children grown, and most of them come to Christ; beside many grand children. Her face, too, wore the heavenly "seal."

Let me give you a glimpse of the most beautiful ideal that I ever conceived as I was, at early dawn, in contemplation of the fruit of the Spirit of God.

Imagine to yourself the most beautiful matron you ever saw or can conceive of, and then say of her—

She is love.
She is joy.
She is peace.
She is long-suffering.
She is gentleness.
She is goodness.
She is faith.
She is meekness.
She is temperance.
She is without partiality.
She is without hypocrisy.

This is "The king's daughter all glorious within: her clothing is of wrought gold." She is our model. Our high calling is to be like her; yea, more, to be herself—"filled with the Spirit."

Epoch Men.

God has raised up men in different ages of the world—such as Adam, Noah, Abraham, Moses, David, Daniel, Christ, etc., to fulfill certain parts of the great programme of his purposes concerning the earth. Revelation has been progressive. God hath spoken to us in times past in "divers manners," through individuals who were moved by the Holy Spirit, and at different periods of the world's history, progressively as the needs of mankind required. We who are living at this late day have much given to us in having God's Revelation in its fulness, having the experience of all the past to profit, if we are willing to learn the lessons contained.

Let us consider the state of things existing at the time the Prophet Daniel is brought to view, we will find it very interesting, instructing and profitable. Daniel was of Royal lineage, like Elijah, his antecedents not known, who in his early youth was carried captive to Babylon from Jerusalem, together with three other Hebrew youths of rank, Hannaniah, Michael and Azarriah. This occurred in the 4th year of Jehoikim king of Judah about 606 years before Christ. He together with his companions was selected for their personal qualities to reside at the court of Nebuchadnezzar having the Chaldean name of "Beltehnzzar." He was thoroughly instructed in all the learning of the Chaldees. The prophet Ezekiel speaks of him as distinguished for his piety and wisdom. See Ezek. xiv. 14: xxviii. 3.

HIS CONSCIENTIOUSNESS

And firmness of character were fully tested in his bold and positive refusal to receive his supplies from the royal table. This was a remarkable instance of strength of virtue in one who had been removed at so early an age from the salutory influences of home and exposed to the powerful temptations of a luxurious court. On another occasion rather than abandon or conceal his religious principles he exposed himself to the horrors of a cruel death. God was with him and even the lions had no power to injure him. So his enemies fell into the pit of their own creating.
